But if, on the other hand, one owns a famous book and it looks down daily upon him from his shelves, it is sure sooner or later to force itself into his hands. It would be hardly worth while, for instance, to bring home a volume of GRAY'S poems for a week's perusal. Such poems as the "Bard" and the "Progress of Poesy" would be, in many cases, no sooner attempted than they would be thrown aside in disgust, yet there is not a line in that slender volume which is not worth reading, and nearly the whole of it can be read many times. These two poems, faulty as they certainly are, from their allusions to things which everybody ought to know, but which scarcely anybody does know, become, when these allusions are once understood, sources of lively pleasure. BYRON is another author who will be certain to be unread if not possessed. His whole spirit is so entirely unlike that which now pervades society that it is nearly impossible for us to understand his point of view. The notion of a man rushing around the world and making such an outcry and a clamor about his private troubles and the peculiarities of his own soul is, to us, in this practical time, nearly incomprehensible. "Lara," or "Manfred," brought from a circulating library, would be sent back with the comment that BYRON was an artificial, theatrical, and even a dull writer; or that, at any rate, it was quite out of the power of people living nowadays to understand him. But, if this poet stands upon your book-shelves in a dozen decently bound and cleanly printed volumes, he will have a vastly better chance to be read, and, therefore, to be understood. Some accident will awaken your curiosity concerning him, and will bring you into some sort of accord with him. Perhaps you have been reading SCOTT, and the quick and ready gallop of his iambic verse has possession of the ear. It will then be easy to turn to the "Giaour," and the reader cannot fail to mark at once with astonishment the extraordinary force and color of that poem. He will see that, while the fighting of SCOTT'S heroes is like that of charming and honorable lads trained in some mediæval Rugby, the Turk and the Giaour fight like tigers. The clue once gained, the curiosity and sympathy of the reader once excited, no other work of the poet will entirely fail to interest him.

Of course, the libraries of all but the very rich must be limited to a comparatively few books. What these shall be must be determined by the disposition of the reader. But we are sure that a library, no matter how small, must, to be valuable, include the English poets in attractive and intelligible editions. We do not mean that they shall be in calf or morocco, or that they shall be in uniform bindings; for our part we prefer that even the outside of a great book shall possess an individuality of its own. But the volumes, of whatever kind they may be, should be pleasant to the eye and the touch; they should be well indexed, moreover, so that the reader's temper may not be vexed in looking for some favorite verses through such perplexing divisions as "Poems of the Fancy," "Poems of Feeling," "Ethical Poems," &c. Sitting on the morning of some holiday in an arm chair before an ample grate, with a poem which really interests us in hand, we have indeed cause to be glad that we own a few books. With one's own surroundings commodious and agreeable, it is indeed pleasant to look down upon the battles and the loves of other times, and to share their adventures, delights, and sufferings at so small an expense of ease and comfort.

LETTER TO THE EDITOR.

YALE VS. CORNELL.

To the Editor of the New-York Times:

In your issue of the 10th you copy from the Ithaca Journal an article which, in its assumptions of our reasons for refusing to row Cornell, is essentially false. Under "Yale's Reply to Cornell" it says: "It is declared that the Yale Boat Club is heavily in debt, and cannot afford to incur the expense incident to such a race." A similar error has been corrected once before, and to you I would make the same statement that I did on that occasion, namely, that in refusing Cornell's challenge the state of our Treasury was not once considered.

PUBLIC IMPROVEMENTS.

The time has come when it is absolutely necessary that the officials and departments having charge of carrying out our public improvements should act with the greatest caution, and avoid as much as possible placing any further assessments on the already overburdened property-owners. As an instance of how these matters are managed in European cities, it would be well for our officials to learn how the City of Paris carries out its great improvements without levying ruinous assessments on the property.

When the Boulevard de l'Opera was decided upon, 15 well-known citizens of the City of Paris were selected to act as Commissioners, with power to acquire the land necessary for the Boulevard, and some hundreds of feet more on both sides of the proposed avenue.

The property was bought by the city, the owners of it receiving a fair market price; the avenue was then laid out and constructed. After the work was accomplished and the avenue opened to the public, the extra land acquired on both sides of the Boulevard was advertised and sold at public auction, and the price realized for this land covered the cost of the entire purchase of all the land taken, paid also the entire cost of construction, and left a surplus of some million francs over and above all expenses. Thus the City of Paris had acquired title to a fine avenue, an elegant boulevard had been constructed, surrounding property benefited, and not a dollar had been levied on either property-owners or taxpayers.

We would now call the attention of our public officials to a very similar improvement carried out in New-York. We refer to the Broad way widening from Thirty-fourth to Fifty-ninth streets. For this improvement the City paid for acquiring title to a certain number of feet on both sides of Broadway the sum of $4,051,723 60, of which amount $2,400,000 was assessed on the property bounded by Third and Eighth avenues, Tenth and Fifty-ninth streets. If, as in the case of the Boulevard de l'Opera, the City of New-York had purchased enough of land on both sides of Broadway so as to have left after the widening, say, lots of 100 feet in depth, and then sold the property after the work had been accomplished, it would have reaped the benefit which fell to the share of the property-owners on the line of the improvement, and a large amount of money would, in all probability, have been realized by the City. We hope that, under the present administration, the Mayor, Controller, and Commissioner of Public Works will give this subject their earnest consideration.

ALBANY.

A QUIET DAY IN THE HOUSE.

THE SENATE NOT IN SESSION—TWO OR THREE BILLS INTRODUCED—DEBATE ON A BROOKLYN BILL, AND SOMETHING ON POINTS OF ORDER.

ALBANY, Saturday, Feb. 17, 1877.

There was only one branch of the Legislature in session to-day, the Senate having adjourned yesterday until Monday evening. The House also was very thin, and so the day altogether was very quiet. A good deal of business was done, but it was of an uninteresting character. The consideration of Mr. Furdy's resolutions for the appointment of a committee to investigate the condition of insurance corporations, was put over until Monday night, and when the House adjourned it adjourned to that time. Some few bills were introduced. The only incident which interrupted the monotony of the proceedings was a short but warm dispute over a Brooklyn bill for the completion of the Hempstead Reservoir. The debate was interesting as showing how much talk and confusion obscuring the real point at issue will follow from maladroit management of a bill on the floor of the House. The bill was introduced in the first week of the session. It contained a proviso that the work should be done by day's work. When Mayor Schroeder was before the Committee on Cities a few days ago, he explained why this was inserted. The enlargement of the reservoir was in effect simply the digging of a large hole, and it was the intent of the city authorities to send out some hundreds of the unemployed poor who were asking the charity of the city, and put them to work at the digging. But, as the bill had already been in the committee many weeks, and would probably take several more before it passed Assembly and Senate, the season for work would have opened before the bill became a law, and he therefore thought that the work might be done by contract in the usual way. When the bill came up this morning, Mr. Stephenson offered an amendment that the work should be so done, but gave no reason why. Mr. Bradley opposed the amendment, quoting Mayor Schroeder's Message, and using his authority to show why the work should be done by the day. Mr. Stephenson then had the opportunity for Mr. Stephenson to explain why he had offered his amendment, by reciting what Mayor Schroeder really had said, giving the whole truth instead of only half of it, as Bradley had done. Instead of this he simply said that he [Stephenson] thought it was too late to have the work done by the day. Then up rose Mr. Ecclesine, who represents the up-town laborers' district, and made a roaring speech on the rights of the working man, and the duty of the State to support him. Mr. Fish, Chairman of the Cities Committee, did what should have been done at first, explained what Mayor Schroeder had said in regard to the matter. Mr. Marvin, of Kings, followed with a speech in favor of the contract system as opposed to the day's work plan, which was not the point at issue at all; and this brought out Peter Mitchell in a speech on the other side, and in the same vein as Ecclesine's oration. Mr. Alvord made a few vigorous remarks, and then had the bill progressed. In the House, by unanimous consent, the bill was amended by providing that the Common Council should decide in what way the work should be done. This result was reached after a few minutes' quiet conversation among the Brooklyn members, among whom there had been no substantial disagreement on the matter from the first. The whole debate was nothing but the result of awkward management, which gave an opportunity for some gentlemen to trot out the "working man." Some ridiculous mistakes were made on points of order. Mr. Mitchell, who is usually sound on parliamentary law, made the extraordinary assertion that he had the right to send a paper to the Clerk's desk and have it read without the consent of the House. Of course, it would follow from this, that if a member wished to stave off a vote on a bill he could get the floor, make a few remarks, send up a book, and keep the clerks reading for a day or a week, if he chose, and the House could not protect itself. As a matter of fact, the rule is explicit that without the consent of the House a member cannot even read or have read so much as a paragraph. Next Mr. Mitchell asserted his right to, and attempted at the close of his remarks to yield the floor in favor of another member. This is a practice which is common at Washington, but is only in order when the person who yields has a certain time accorded him in which to speak. He may then, if he chooses, give a portion of it to another member, but the right of the one to yield and the other to speak, expires with the limit of time, otherwise three or four members might be able by mutual agreement to talk all the time, and stop business completely. Mr. Ecclesine also put his foot in it in a way not uncommon with new members. When Mr. Alvord had moved to progress the bill, he rose to speak. Murmurs of "not debatable, not debatable," came from those nearest him, and the Chairman informed him he was out of order if he rose to debate the motion. Mr. Ecclesine gazed around the chamber for a moment, and with impressive solemnity said: "Then, Mr. Chairman, I demand the yeas and nays on this motion." A shout of laughter from all parts of the house rewarded him to his seat, and probably to the study or his Blue Book, where he found that as the action of the Committee of the Whole must be subsequently ratified or negatived by the House, a vote by yeas and nays cannot of necessity be taken in committee, since such a vote makes a final end of the question voted upon.

Mr. Cowdin introduced a bill which prevents any corporation doing a fire insurance business in this State to state or represent, in any printed or published document, any funds or assets to be in possession of such corporation not actually possessed by it. Every advertisement of any sort or kind which shall purport to make known the financial standing of any fire insurance company shall make a truthful statement of its assets and resources corresponding to the official statement made by such company under oath. This bill was drawn up at the instance of some of our largest and soundest fire insurance companies, who daily see the papers and periodicals filled with advertisements of rotten concerns, in which the most fraudulent statements are presented of their financial condition.

SECTION 1. No policy of insurance on the life of an individual now in existence, or which may hereafter be effected, shall become forfeited by reason of the non-payment of premium, so long as there shall be to the credit of the assured an amount of unpaid dividends equal to the amount of premium then due on said policy.

The indefatigable Fleeke came up with his usual daily bill, this last production being one relating to the carrying of dangerous weapons, though he entitles it "for the better protection of human life and limb." It provides that if any person be arrested on a charge of disorderly conduct, assault, larceny, burglary, or robbery, and there be found upon such person any felonious weapon, he shall, upon conviction of the offense for which he was arrested and indicted, receive double punishment. The idea is good, but the bill is crudely drawn, and will require much shaping from the Judiciary Committee.

THE WEATHER.

SYNOPSIS AND INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18—1 A. M.—The area of lowest pressure is now near the Bay of Fundy, and brisk north-west winds have prevailed, with partly cloudy weather over the Middle and Eastern States. The highest pressure has moved southward to Texas, and falling barometer and warmer southerly winds prevail thence northward to Manitoba and the upper lakes. Clear weather is now very generally reported from all stations, except in New-York and the Canadian provinces. The rivers generally fell on Saturday, especially at Cincinnati and Boonville. The ice in the Mississippi at Warsaw cleared away without causing damage.

INDICATIONS.

For Sunday in the South Atlantic and Gulf States, Tennessee, and the Ohio Valley, cooler, followed by warmer south and west winds, stationary or falling barometer, partly cloudy or clear weather, except on the Carolina coast, north-east winds and lower temperatures.

For the Upper Mississippi and Lower Missouri Valleys and the upper lake region, falling barometer, warmer south-west winds, and clear weather, followed at western stations by cooler north-west winds and rising barometer.

For the lower lakes, Middle and Eastern States, stationary or rising barometer, cooler north to west winds, partly cloudy or clear weather.

The rivers will continue slowly falling.

KENNER'S FISHY STORY.

HOW HE TRIED TO RAISE MONEY TO BUY GOV. WELLS—HE OMITS TO MENTION ANY CONTRIBUTIONS FROM NEW-YORK.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17.—The Committee on the Powers, Privileges, and Duties of the House this morning examined Duncan S. Kenner, of New-Orleans. He testified that Gov. Wells told an untruth in testifying that he [Kenner] offered him a bribe to cast the vote of Louisiana for Tilden. Mr. Kenner stated, preliminarily, that the interviews between himself and Wells were confidential, and nothing could have induced witness to disregard the obligation of secrecy were it not that Wells had first broken this obligation. Witness then stated that on Nov. 17 or 18 he met Gov. Wells on the street, and said to the latter that he wished to see him at his [witness'] office on the subject of the late election. It was a well-recognized fact that Nicholls had carried the State, but an apprehension was felt by the people of Louisiana that he would not be permitted to take his seat; Wells replied that he was perfectly willing to talk frankly and freely on that subject, and did not wish to lose the good opinion of any of his old friends; witness replied that the anxiety arose from the fact that four years more of misrule and disquiet incidental to a Government that could not be recognized as a legitimate one, would cause the same stagnation in business that had existed for the last few years; he [Wells] ought to look well to the consequences of the steps he might take, that no personal considerations should influence him, but that the feeling of the community toward him ought to be of great weight; Gov. Wells acknowledged the force of this, but said that he was a partisan, and could not break with his party without great personal sacrifice, as he was a poor man; Wells' allusion to his poverty led witness to suppose that he alluded to the loss of his office, and witness asked him what office Gov. Packard could offer him that would compensate him for the hatred of his people; Wells replied that he did not care for office; that he was too old to hold office, and that the tenure of office was too insecure anyhow, but that any compensation he might receive for his course would enable him to retire to his plantation in Rapides Parish; witness said that Kellogg and Packard would offer him [Wells] anything, but Wells replied that this was a big thing, the biggest thing he ever handled; promises would not answer this time, as he was determined to make it tell; Wells admitted that it was a great deal easier to count in Nicholls than Packard; witness urged Wells to name some amount which would compensate him, and said that the gratitude of the people of Louisiana must certainly compensate him for any loss he might experience at the hands of his party; Wells refused to name a sum, saying that he must first consult with some one, and, while being pressed by witness to state with whom he proposed to consult, mentioned Tom Anderson; this was the substance of the first interview; some six or seven days later witness met Wells, Calvert, and Anderson on the steps of the City Hall; Wells drew a bundle of letters from his pocket, assorted them, and handed one to witness, saying, "This is for you;" the letter had no superscription and no signature, and the substance of it was, "I have not heard from you; what does it mean?" witness went down the hotel steps, crossed the street, and went into a drug store, where he asked for a piece of paper, and wrote to Wells, telling him to meet witness in a certain room in the City Hotel; he sent this note to Wells, who was dining at the City Hotel; witness did not know what he did with the note Wells handed him; the meeting took place, and Wells said he doubted whether he could do anything, because Anderson doubted his [Wells'] ability to raise a large enough amount of money; witness asked how much Anderson wanted, and Wells replied half a million; witness said that this was perfectly ridiculous; that he did not want them to do anything wrong; and that if this demand was insisted upon they might as well drop the matter; Wells then said, "wait a few days later they [Wells and another meeting, which was to the same purpose; about Nov. 30 another meeting took place, and Wells asked what witness expected him to do; witness replied that all that was wanted was a fair count of all votes cast; Wells answered that he could not do that; that he must throw out some parishes, but that he could leave enough votes in to elect Nicholls; he said he would do that if witness would place in his hand $200,000 in greenbacks; witness replied that he had not the money; this ended the interview, and he did not see Wells again until after the promulgation of the vote; some four or five days after the promulgation witness met Wells and some other gentlemen at Red River steam-boat landing, and asked Wells whether he was going home; Wells replied that he was going the following week; in taking witness and Wells differed in opinion, and witness expressed his astonishment and regret at Wells' course; Wells turned, and, looking witness full in the face, said, "What could I do? you had no money;" witness said he hoped that Wells had not trusted in any promise from Kellogg or Packard, but had made himself safe, to which Wells replied, "You bet," or words to that effect. Mr. Kenner concluded by saying that this was the last interview he had with Wells, whom he had not seen since that time.

In reply to questions by Mr. Lawrence, Mr. Kenner reiterated the above statement, and stated in addition that he hired the room in the City Hotel in which he and Wells had their interviews, which lasted from 15 minutes to half an hour; he had no personal knowledge of any other person approaching Wells on this subject. Mr. Kenner also stated that he spoke with Dr. Samuel Choppin, John Phelps, Gen. J. L. Brent, Samuel Simpson, A. Q. Kenner, John A. Morris, Dr. Beard, Martin Jordan, Henry Miller, and perhaps some others, on the subject of raising money; he told no one of his interviews with Wells; he himself proposed to give $5,000; Dr. Choppin and Mr. Fields, he thought, agreed to give $2,500 each, but he could not state the amounts the others were willing to give; he stated that he had known Wells for 40 years, and had always been on friendly terms with him; he had none but friendly feelings toward him now, but could hardly say that a man who did what Wells did in regard to counting the vote of Louisiana had the entire confidence; witness was registered as a voter in New-Orleans, but did not vote at the last election, because previous to the same he had gone to his plantation for various reasons; he had in his employ on his three places about 1,000 men, women, and children, of whom about 300 or 400 are voters; he exercised every influence to secure votes for Tilden, or rather, told his people to vote for Nicholls, whose election would enable him to prosper by good lands and less taxes, and would enable him to pay them better wages; he did not threaten to discharge them for his employment if they did not vote for Nicholls.

The examination of the witness was not concluded when the committee, at noon, adjourned until 12 o'clock Monday.

THE MEXICAN TROUBLES.

MATAMORAS, Feb. 17.—Since Gen. Blanco assumed command of the line of the Brazos in behalf of the Government of Gen. Diaz, he has been assiduously engaged in harmonizing the various armed factions existing here, in order to restore tranquillity to the frontier. The civil authorities, national, State, and city, have been reinstated in their respective positions, and several armed parties heretofore impeding commerce on the highway have come in, surrendered their arms, and retired to their homes. To-day Gen. John W. Cortina, with about 1,000 well-armed cavalry, entered this city, and was received with military honors by Gen. Blanco, amid the ringing of bells and popular acclamations. Cortina is preparing to start in a few days for the City of Mexico, where he has been called by Gen. Diaz. The roads to the interior are now opened. The mail and telegraph are being reestablished, and commerce is reviving, with a general feeling of a restoration of peace and order in this section of Mexico.

A CASHIER KILLED BY A WOMAN.

ST. PAUL, Feb. 17.—At Minneapolis, last evening, about 6:30 o'clock, William H. Sidle, Assistant Cashier of the First National Bank of that city, was shot in the head and mortally wounded by a young woman named Kate Noonan. Sidle was a young man highly connected, and the affair caused a great deal of excitement. Miss Noonan claims that Sidle seduced and then deserted her. The shooting occurred on the street in front of the Nicollet Hotel, and was witnessed by several persons. The woman was immediately arrested. She betrays no remorse for the deed. Sidle died soon after 2 o'clock this morning.

THE MAYORALTY OF SYRACUSE.

SYRACUSE, Feb. 17.—James J. Belden, who this morning published a letter declining the Republican nomination for Mayor, was nominated again this afternoon by the Republican Convention and accepted. The Democratic City Convention this afternoon accepted the declination of James S. Crouse, who was nominated for Mayor on Thursday, and placed in nomination John R. Whitlock, who was previously nominated as the citizens' candidate.

WELL ACQUAINTED AT THE JAIL.

A Massachusetts paper says that one David Clifford, of Fall River, who was sentenced to the House of Correction Wednesday morning, stated upon the witness-stand that he had already served 22 terms in that institution. He has a sister now in confinement there, and the sentence of a brother expired Wednesday. At one time himself, his brother, two sisters, and father were confined in jail for various misdemeanors, larceny always being a favorite weakness with the Clifford family.

DEMOCRATIC REPEATERS IN OHIO.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 17.—Eph Holland, who was arrested for illegal voting, in his statement published to-day says he had a man from Chicago, named Burns, with a gang of 12 men, and a man named Fairchild from Pittsburg, with eight men, Mike Glenson, from New-York, with 18 men, who cast in all about 500 votes; he received $1,000 from the Democratic Committee, and was promised more from individual politicians, who failed to give him the money.

THE GRAND DUKE ALEXIS.

The Grand Duke Alexis, of Russia, his cousin, the Grand Duke Constantine, Baron Schilling, Admiral of the Russian fleet, and Dr. Condeine arrived in this City yesterday afternoon on the 4:05 train of the Pennsylvania Railroad. The party took the Bay Line from Norfolk, and upon their arrival at Baltimore were met by Mr. Frank Thomson, General Manager of the Pennsylvania Railroad, who placed his special car at their disposition. Great care had been taken to keep the fact of his arrival secret, and there was consequently no crowd at the depot in Jersey City to see the Grand Duke. There was no incident on the journey between Baltimore and this City, and the train arrived punctually on time. The only thing of special interest that occurred during the trip was the serving of a sumptuous dinner, which was prepared in the kitchen attached to the car on the route. Carriages were in waiting at the depot in Jersey City, and the Grand Duke and the gentlemen who were with him were at once carried to the Clarendon Hotel, where rooms had been previously engaged for them. Mr. William H. Vanderbilt, Vice President of the New-York Central and Hudson River Railroad, came in on the same train with the Grand Duke, from Washington, also in a special car, with several members of his family. The Grand Duke is heavier than he was on the occasion of his first visit to this country, and his face has lost the youthful appearance which distinguished it. The lines of his face are now broader and deeper, but the genial, kindly expression of his countenance is still preserved. At the hotel no particularly requested that no cards should be sent him excepting those of personal friends. He said that he had come to New-York as a private citizen only, and did not desire to see any gentlemen of the press.

The Grand Duke had evidently read the advertisements of the amusements published in the City papers, and while on his way telegraphed to Mr. Maurice Grau, manager of the Eagle Theatre, to secure two boxes for last night, at the representation of "La Perichole" by Aimés. After partaking of a slight repast in the afternoon he took a carriage and went at once to the Eagle Theatre, where he arrived some time before the performance commenced. In anticipation of his coming Mr. Grau had decorated the two upper proscenium boxes, which the Grand Duke and his suite were to occupy, with a large Russian battle flag of blue and white, tastefully contrasted with a number of small American flags draped around it. As might have been expected the house was crowded, and the actors and actresses, knowing who was present, did their best.

The drinking song by Mlle. Aimée, "Ah! que diner je vaien de jaire," in the first act was exceedingly well rendered, and was loudly applauded by the Grand Duke and his friends, and an encore was given. Russian words were substituted for the French in the song in honor of his Imperial Highness, and he told Mr. Grau at the end of the act that he had been much pleased at the change, and had understood every word as Mlle. Aimée had sung it. Before the raising of the curtain on the second act, the Russian national anthem was played by the orchestra. This was loudly applauded by the audience and was repeated, but the Grand Duke did not rise to acknowledge the compliment. At the close of the first part of the third act the imperial party left the house and proceeded on foot to Delmonico's, corner of Twenty-sixth street and Broadway, where they took supper, and afterward went to their hotel.

TURKEY AND MONTENEGRO.

PROPOSED NEGOTIATIONS BETWEEN THE TWO COUNTRIES — THE ARMISTICE TO BE PROLONGED.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Feb. 17.—It is stated that in consequence of a fresh dispatch from the Grand Vizier, urging the expediency of conducting the negotiations between the Porte and Montenegro, Prince Nicholas has assented to the proposal, announcing that he will immediately send delegates to Constantinople.

LONDON, Feb. 18.—The statement that Prince Nicholas has assented to the proposal of conducting at Constantinople the negotiations between the Porte and Montenegro is confirmed. Two Montenegrins will go to Constantinople by the first steamer. The armistice will possibly be prolonged. Servian delegates passed through Bucharest yesterday, going to Constantinople.

FOREIGN BUSINESS AFFAIRS.

LONDON, Feb. 17.—Business in Mincing lane during the past week was unsettled; some markets were lower. Speculation has subsided. Dealers do not yet show a disposition to hold stocks beyond current requirements. Sugar has unexpectedly fallen 6d. to 1s. per cwt, and rather more for foreign loaves. The Dutch Coffee sales on Wednesday resulted favorably, giving a rather firmer tone to the market. The moderate quantity of plantation Ceylon since offered has realized full rates. Native is also steady, while low palo coffee is generally unimproved. Rice sold on terms favorable to buyers. The only noticeable feature in the tea market has been an increased competition for common grades of Congou in public sale at the low rates lately accepted. A few parcels of saltpetre sold at former rates. Spice is quiet.

On the Stock Exchange during the week business was restricted, owing to the uncertainty of the Eastern question. The alterations in price were generally downward. There was no important change in discount. Consols improved ⅛. Canadian railways are unchanged. Foreign securities are flat, all movements being unfavorable. Some American railways were dealt in at reduced rates, but some Erie descriptions advanced. Telegraphs were flat. Anglo-American declined 2½.

EUROPEAN FREIGHT RATES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHICAGO, Feb. 17.—The tariff agreed upon by the Chicago railroad agents on last Tuesday on all classes of European freight expired by limitation to-day. It had been agreed that, if it was found desirable to continue the arrangement, they were to meet again to-day, and renew the rates. No meeting was called, and the tariff was allowed to expire. This restores the rates existing prior to last Tuesday, and leaves the trunk lines free to make what rates they please on foreign business.

MARINE DISASTERS.

NEW-ORLEANS, Feb. 17.—Capt. Kemble, of the steamer Knickerbocker, reports that he passed, on the 14th inst., the Norwegian ship Protector ashore on Hillsboro Inlet. The Protector went ashore on the 12th inst. She was laden with lumber from Pensacola for Norway. Her Captain had gone to Key West for assistance.

PORTLAND, Feb. 17.—The schooner Louisa A. Johnson, from Philadelphia, coal-laden, struck on York Ledge yesterday, and came off leaking badly, filling so rapidly that it was necessary to run her ashore in a cove near Portland Headlight. She will be a total loss. No insurance. The crew were saved with part of their luggage. A part of the coal cargo may be saved by divers.

LONDON, Feb. 17.—The German brig Der Pommer, Capt. Bohn, from Newcastle, for Charleston, has been towed into Geestemunde partially dismasted. She lost her sails, and three of the crew were drowned. The Norwegian bark Kong Harold, Capt. Schwinge, from Goole Jan. 29, for Baltimore, has put into Cowes with her mate sick.

QUEBEC, Feb. 17.—A dispatch from Georgetown, Prince Edward Island, says the Winter navigation steamer Northern Light has been badly injured by ice, and will have to lay up two weeks for repairs.

WILMINGTON, Feb. 17.—The schooner Henry A. Paull, from Matanzas for New-York, with a cargo of sugar, has put in below distressed. She was dismasted on Feb. 4, off Hatteras. The amount of damage to her cargo is unknown, but is believed to be slight.

TROUBLESOME INDIANS.

DEADWOOD, Feb. 17.—Last night the Indians ran off about 200 head of cattle from Spearfish. An armed force of 30 men left here about midnight to try and recapture them. Two men came in this morning who reported that the Indians drove them from their work, about a mile from Deadwood. Gen. Crook has ordered two more companies of cavalry from Camp Robinson, in addition to one already en route hither.

MONTANA RAILROADS.

HELENA, Feb. 17.—The Governor last evening approved the bill granting a subsidy of $170,000 for the construction of a narrow-gauge railroad from Franklin, Idaho, to this place; the bill to go before the people on the 10th of April next for ratification. The Territorial Legislature at midnight adjourned sine die.

FATAL FALL.

BOSTON, Feb. 17.—William Alexander fell through an elevator hatchway 35 feet, to the basement of the store No. 105 Summer street, this afternoon, and was killed.

AMUSEMENTS.

MUSICAL AND DRAMATIC.

THE PHILHARMONIC SOCIETY.

Two compositions, new to American audiences, were interpreted at last evening's concert of the Philharmonic Society. They were, respectively, a serenade for string orchestra, by Robert Fuchs, of Vienna, and a concerto, for piano and orchestra, by Hans von Bronsart. The serenade is divided into five movements, and, although a trifle monotonous in its clearness and sweetness, includes some very fresh and dainty writing. The third movement—an allegro scherzando—is delightfully vivacious, and it impressed the listeners most favorably, and had to be repeated. The subsequent adagio, though graceful, and effective by sheer force of contrast, seemed rather wanting in form and breadth of themes, but the last division of the serenade—an allegro—delighted everybody by its quaintness and piquancy. Mr. Damrosch's forces played the work with faultless unanimity, delicacy of shading, and crispness of touch. Herr Von Bronsart's concerto embraces an allegro maestoso, an adagio, and a finale alla tarentella. It is a smooth, sonorous, and scholarly achievement, suggestive, possibly, of study rather than of inspiration, but in no sense imitative. The first movement, in which the piano part is of special prominence, is by far the most interesting, and abounds in fragments the grace of which is not impaired by their technical difficulty. The second movement is of that restless nature better typified by agitato than by adagio, and the third is somewhat commonplace, though lively and ornate in subject and treatment. Mr. S. B. Mills played the concerto with unflagging power, and with the precision and taste for which he has long been distinguished, and the orchestra was steadily in accord with the pianist. The concert was brought to a close with Beethoven's Seventh Symphony, the opening piece having been Mendelssohn's overture to "The Fair Melusine."

ENGLISH OPERA.

Miss Kellogg sang in "The Star of the North" at the Academy of Music, yesterday afternoon. Her personation of Catterina is a familiar one, and it has not fallen off, either lyrically or dramatically, since it was first admired, with illustrious surroundings, at the Academy of Music, a few years ago. The applause, yesterday, was as bounteous as usual, and the scenic attire of the opera afforded general satisfaction. Miss Kellogg and her associates go hence to Baltimore, and thence, after a week's sojourn, to Washington. Philadelphia and Boston will next be visited. It is really to be regretted that a season of English opera of reasonable length should not be vouchsafed Metropolitan audiences, and that a complete and efficient company should have to wander about in quest of substantial evidences of appreciation. That what we may call the provinces are, at least, as generous as the Metropolis in art matters is, unfortunately for ourselves, an indisputable fact. Miss Kellogg's engagement to sing at the four Handel and Haydn Society concerts in Boston, in May, secures the prima donna $3,000.

ITALIAN OPERA.

As already announced, Miss Emma Abbott will effect her first appearance in Italian opera at the Academy of Music, on Friday evening next. Miss Abbott is to sing in "La Figlia del Reggimento," and she will have the co-operation of Signori Brignoli and Ferranti and of Mlle. De Gebele. The lady's success in the concert-room encourages her admirers in the belief that her performances upon the lyric stage will afford still more impressive evidence of her talent, and hence it is not surprising to learn that the sale of seats gives assurance of an overflowing audience for Friday evening, and also for the Saturday matinée, when "La Figlia del Reggimento" will be repeated.

THE WAGNER FESTIVAL.

It is now arranged that season tickets for the Wagner Festival will be sold before the sale of seats for single representations is begun. This movement must be commended as particularly judicious when the character of the works to be interpreted is taken into account, for it is to be hoped that no admirer of music will attempt to decide upon the merits of such an opera as "Die Walküre," for example, without hearing it sung twice or thrice. While Mr. Fryer has engaged all the available lyric talent within reach, the public will learn with satisfaction that Mr. Neuendorff's orchestra is to be of uncommon proficiency and numerical strength. the services of every orchestral player of repute having been already secured for the duration of the festival.

A SHAKESPEAREAN REVIVAL.

A Shakespearean revival at the Walnut Street Theatre, in Philadelphia, has attracted much attention and drawn large audiences during the week just ended. The play was "Cymboline," a tragedy which has not been acted in this country, except once, since it was represented by Miss Ellen Tree. The Imogen was Miss Neilson, who has thus added a Shakespearean personation very seldom witnessed to her repertoire. If "Cymboline" is ever chosen for occasional performance, it will only be because of the presence of an actress of uncommon talent to portray Imogen. The piece lacks action, suffers from an excess of irrelevant incident, and is often so wordy as to be downright wearisome. But the scenes in which Imogen appears are mainly exempt from these charges. Schlegel has said that in this personage not a feature of female excellence is forgotten, and the exhibition of these traits is effected in a series of pictures of infinite poetical beauty. None of Miss Neilson's rôles afford her an opportunity for acting of so varied a character, and in none of her less trying tasks has the artist been more successful. Her Imogen is thoroughly womanly, and, hence, as pure, as lovely, and as touching as the bard's ideal can possibly have been. The most powerful impression was, naturally, produced in her scenes with Iachimo and Pisanio, but her performance throughout the third act, when, disguised as a peasant lad, she comes upon the cave tenanted by Belarius was not to be forgotten for its delicacy, and marvelous light and shade of reading and manner. Miss Neilson's support was not particularly efficient, but the mediocrity of the general representation does not seem to have interfered with the attractiveness of the revival, the Walnut Street Theatre having been crowded since Monday. It is fair to say that the mise en scène of the tragedy was quite handsome and elaborate.

GENERAL MENTION.

Mr. J. N. Pattison is in town.

"The Two Orphans" will be acted during this week at the Grand Opera-house.

"Round the Clock" will be acted at the Olympic Theatre, until further notice.

Mr. F. F. Müller will give a concert at Chickering Hall on Thursday evening next.

Several "man-eating alligators" have been added to the guests of the New-York Aquarium.

Mr. Heller's "third programme" will be interpreted throughout this week at the Wonder Theatre.

A concert in aid of the Hospital for the Cure of Chronic Diseases will be given at Steinway Hall, to-morrow evening.

Mr. H. J. Montague, under the management of Mr. Arthur Wallack, has acted during the week just ended in Providence.

A new burletta, called "Our Hash-house," will be brought out at the San Francisco Minstrels' Opera-house, to-morrow evening.

"The Danicheffs" will to-morrow enter upon the third week of the run of the play at the Union Square Theatre. Its performances have attracted large audiences.

Miss Neilson has procured an absolute divorce from her husband, Mr. Philip H. Lee. The decree was granted by Judge Donohue, of this City, a few days since.

To-morrow and Tuesday evenings, Mlle. Aimée will appear in "La Grande Duchesse" at the Eagle Theatre; Wednesday evening and Saturday afternoon, she is to sing in "La Fille De Mme. Angot," and Thursday evening she will perform in "La Jolie Parfumeuse." "Giroflé-Girofla" is to be given, later on, and, on Monday week, a new opera, "La Boulangère a des Ecus," will be made known.

Mr. A. P. Burbank will give a reading for his benefit at Chickering Hall, to-morrow night, with the co-operation of Mrs. Gordon-Steele and Mr. Walter R. Johnston.

An agent of Mr. P. T. Barnum sailed for Europe yesterday and will return with several new elements to be infused into the well-known managers' "Great Show."

The last representations of "Around the World in Eighty Days" are announced at Niblo's Theatre. The first performance of "A Trip to the Moon" is set down for Thursday week.

Gilmore's Garden will be opened to the public on the evenings of Tuesday, Thursday and Saturday of this week, races and out-of-door sports generally constituting the nightly programme.

The annual benefit-performance in aid of the French Benevolent Society occurs at the Academy of Music, on Saturday evening next. Mlle. Aimée and her associates will perform "Les Dragon des Villars," a delightful three-act opera-comique by Massé.

"Our Boarding-house" keeps its hold upon public favor, and the Park Theatre is crowded to repletion nightly. In consequence of the success of Mr. Grover's comedy, Mr. J. T. Raymond's intended performances have been indefinitely postponed.

"Wild Oats" at Wallack's Theatre has proved so attractive that the piece will be kept upon the boards throughout the current week, if not longer. Messrs. Wallack, Beckett, Arnott and Stevenson, and Miss Germon all appear in O'Keefe's comedy.

Mme. Essipoff interpreted a programme of relatively light music, mainly representative of Mendelssohn, at Steinway Hall, yesterday afternoon. She will play again on Tuesday evening and on Wednesday afternoon of this week, Saint-Saens' concerto No. 2, for two pianos, being a prominent number of her first programme.

The first performance of Mr. F. T. S. Darley's cantata of "Malchus" is now announced for Friday evening next at Chickering Hall. Mmes. Gaiager, Elliot, and Ayers, and Messrs. Castle and Sobst will sing the solos in "Malchus," and the New-York Choral Union will interpret the choruses under the baton of Mr. P. S. Gilmore.

"Fifth Avenue" will be acted at Booth's Theatre, throughout this week. The startling intelligence that many Patriarchs of the Order of Oddfellows, and several hundred pupils of Eastman College, Poughkeepsie, are to enjoy the play a few nights hence is transmitted to the press, in addition to the fact that the comic incidents of the play have been made more numerous by an increase in the duties of Messrs. George S. Knight and John Wild.

Apropos of recent and approaching Shakespearean revivals, mention may here be made of the fact that a very fine essay from the pen of Mr. Joseph Watson has lately appeared on Shakespeare in America. Mr. Watson sets forth not only what Shakespeare has done for America, but what America has done for Shakespeare. He says that America is the bard's home, rather than England, cites English predictions and French authorities in proof of the fact, and traces the influence of Shakespeare from 1776 to 1876.

IN MEMORY OF A GREAT COMPOSER.

THE CEREMONY IN HONOR OF AUBER—THE PROGRAMME AT THE CEMETERY NEAR PARIS — GOOD MUSIC AND EIGHT SPEECHES—NOTABLE PERSONS PRESENT.

Our Paris correspondent writing under date of Jan. 31, says: "The ceremony in honor of Auber came off at Père-la-Chaise, according to the programme indicated in a recent letter, and in presence of a large concourse of people. A crowd of between 3,000 and 4,000 persons gathered in the cemetery, the greater portion of them being disinterested spectators who had come out chiefly to hear the music. The band of the Garde Républicaine begun with the overture of "La Muette," which was given in admirable style by the musicians of M. Sellenick. M. Bosquin then sung the "Prayer" of the third act of the "Domino Noir," accompanied by the choruses of the Conservatory under the direction of Jules Cohen. Eight speeches were then made, by M. Chennevières, Director of the Department of Beaux-Arts; by M. François, in the name of the Academy; by M. Berthauld, Mayor of Caen, the town in which Auber was born; by Ambroise Thomas, in the name of the Conservatory of Music; by M. Maquet, in the name of the Société des Auteurs Dramatiques; by Baron Taylor, in the name of the Association of Musical Artists; by M. Halanzier, Director of the Opera, and M. Carvalho, Director of the Opéra Comique. After these speeches, which were warmly applauded, the pupils of the Conservatory came forward to cover the monument with wreaths and crowns, and to hang them upon the gilded fence that surrounds it. The visitor to Père-la-Chaise will find the monument upon the grand avenue on entering, beside those of Arago, Alfred de Musset, and Rossini, just opposite those raised to Gens. Clement Thomas, Lecomte, and Ernest Baroche. The bust of Auber, carved by Perraud, is placed upon a column of Jura stone, a little over seven yards in height. Upon the pedestal is placed a lyre interlaced with crowns, above which is placed a small pyramid of black marble, upon which the following inscription is engraved: 'Daniel François Esprit Auber, born at Caen, the 29th of January, 1792; died at Paris, the 12th of May, 1871.' Among the persons present were many whose names are associated with operatic music, such as Hérold, son of the author of the "Pré-aux-Clercs," the Comte de Flotow, Victor Massé, Offenbach, Ernest Reyer, Du Locle, Gounod, Reber, and Delaborde. The ceremony terminated with the "Prayer" from "La Muette."

A HIGHWAYMAN ARRESTED.

At 12:15 o'clock this morning John Bowls, a prize-fighter, with two unknown men, seized Edmund Murphy, of No. 429 East One hundred and Nineteenth street, as he was passing the corner of Pearl and Chatham streets. They held him, while Bowls took a gold watch valued at $200 out of Murphy's pocket. Murphy raised an outcry, which was responded to by Capt. Murray and Detective Carr. The two unknown men fled and were not captured, but Bowls, who was held by Murphy, was taken into custody. When he saw Capt. Murray and Detective Carr approach he dropped the gold watch into Murphy's overcoat pocket. The highwayman was locked up in the Fourth Precinct Stationhouse, and will be taken to the Tombs to-day.

THE REASON WHY.

Not being able to compete in merit, an attempt is being made to secure the trade by offering large discounts. Notwithstanding this, ladies who investigate the Automatic Sewing-machine of the Willcox and Gibbs Sewing-machine Company cannot be induced to buy the noisy, hard-running, two-thread sewing-machines, even at a very low price. MRS BEAUCLERC AND OTHERS IN COURT—SUIT AGAINST MR. HORACE WIGNAN—A THEATRICAL MANAGER'S TROUBLES WITH HIS SINGERS—PAULINE MARKHAM M'MAHON—VERDICT RENDERED FOR THE PLAINTIFFS.

From the London Standard, Jan. 30.

In the Common Pleas Division yesterday, before Mr. Justice Lopes and a common jury, the the plaintiffs in this case were vocalists and theatrical performers, and they sued Mr. Horace Wigan, the theatrical manager, to recover damages for alleged slander. Mr. Waddy, Q. C., and Mr. case of "Metcalf and wife against Wigan" was tried. McDonald appeared for the plaintiffs; Mr. McIntyre, Q. C., and Mr. F. H. Lewis for the defendant.

Mr. Waddy said the plaintiff, Mr. Metcalf, was known upon the stage as Mr. E. Rosenthal, while his wife's theatrical name was Miss Beauclerc. Mr. Horace Wigan was probably known to all of them, the position he held in the theatrical world being such an important and prominent one. Miss Beauclerc and Mr. Wigan were formerly connected in business transactions, and the libel, which he should contend was a most unfounded one, arose out of these transactions. In August, 1865, when Mr. Wigan was lessee and manager of the Olympic Theatre, he brought out there a piece called "Prince Camaralzaman." The title rôle, or first lady's part, was played, by Miss Nellie Farren; Miss Lindley was nominally the first lady, Miss Amy Sheridan second, Miss Julia Harland, who played Cupid, was third, and then there was a small part which was confided to the care of Miss Beauclerc, whose reputation was not then so great as it is now. This part was Glowworm, [laughter,] and its value or importance might be gathered from the fact that the lady was paid £3 a week for acting it. With this cast the piece was acted for some weeks, when Miss Lindley became dissatisfied with her part and seceded from it. Miss Sheridan was promoted to take the part of the other lady, and Miss Beauclerc was also promoted from Glowworm to be Queen Mamouny, the important part which had been played hitherto by Miss Amy Sheridan. She acted this character until the burlesque was withdrawn. Soon afterward Mr. Oxenford, the dramatic critic, wrote a piece called "The Cleft Stick," and during the rehearsal of it a lady who had been requested to take the part of Mrs. Fix turned out to be incompetent, and Mr. Wigan asked the plaintiff if she would at once take up the part and read it. Mr. Wigan was there, and Mr. Oxenford was also watching the performance of his own piece, and would, of course, on that occasion be a particularly severe critic. The result of their united judgment was that Miss Beauclerc was asked to take the part, and she acted it during the whole run of the piece, which, however, was only for a short time. It was afterward put again upon the stage, and then Miss Beauclerc was astonished to find that another lady had been cast for her part. She asked Mr. Wigan how it was, and he said that he had given it to another young lady, whose name it was unnecessary to mention, because she was so very pretty. [A laugh.] He did not know whether this was an intimation that Miss Beauclerc was not so pretty, or that she had in the course of two weeks become ugly. However, Miss Elliott—it was useless trying to keep back her name when he had a compliment to pay her, for she was very pretty indeed—was put on with the part. The next piece was "The Wolf in Sheep's Clothing," and in that a very prominent part was assigned to his client, and no complaint was made of her. The next piece was "The Four Pretty Princes," and by the universal custom of the stage a pretty prince was a young lady. [Laughter.] One part was given to Miss Nellie Farren, but for some reason she would not take it; and such was the opinion which Mr. Wigan had of Miss Beauclerc that he asked her to take it. She attended every rehearsal, though ill in health herself and her father in his last illness, and it was not until she took a further cold at the grave-side of her father that she stayed away from rehearsal. She sent a note to Mr. Wigan to state the cause of her absence, but perhaps he did not think the reason for absence was good enough, and he there and then dismissed her from her engagement. This was in 1865, and nothing more was heard until 1876. In January of this last-mentioned year Mr. Kittle, the manager of the Prince of Wales' Theatre, Liverpool, let the house to Miss Pauline Markham, asking her to go down to Liverpool on a starring visit, and the result of negotiations was that on the 13th of March an agreement was made between them, upon which transaction this action turned. Miss Markham, by the agreement undertook to fulfil a star engagement of three weeks, and to furnish two parts in "Cigarette," St. George and Blush Rose. She was to take another actress with her, this person being understood to be Miss Emma Ritta. The price to be paid was £35 for the first week, and £25 for each of the remaining weeks. It appeared that Mr. Wigan thought he should like to take his Olympic company down to this very theatre for a fortnight to play "All For Her," which had had a considerable run in London. Mr. Wigan took the theatre for the time when Miss Markham was engaged to play there, and he found himself with two actresses, to whom £35 was to be paid, and with no parts for them. Miss Ritta fell ill and could not go, and Miss Markham set to work to find some one to take her place. Miss Beauclerc was engaged for this purpose, and on the 13th April she and Miss Markham were at Liverpool ready to play their parts. They, however, were told at the theatre that they were not wanted, and they wrote to Mr. Kittle, from whom they got a note, inclosing another from Mr. Wigan. This letter was to this effect:

BOSCOMBE MANOR, BOURNEMOUTH, HANTS, April 15.

MY DEAR K.: I clearly understood that the agreement expressed was much in writing that Miss Pauline Markham was to bring with her Miss Ritta, and I should not think of accepting any other artiste, least of all Miss Beauclerc, of whose incompetency I had some years back a most expensive proof.—Yours sincerely, HORACE WIGAN.

On the 17th the ladies went to the theatre and saw Mr. Kittle and also Mr. Wigan, when the latter said to Miss Markham, "The fact is, you have brought a woman who is not capable of playing the part," and he added that he would not have her in a theatre where he was, because he had once a most expensive proof of her incompetence. The learned counsel, in conclusion, said that it was these statements upon which the action was founded, and he asserted after what had passed in reference to the plaintiff's engagements with the defendant that there could be no truth in them. The defendant added something about his having kept Miss Beauclerc on at the solicitation of her husband, although she failed to attend rehearsals, alleging that she had a sick father and four or five children ill, when the fact was that she had at that time only one child. The four or five might have sprung from Mr. Wigan's brain, but certainly they were not Miss Beauclerc's. [Laughter.] As to the wrongful dismissal of this lady, Mr. Wigan had paid £50 to compromise legal proceedings, and it was thought that he would probably have to pay a great deal more in the present action.

Mrs. Metcalf said she was one of the plaintiffs, and was known on the stage as Miss Beauclerc; she came on the stage in 1864, and in 1865 she was taken on at the Olympic by Mr. Wigan; "Prince Camaralzaman" was being played; Miss Nellie Farren played the first part, Miss Lindley the second, Miss Sheridan third, Miss Julia Harland played Cupid, and witness played Glowworm; the piece ran some weeks, and she had no intimation that her acting was unsatisfactory. Miss Lindley afterward left the theatre; Miss Farren still kept the "title rôle," Miss Sheridan played second part and witness became Queen Mamouny; When she took the part of Glowworm she sang some songs, but Miss Conway, who succeeded her, sang none. Witness did not know why this was. She acted Queen Mamouny till the piece was withdrawn, and without any complaint whatever. After this Mr. Oxenford wrote "The Cleft Stick," and during the rehearsal the defendant sent for her. It was about four days before the piece was produced. At the theatre she saw Mr. Wigan, and had a conversation with him. He wished her to play the part of Mrs. Fix, and to take the manuscript and read it there and then, on the stage. She did so. Mr. Oxenford was sitting in one of the boxes watching it. The defendant asked her to take the part, and she did so during the whole run of the piece, and gave satisfaction, she believed. She never heard of any complaint. The piece being withdrawn, was in two or three weeks afterward reproduced. She received no notice as to taking any part in it, and she saw Mr. Wigan, and asked him why she was not to play the part. He said he had a lady young and pretty to play the part. She told him she thought that she was quite as pretty as the young lady. [Loud laughter.]

Mr. Waddy—And I dare say you were. [Laughter.]

Witness continued: She afterward played Dame Carew, in "The Wolf in Sheep's Clothing," because he said he had no one who could speak a line of sentiment.

Mr. Waddy—You must not say that, because you may hurt other people's feelings.

Witness—"The Four Pretty Princes" then came out, and, Miss Nellie Farren having declined the first part, it was allotted to witness; she had a good deal of singing, and no complaint was made either of her acting or her singing; she never acted in "The Four Pretty Princes," but only attended the rehearsals; she was dismissed before the piece was put upon the stage; during the rehearsals her father was very ill, and for a very long time, and at that time she was married, and had one child; she attended the rehearsals during her father's illness, and up to the day before he died. She was dismissed through taking a cold at her father's grave. She wrote to say that she could not attend rehearsal next day. She said she was not well enough. Mr. Wigan knew that she was suffering from the illness of her father. He wrote to her saying that in the theatre where he was, because he had once a most expensive proof of her incompetence. The learned counsel, in conclusion, said that it was these statements upon which the action was founded, and he asserted after what had passed in reference to the plaintiff's engagements with the defendant that there could be no truth in them. Mr. Wigan knew that she was suffering from the illness of her father. He wrote to her saying that in the theatre where he was, because he had once a most expensive proof of her incompetence. The services would no longer be required. To the best of her recollection she had not up to that time failed to attend the rehearsals until the day before her father's death. From that time up to the funeral she attended rehearsals as usual. The defendant gave her permission to be absent on the day of the funeral, and next day she was too unwell to attend. The witness then in detail denied the imputation which had been made against her of incompetency in her profession. When she was dismissed an action was brought for wrongful dismissal, and the defendant paid £50 to compromise it. After that she had nothing to do with Mr. Wigan until the affair at Liverpool. She retired from the stage for domestic and family reasons, for two years in consequence of a railway accident, and returned to it in 1867. At Liverpool she and Miss Markham went each day for a fortnight to the theatre and asked if they were required, but were told "No."

Cross-examined.—Was Cupid a very good character in "Prince Camaralzaman?" Cupid was a very nice character. [Laughter.] The defendant never complained of her while she played Glowworm.

Mr. Robert Soutar, a comedian and stage manager at the Gaiety, said in 1865 he was at the Olympic, and acted in "Prince Camaralzaman." He thought that Miss Beauclerc, who was not then very experienced, was very attractive in appearance, and for a novice got through very well.

Were you Skillamahuk? I was. [Loud laughter.] He was black prince. He did not consider Miss Beauclerc incompetent as a singer and actor in 1865 and 1866.

The further hearing of the case was adjourned.

On Tuesday, Jan. 30, the hearing of the case was continued, the evidence of several witnesses being heard. One of the witnesses for the plaintiff gave the name of Mrs. McMahon, but said that the name by which she was known upon the stage was that of Miss Pauline Markham. She thought Miss Beauclerc capable of playing any part in opera bouffe. Mr. George Honey was called, and asked if he was a comedian. He said that he was supposed to be. [Laughter.] He added that he played with Miss Beauclerc in 1873 in the "Bohemians." He thought that she was fully competent to play her part. She was fit to play leading parts in opera bouffe or operetta. Several dramatic critics, vocalists, musical authors, and orchestral leaders testified as to the competency of the plaintiff.

Mr. Horace Wigan, the defendant, was called. He said that in 1865 he was the lessee of the Olympic, and produced "Prince Camaralzaman." Miss Beauclerc was cast in Glowworm, which was the singing part of the piece; she was certainly not successful as a singer; she broke down the first night in an important song from "La Traviata," he complained, and also sent for her and her husband to remonstrate upon the engagement; he said that she was an inexperienced person and a novice, which he was not previously aware of. Mr. Metcalf admitted that she was a novice. The engagement was for the season. The lady tried a second time and failed, and then it was that he remonstrated. He dismissed her at the end of December or the beginning of January. She had not up to that time played a singing part since she played Glowworm. Mrs. Fix was certainly not a singing part; she was a walking lady. [Laughter.] The female plaintiff was dismissed during the rehearsal for "The Four Pretty Princes." She stayed away without leave from rehearsal on more than one occasion, but it was not for this that she was dismissed. He repeatedly asked her if her husband was going to fulfill his promise, and she begged him to keep her on. She was ill, and her father was dying, but there was no help for it—she was not up in her part, and he was obliged to get another lady in it. When the action was brought against him, his solicitors advised him to settle it by paying £50. The song which the plaintiff had to sing was really the only song of the evening. It was from "La Traviata," and was usually entrusted to Mme. Patti or Mme. Nilsson. When the lady broke down he tried her again, and then he sent for her husband. Witness remonstrated, saying that the lady was no singer. Mr. Metcalf admitted that she was a novice, but said that if she was discharged it would militate against her future prospects, that he was going out of town to play a short engagement, and that on his return he would relieve witness of the engagement. The song was cut out, and she continued to play the part.

On Wednesday, Jan. 31, the case was concluded, and the jury, after an absence of about half an hour, came into court and gave a verdict for the plaintiffs, damages $350. Judgment was granted by the court for that amount.

GEN. JACKSON AS A DUELIST.

HIS OWN ACCOUNT OF THE AFFAIR WITH DICKINSON—NO EVENT OF HIS LIFE REGRETTED SO MUCH—INTERESTING CORRESPONDENCE BETWEEN COL. J. G. HARRIS AND GEN. W. G. HARDING.

From the Nashville (Tenn.) American, Feb. 13.

The following correspondence will be read with interest, not only in Tennessee, but by admirers of Old Hickory throughout the length and breadth of the land:

NASHVILLE, Feb. 8, 1877.

Gen. W. G. Harding:

MY DEAR SIR: In the Kentucky correspondence of the Cincinnati Commercial there recently appeared a communication describing the duel which took place many years ago between Gen. Andrew Jackson and Charles Dickinson. I incose to your address a paper containing it, for the purpose of calling your attention to the closing paragraph, which is as follows:

"Jackson never exhibited the slightest compunction for the part he took in this bloody affair. He very rarely alluded to it, but when he did it was always with perfect complacency. It is told of him that a gentleman was once examining his dueling pistols. Taking up one of them, the General quietly remarked: 'That is the pistol with which I killed Mr. Dickinson.'"

This is not according to my recollection. Gov. Neill S. Brown informs me that you had a conversation with our great and good friend at the Hermitage, a short time before his death, upon this subject, in which he expressed regret at the occurrence in terms that reflected most creditably on his great name and fame. Should not the truth of history be vindicated? I am, dear Sir, very truly, your friend, J. GEORGE HARRIS.

ELLIE MEADE, near Nashville, Feb. 9, 1877.

J. George Harris:

MY DEAR SIR: I am obliged for your kind favor of the 8th inst.; also for the paper (Cincinnati Commercial) containing an account of the duel between Gen. Andrew Jackson and Charles Dickinson, which is incorrect in some essential points, and does great injustice to Gen. Jackson, as will appear from the recital of a conversation which took place between him and myself.

At the time Gen. Jackson retired from the Presidential Chair, and for several years thereafter, I lived in McSpadden's Bend, on the Cumberland River, three or four miles distant from the Hermitage, and it was my pleasure to visit the old hero frequently.

On the occasion referred to, I found Gen. Jackson alone, which was not often the case. In the course of the conversation, I asked him whether brave men were ever frightened. Gen. Jackson replied: "I do not know, Sir, that I am competent to answer the question."

I answered: "The world, and especially those who know you best, will accord you as much courage as belongs to man."

Gen. Jackson then replied: "If that be so, Sir, I would say that I have been as badly frightened as any man ought ever to be."

I asked him on what occasion he was frightened, supposing that he referred to some of his Indian engagements.

The General said: "It was, Sir, when I fought the duel with Mr. Dickinson. In the first place, Sir, I had no unkind feeling against Mr. Dickinson, and no disposition to injure a hair of his head. I had gone as far as an honorable man could go to avoid the difficulty with Dickinson; he had not injured me, and therefore I had no ground of complaint against him; my quarrel had been with his father-in-law, Col. Erwin. I knew Dickinson to be a brave, honorable gentleman, and the best shot with the pistol I ever saw—far better than myself, for I was never an expert with that weapon. I knew that he could shoot quicker and truer than I could. I therefore went upon the ground expecting to be killed, and I owe the preservation of my life on that occasion to the fashions of the day, for I wore a coat with rolling collar and very full breasted; but, fortunately for me, Sir, I was organized with a very narrow chest. Dickinson's ball struck very near the centre of my coat, and, while it scraped the breast bone, it did not enter the cavity of the chest. In an instant, under the impression that I was, perhaps, mortally wounded, and upon the impulse of the moment, I fired, and my antagonist fell—and no event of my life, Sir, have I regretted so much. My determination before and after taking position was to discharge my pistol in the air, but because I felt the effect of his shot I fired at him. Just here, Sir, let me add that the world has done me great injustice, for I am charged with having brought on the difficulty, and with having fixed the terms so as to reserve my fire and advance; and it charges me with having advanced upon Dickinson, and shot him when I was within a few feet of him—all of which is false, Sir. I fired instantly after receiving his shot, and from my position; and Dickinson stood in his position and received my fire like a brave man as he was."

The above is the conversation nearly verbatim as it occurred between Gen. Jackson and myself in reference to that duel. Very truly your friend,

W. G. HARDING.

MADE INSANE BY HAIR-DYE.

The New-Milford (Conn.) Hay of the 10th inst. says: "Most of our readers in New-Milford will doubtless remember Mrs. Miranda Ruby, a crazy woman who has lived in this village many years, and whose insanity was manifested by always wearing a letter envelope on her bonnet or tied to her parasol, or in some other harmless way; but we doubt if any one would be likely to surmise the cause of her insanity. A few days ago her son came to New-Milford, and took Mrs. Ruby to see a physician in New-Haven for his advice. The physician said that her difficulty was softening of the brain; that it was absolutely incurable, and that it was caused entirely by the use of hair-dye."

A NEW PACIFIC STATE PROPOSED.

The San Francisco Alta says: "A letter of ex-Gov. Downey to the Los Angeles Express, recalling the fact that the Legislature in 1859 authorized certain counties in the southern end of California to vote upon the question whether they wished to set up a separate State Government, and that they gave more than a two-thirds vote in favor of the project, omits to mention other material facts, and among which are that the act authorizing that vote was passed by a Lecompton Legislature; that the scheme of separation had been urged repeatedly since 1851, with the notorious intention of dedicating the new State to slavery; and that there has been no active demand of late years for separation, save from Los Angeles. We do not believe that San Diego would favor a new State now; we think San Luis Obispo and Kern would prefer not to belong to it, and unless they would join, we doubt whether even Santa Barbara would consent. Of course, two Federal Senatorships are great baits, but they will not compensate tax-payers for the serious expenses of a State Government. As to what should be done in five or ten years, we cannot now safely decide; but certainly there should be no division until all the counties to be cut off consent; nor then, unless they have together enough people to maintain a State Government and be entitled to a Representative in Congress."

FEATURES OF THE MARKETS.

There is nothing of fresh interest to be said in regard to the markets. The supply of everything in season is abundant, and there are many edibles sent here from Southern climes that people in other parts of the country will probably be deprived of for several months to come. Butter is cheap, and from present appearances is likely to be cheaper. Good cheese is dear, the demand from England keeping up prices, and eggs are in good supply, and the rates for them have a tendency to decline. Meats of good quality are in ample supply, and the prices given last week are unchanged. Poultry is not very plentiful, and is higher priced than it was last week. Game is to be had in large variety, is arriving generally in good condition, and sells at reasonable prices. Fish in season is plentiful. Really choice apples are not in large supply, and prices are a little high. Grapes are scarce, and are now so dear as to make them a decided luxury. Good Florida oranges are also a little dearer, but inferior fruit can be bought at low prices. Cranberries continue to sell at reasonably low rates. There is a great variety of vegetables in the markets. Prices for staple vegetables are not high, and from present indications are likely to be lower. Fresh kale and spinach from the South are scarce just now, and new potatoes and fresh tomatoes from the Bermuda Islands are in light supply, and these, as well as cucumbers, mushrooms and other vegetables reared in hot-houses, are high-priced.

RECEIPTS FOR THE TABLE.

TOMATO SOUP.—To one quart of tomatoes add two quarts of water; boil one half-hour; then add one quart of milk, a small piece of butter, rolled crackers to thicken, salt and pepper. A small pinch of soda may be added to prevent the milk curdling.—VERITAS.

CODFISH.—I always buy the very small fish, which is almost boneless. After freshening it thoroughly, take equal parts of fish and cold potatoes. Slice the potatoes very thin, and pick the fish in small bits; have also some hard-boiled eggs, and slice them; be careful not to break them. Take an earthen baking-dish, place in it a layer of potatoes, then fish, then eggs. Sprinkle a little salt, pepper over. Repeat on if your dish is nearly full. Cover with cream or fresh, rich milk, put small pieces of butter over the top, turn a plate over it, and stand where it will cook one hour slowly. To be eaten with buttered toast.—AUNT ADDIE.

CODFISH II.—Another way to cook salt codfish. After it is freshened let it boil 10 minutes; then mince it fine, mix it into mashed potato and mashed parsnip, seasoning with mustard and cayenne pepper. To be eaten with egg sauce. Minced codfish boiled in milk and thickened with beaten egg, seasoned with chopped parsley and a pinch of cayenne, poured over buttered toast cut in small pieces, is very nice. You can broil a nice piece of codfish, but it must be very fresh in order to succeed, and pour over it melted butter, with lemon juice squeezed in it. Pour over it hot, and send to table at once.—AUNT ADDIE.

POTTED FISH.—Place a layer of fish in the bottom of a stone jar; sprinkle over them a little salt, whole peppercorns, cloves, allspice, some blades of mace, and a few small pieces of cinnamon; repeat this until you have used up your fish; cover with cold vinegar; put a tight cover on the jar, and stand on the range, where it will keep hot, for 12 hours; must not boil.—AUNT ADDIE.

TO BOIL POTATOES.—In order to have them dry and mealy, fill a pot half full of water, peel the potatoes, and put in a colander and set in a pot, (taking care that the water does not touch the potatoes), cover the colander very tight, and let them steam. Salt while cooking. Try only with a broom-splint.—A. B.

SARATOGA POTATOES, MOON'S STYLE.—Raw Peachblows or Early Rose, slice them very thin; put the slices in ice-water over night, drain off the water, and lay them evenly between linen cloths, press until they are dry; have the kettle of boiling clarified lard ready for use; drop in the potatoes, a few at a time, and with a skimmer take them out before they are browned. They will be crisp, and are equally good whether cold or warm, and will keep for a long time.—SOPHIE.

POTATO SALAD.—Boil about a quart of small potatoes; peel them; cut up one-quarter pound of clear smoked pork into very small dice; fry them brown; then pour two tablespoonfuls sweet-oil, half a goblet full of sour vinegar and a goblet full water into the pan, and heat this all together; put into a bowl, cut up a small onion and throw in a handful of salt; cut the potatoes in very thin slices; have the salad ready half an hour before you wish to use it.—EMILIA.

OYSTER PATTIES.—Make a rich puff paste cut in small squares; place a layer of oysters which have been rolled in a napkin on the paste; add a little salt, powdered mace, and cayenne pepper over them, covering with another piece of paste; wet the edges of the paste with cold water, using a paste brush, and pinch tightly together; bake in a rather quick oven; it should be a light color.—AUNT ADDIE.

STEAMED BEEF.—For a family of six or seven persons take four pounds of beef, cross-rib is best; get a piece of suet the size of your hand, cut in small pieces and fry out the fat; you must have a large flat-bottomed iron pot; after the suet is brown, take out the scraps and put in the meat and two onions cut up; when the meat has become dark-brown on one side turn it over and let that get the same; when onions and meat are thoroughly brown, pour in a pint of boiling water; whenever the meat gets dry add more water, but it must always be boiling hot; throw in a handful of salt, three bay-leaves, and half dozen each of whole allspice and whole pepper, cover with a close-fitting cover and let it cook for two hours; when almost done thin a teaspoonful of flour with half cupful water; stir this in the gravy, taking care not to have any lumps in it; when you wish to serve it, strain the gravy through a fine sieve and pour a few spoonfuls over the meat.—EMILIA.

APPLE PORK.—Have the bone taken from a leg of pork, and the skin scored in diamonds; fill up the place where the bone has left with juicy apples, pared, cored, and cut small; a little brown sugar, and some grated rind of lemon; place in a large baking-pan, and around it whole apples, pared and cored with brown sugar sprinkled over them, and the grated rind and juice of a lemon. Bake three hours, or according to the size of the joint; put about half a teacupful of water in the pan.—AUNT ADDIE.

TO FRY APPLES AND PORK CHOPS.—Season them with salt and pepper and a little powdered sage or sweet marjoram; dip them into beaten egg and then into beaten bread crumbs. Fry about 20 minutes, or until they are done. Put them on a hot dish. Pour off part of the gravy into another pan, to make a gravy to serve with them, if you choose. Then fry apples which you have sliced about two-thirds of an inch thick, cutting them around the apple so that the core is in the centre of each piece. When they are browned on one side and partly cooked, turn them carefully with a pancake-turner, and let them finish cooking. Dish around the chops or on a separate dish.—AUNT ADDIE.

OAT-MEAL BREAD.—Oat-meal can be made into a bread "that will neither be hard nor sticky" in but one way. The oat-meal crackers, so-called, are made of wheat flour, with a little oat-meal worked in. Perfect oat-meal bread is made by boiling whole oats in a double boiler, two times their bulk of water, for one hour and a half, and then stirring in a meal of oats until a heavy dough is formed, when they are ready to bake in gem pans.—INVESTIGATOR.

OAT-MEAL AND WHEATEN GRITS.—"Aunt Addie" and others will find that there is only one perfect way of cooking oats and wheat, for the perfection of oat food the whole or "pearled" oat should be used, as oat-meal possesses hardly any proportion of noxious odors in a single day. The pearled oats must be soaked 10 or 12 hours in four times as much water, by measure, to which a trifle of salt has been added, and then boiled in a double boiler for an hour and a half, receiving no stirring except at the close of the boiling process; pour into mold, and serve when partly or quite cold, as preferred. To lovers of oat-food, this will be found to be a new revelation. To such as dislike "mushes," it will commend itself for its elegance—being nearly white—and delicate flavor. "Pearled wheat" and "coarse granulated wheat," which can now be bought, require like treatment and are entitled to like commendation.—HYGIENIST.

COOKING OAT-MEAL WITHOUT WASTE.—Use a farina-kettle; put sufficient water in the outside kettle for boiling purposes; then pour three pints of water in the inside kettle, adding a small dessert-spoonful salt when it boils; throw in one pint of pin-head oat-meal; boil ten minutes, when the water will be absorbed and the meal dry; take out the kettle and reverse it on the dish on which you wish to serve, and it will leave the kettle in perfect form, and can be eaten with a fork; if you like it moist, add more water before boiling; sufficient for a family of eight.—LOTTIE.

STEAMED CEREALS.—"Thrift" is in error in recommending "steam-cooked" oats and wheat, on the ground that they take less time in cooking. The process, of drying, after steaming, renders them difficult to cook to a jelly—which they should assume to be easily digested—and makes them insipid. If they could be eaten at once on being steamed they would do, but desiccation appears to convert the gluten and cellulose of the grain into an almost insoluble, wood-like substance incapable of being acted upon by the gastric fluid. Weak stomachs not unfrequently reject these foods unchanged, after seeking vainly to convert them.—PETRACLAN.

GRAHAM BREAD.—Take two cupfuls of sour or buttermilk, and one of sweet milk; two cupfuls of Graham and one of white flour, half a teaspoonful of salt, and one of soda; mix the soda and the salt with the flour, and then add the milk, making all into dough; bake from one to two hours.—MAID OF ALL WORK.

STEAMED INDIAN MEAL BREAD.—One quart of Indian meal, (yellow,) one pint of flour, two-thirds teacupful molasses, one table-spoonful soda, salt, and sour milk to make a thick batter not too stiff; put it in a pan to be bread and steam it three hours, then bake one-half hour.—AUNT CADDIE.

MATTAPOISETT ROLLS.—Two quarts of flour, one-third cupful sugar, one-half cupful yeast, one table-spoonful lard, one pint milk boiled and cooled; mix at night, in the morning knead thoroughly, at noon roll and cut out with a biscuit-cutter; wet the edges; then turn them over to make them stick; place them on baking-tins, and let them stand until tea time; then bake.—VERITAS.

BREAD PUDDING.—One quart of milk, one teaspoonful of bread crumbs, yolks of three eggs well beaten, the rind and juice of a lemon, one cupful sugar, butter the size of an egg. Bake carefully until the mixture becomes a curd. Beat the whites of the eggs to a stiff froth for frosting.

BUCKWHEAT CAKES.—For a family of six or eight, two pints buckwheat, half a pint of graham flour, half a pint Indian meal; sift very thoroughly into this mixture two small teaspoonfuls soda. When the griddle is blazing hot add buttermilk enough to make a thick batter, having first added a half cup of molasses. Two cups a quart and half a pint of buttermilk. Bake the cakes very thick and very brown.

RICE CROQUETTES.—Boil one-half pound of best rice in one and one-half pints of milk and a tablespoonful butter; put the milk on cold; when it comes to a boil set it where it will only simmer until soft; then add a quarter pound of white sugar and the grated rind of a lemon and the yolks of five eggs; stir all the time until it thickens; do not let it boil; spread it out on a dish, and when quite cold form into small balls or squares; dip them into beaten egg and then into bread crumbs twice; lay them one by one into a wire basket, which put into a pan of boiling lard; let fry a light brown; drain well and sift powdered sugar over them.—AUNT ADDIE.

MACARONI.—Break your macaroni to the size you wish and soak one hour in cold water; put in a pot with water to cover; boil slowly until tender enough to pass a broom splint through them; then strain through a colander and put on a hot and well-buttered dish; season with pepper, pour melted butter over, and cover thickly with grated English cheese.—MRS. BROWN.

SOUTHERN OMELET.—Beat three eggs ten minutes; add three tablespoonfuls milk; stir well; put a piece of butter size of walnut in the frying pan; have the pan very hot before pouring in the mixture; when it becomes brown around the edge raise with a knife, and roll up; place on a hot plate and season with pepper and salt, after it is placed on plate.—DIXIE.

JELLY.—Take one package gelatine; pour over it a pint of cold water; let it stand an hour; then add a full pound of pulverized sugar, the peel of one lemon and the juice of three, half a pint of wine, and in warm weather, a quart, in cold, three pints of boiling water; set it away to cool; a little cinnamon or a few cloves may sometimes be added.

PEARL CAKE.—One cupful sugar, two tablespoonfuls butter, one cupful of flour, one-half cupful of corn-starch, the whites of three eggs, quarter teaspoonful soda, half teaspoonful cream-tartar, half cupful sweet milk; flavor with vanilla.—LILLIE.

CHOCOLATE JUMBLES.—One cupful of butter, two cupfuls sugar, three cupfuls flour, four eggs, two cupfuls of grated chocolate, one teaspoonful soda, one teaspoonful cream-tartar, a little salt; roll thin.

GINGER SNAPS.—One pint of molasses and one cupful of lard boiled together; when cold add one tablespoonful of ginger, one of soda, flour to roll; roll thin and bake.

GINGER COOKIES.—One cupful of sugar, one of lard, one of water, one teaspoonful of soda, flour to roll thin, with or without spices.

FRIED CAKES.—One cupful of sugar, one cupful of milk, one egg, three tablespoonfuls of melted lard, one teaspoonful of soda, flour to roll; fry in hot lard to a rich brown.

BAKING POWDER.—Eight ounces of tartaric acid, nine ounces of carbonate of soda, ten ounces of cornstarch, in pound package; mix.—H. H. H.

WHIPPED CREAM.—Beat the yolks of five fresh eggs and half a pound of powdered sugar until very light and white; put one pint of milk and one ounce of isinglass into a saucepan and boil 10 minutes, stirring continually; flavor with vanilla and lemon mixed, or any other flavoring; pour the milk on the eggs and sugar; put on the fire, stir well together, but do not let boil; pass through a fine hair sieve into a round dish, when cold set on ice, add two liquor-glasses of Maraschino; keep stirring rapidly all the time; when it begins to thicken stir into it a pint of cream, whipped to a froth; put into a mold on the ice until you wish to use it.—AUNT ADDIE.

CHOCOLATE CARAMELS.—Boil one quart of molasses, and, when nearly done, add one-half cake of chocolate finely shaved and a piece of butter the size of an egg.—MARIAN.

ROMAN PUNCH.—Grate the yellow rind of four lemons and two oranges in two pounds of white sugar, adding their juice; cover and let stand until the next day, when strain through a sieve, adding a bottle of champagne and the whites of eight eggs, beaten very stiff; freeze as you do ice cream.—AUNT ADDIE.

TO PICKLE CARROTS.—Scrape, and boil them tender in water and a little salt; cut in oblong pieces, or any fanciful shape; pour cold vinegar over them, and let stand 24 hours. Are nice served with green cucumber pickles.—AUNT ADDIE.

TO MIX COFFEE.—One gill of coffee to one pint of water, and a piece of isinglass dissolved in water, will answer to mix the coffee with if you have not a fresh egg, or half a teaspoonful of condensed egg.—AUNT ADDIE.

USEFUL FAMILY HINTS.

SKELETON LEAVES.—They should not be picked when young and tender; June and July are generally the best months to gather them for the purpose; the edges of the leaves should be perfect, also the ribs and veins, which can be ascertained by holding them up to the light; some of the yellow Autumnal leaves, and dark tinted also, with the seed vessels of different plants, can be used with good effect on the grouping.—RIDGEWOOD.

TO DRESS RABBIT-SKINS.—Sprinkle with salt for two days, letting it lay exposed to the air, so as to gather plenty of moisture; shake or scrape off what is loose, and rub on powdered alum—a couple of teaspoonfuls for a rabbit or muskrat-skin or a pint for a deer-skin; rub a small thin skin, at the end of the third day's exposure, with alum until it is pretty dry. A large thick skin must be "alumned" a week. Skins will be white, and not red, on the under side when cured by this process, and make excellent rugs or garments, as no poison is used.—NEWBURYPORT.

TO WASH CHAMOIS-SKIN GARMENTS.—Make thick suds of lo.ke water and white castile soap; wash garment in it, and rinse in water containing a little soap. Rub no soap directly on the garment. Stretch repeatedly while drying.—SUBSCRIBER.

CHEAP BLUING.—One-fourth ounces of oxalic acid, one-half ounce of Prussian blue; dissolve in a quart of soft water; then strain.—H. H. H.

CARE OF CANARIES.—A little cayenne pepper sprinkled on a piece of bread is good for a canary bird who has cold; also a little saffron in the drinking-cup of water. Salt is also good for them at any time.—AUNT ADDIE.

TO RELIEVE CANARIES OF ASTHMA.—Feed with hard-boiled egg, pulverized sprinkled with red pepper, and let them have plenty of sweet apple, also plant some bird-seed in a saucer of earth, keeping it very moist; when the seeds sprout give the green leaves to the birds.

IN USING SCRAP BOOKS.—Dampen one side of leaf, paste the scrap and apply it to other side of leaf; place thick blotting paper each side of leaf; close the book and press under weight till dry. A damp scrap applied to a dry page will usually draw it out of shape.

A CLEAN PASTE.—Two parts gum tragacanth and one part powdered gum arabic; cover with cold water till dissolved, then reduce to desired consistency with same. A few drops of carbonic acid will prevent souring.

TO DESTROY VERMIN.—Croton bugs and red ants can be driven off by sprinkling the floor with pulverized borax, and leaving a place for them to get out; to kill them, mix borax with sugar, so they will eat it. For ants or other vermin, wash the shelves with a strong solution of borax; then sprinkle the same with borax mixed with sugar. When whitewashing your room, add a tablespoonful of pulverized borax to each pailful of lime.—READER.

MILITARY GOSSIP.

Battery B, Artillery, Major John Keim commanding, will drill at its Armory, Elm street, next Wednesday evening.

Brig. Gen. James Jourdan, commanding the Fifth Brigade, Brooklyn, has appointed Mr. John Y. Culver, Engineer of Prospect Park, to the position of Engineer on his staff.

Lieut. Albert E. Osborn, Commissary of Subsistence in the Forty-ninth Regiment, Auburn, was unanimously elected Lieutenant Colonel of that command last Tuesday evening.

The Saratoga Rifle Club has accepted a challenge from Ballston Spa Rifle Club to shoot a match on Thursday, Feb. 22. The conditions are three men in each team; distance, 200 yards; off hand; three sighting and ten scoring shots.

The Ninth Regiment, Col. James R. Hitchcock commanding, will give a concert and hop at the armory next Tuesday evening. At an election for Second Lieutenant in Company G, last Friday evening, Sergt. Peter J. Babcock was chosen to fill the office.

The Washington Grey Troop Cavalry, Capt. L. T. Baker commanding, will hold its forty-fourth annual reception at its armory, next Thursday evening. The entertainments given annually by this troop always receive the support of its friends, and afford opportunities for a reunion of the veteran members of this command.

The Forty-seventh Regiment, Brooklyn, Col. D. E. Austen commanding, will assemble at its armory for drill in street firing movements, on Friday evening, March 20. The Gatling Battery of Artillery will drill with the infantry, and the occasion will be an extremely interesting one to military men. Col. Austen announces that the drill will be given in special honor of Major Gen. E. L. Molineaux, to whom his work is specially dedicated.

The non-commissioned staff association of the Fourteenth Regiment, Brooklyn, will give its third annual invitation ball, at Gallatin Hall, No. 522 Fulton street, in that city, next Thursday evening. The committee of arrangements having this matter in charge, is thoroughly competent to entertain its guests, and will no doubt discharge its duties to the entire satisfaction of the large number of guests who have signified their intention to be present on that occasion.

The Separate Troop Cavalry, Major Karl Klein, commanding, held a dismounted drill at its new armory, No. 9 West Thirteenth street, last Wednesday night. As the troop consecrated a number of recent recruits, and was somewhat rusty withal, Major Klein refrained from ordering any but simple marching movements, and sabre exercise. Forty men assembled, and were drilled steadily for two hours. The troop will drill in mounted movements next Wednesday evening.

Brig. Gen. Frederick Vilmar, commanding the Second Brigade, has received and accepted an invitation from Col. Vose, commanding the Seventy-first Regiment, to review his command on Washington's Birthday. Lieut. Col. William H. King, Inspector of this brigade, was assigned to that duty by Adjutant General Townsend, upon the disbandment of the Sixth Regiment, in which the former was Lieutenant Colonel. Having served much longer than the regular term, he now petitions the Adjutant General for his release.

Company G, Twenty-third Regiment, Brooklyn, Capt. J. G. Story commanding, will hold an election to fill vacancies in its roll of noncommissioned officers on Friday evening, March 6th. The regimental rifle club contested a match at the armory range last Saturday evening. The leading scores were as follows: Lieut. G. H. Pettit, 40; Ordnance Sergt. Charles E. Bryant, 38; Capt. W. G. Burton, 37; Private Farr, 35; Private Jones, 29, and Private Backus, 28. Capt. A. H. Williams, of Company C, has assumed command, his leave of absence having expired. This command held one of its enjoyable band concerts at the armory last evening.

The Board of Examination of the Twelfth Regiment have passed the following non-commissioned officers in Company K, Capt. Edward Fackner's command; Sergeants—John N. Brenzel, George W. Griffiths, and Harry Coullarde; Corporals—John B. Feeney, George B. Katen, Rudolph Yeoni, and John Frauzel. The right wing of this regiment will drill under command of Lieut. Col. S. Y. R. Conger to-day (Friday), and Major W. G. Wilson will drill the left wing on the following evening. The regiment gave a pleasant reception at its armory last Tuesday evening. There were representatives present of the Seventh, Ninth, Twenty-second, and Seventy-first Regiments. Over 600 tickets were taken at the door.

Abraham Lincoln Post, No. 13, Grand Army of the Republic, dedicated its new hall, No. 112 West Twenty-third street, last Tuesday evening, its old quarters having been destroyed by fire. The officers were installed by Gen. John Cochrane, after which followed a musical and literary entertainment. Among the members present were Gen. George S. Greene, Gen. Henry A. Barnum, Col. John Wiseman, Dr. Isaac I. Hayes, and Julian Scott, the soldier artist. The following officers were installed: Commander, Joseph Forbes; Senior Vice Commander, George A. S. Kulings; Quartermaster, F. Guver; Officer of the Day, E. Drummond; Officer of the Guard, John H. Tyson, and Sergeant Major, J. A. Ruffner.

Col. Frederick Unbekant, commanding the Eleventh Regiment, has appointed Capt. Otto Heinzman, formerly of Company I in this command, to an "honorary" position on his staff. Dr. J. Nieglutsch has been appointed Assistant Surgeon in this command. Capt. Frederick Fleischoen and First Lieut. Gustave Schumann have resigned. The right wing of this command drilled last Monday night, parading four companies of 16 files front, and the left wing (qualified in a similar manner on the following evening. Col. Unbekant was in command on both occasions. This command will hold its annual reception at the Armory, Centre and Grand streets, next Thursday evening, at 9:30 o'clock. On the same evening the regiment will be reviewed by Gen. Vilmar and staff.

Gen. James Tanner, Chairman of the Committee on Ways and Means of the Grand Army of the Republic, Department of New-York, has issued a circular letter to the several posts requesting them to send to the Treasurer, Col. John F. Henry, No. 8 College Place, in this City, all the money they may have collected for the fund provided for the erection of a "Soldier's Home," at Bath, N. Y. The home comprises an eligible plot of ground containing 240 acres, and was secured at a cost of $20,500. This amount and about $2,000 besides was contributed by the citizens of the town of Bath. During the past year $37,000 has been collected for the purpose of erecting buildings on the property, and Gen. Tanner says that only about $6,000 is required to complete the main structure. The improvements are under the work. An effort will be made to lay the cornerstone of the "Home" on July 4, next.

Gatling Battery, artillery, Brooklyn, Capt. John A. Edwards commanding, is under orders to assemble at its armory in fatigue uniform on Wednesday next and Wednesday, Feb. 28, for instruction in street-firing movements. The order (No. 1) directing this command to assemble for drill on Feb. 21 and 23 and March 7 has been countermanded. At a recent meeting of this command the following officers were elected: Sergt. Charles Beebe, Second Lieutenant, vice Dolby, resigned; F. E. Tower, First Sergeant, vice Bowne, warrant vacated; Corp. W. B. Bowley, Sergeant, third section, vice Mcintyre, promoted; Corp. E. J. Whitlock, Jr., Sergeant, fourth section, vice Tower, promoted; privates Charles Dorn, A. G. Jenkins, and W. H. Ponderghast, Corporals. Private J. J. Moos has been appointed Veterinary Surgeon in this command.

The right wing of the Twenty-second Regiment had a drill at its armory last Friday evening. Line was formed with five companies of twelve files front. Neither Col. Porter nor Lieut. Col. Camp were present, and as Major Horsfall had not received his commission, the command devolved upon Capt. Samuel Moore Smith, senior line officer. Major Robert Lenox Belknap and Capt. Herman Oelrichs, of Gen. Ward's staff, were present to witness the drill and to make an official report of the manner of its execution. The left wing of this command will drill next Friday evening, and on Friday, March 9, and the right wing will have another drill on Friday, March 2. Private Josiah Hedden, of Company H, has been promoted Commissary Sergeant. Privates James P. Kenworthy, of Company A, and Henry M. Howell, of Company F, have been elected Corporals in their respective companies. Arrangements are in active progress by the Music Committee to give another grand review, dress parade, and promenade concert. The entertainment will probably take place at the regimental armory on Wednesday, March 14.

Lieut. Col. F. W. Obernier, commanding the Twenty-eighth Regiment, Brooklyn, has issued an order directing the commissioned officers of his command to assemble at the the regimental armory, Bushwick avenue and Stagg street, E. D., to-morrow evening, at 8 o'clock, for drill and instruction. The following officers have been appointed to constitute a Board of Examination for investigation of the capabilities of non-commissioned officers in this command. Capt. George Giehl, Capt. Henry Osterman, and First Lieut. August Kasemon. This board will convene as the armory on the third Wednesday in each month. Commandants of companies are directed to forward to the Adjutant the names of all non-commissioned officers-elect immediately after election, also the names of those who have not yet sustained an examination. No warrants will be issued from regimental head-quarters to non-commissioned officers who do not receive a favorable report from this board, and they will not be permitted to assume the duties pertaining to the offices to which they may have been elected until they receive their warrants. Company C paraded in full uniform for inspection at its armory, in East New-York, last Wednesday evening. Lieut. Col. Obernier formally announces in orders the acceptance by the commander in chief, of the resignations of Col. Joseph Burger and Major Anthony Wills, and expresses his regret at losing the assistance of these officers, who have been his comrades since the year 1857." The officers of this command are under orders to assemble at the regimental armory, next Wednesday evening, to hold an election to fill the vacancy caused by the resignation of Col. Joseph Burger. Lieut. Col. Obernier is the sole candidate for the office, and will undoubtedly receive a unanimous vote. Second Lieut. Charles M. Hartman has been promoted First Lieutenant of Company G, and George J. Hoepter has been elected Second Lieutenant in the same company.

The following officers have received commissions in the First and Second Divisions: Eleventh Brigade—Morison Hoyt, Aide de Camp; Battery B, artillery, Second Division, Second Lieutenant, Louis Woerner; Seventh Regiment, —First Lieutenant, C. Graham Bacon, Adjutant; Captain, Henry J. Hayden; Twelfth Regiment—Major Arthur T. Hills, Surgeon; Twenty-third Regiment—First Lieutenant, Frank E. Westlake; Second Lieutenant, T. B. Adams; Thirty-second Regiment—Col. John Rueger; Lieutenant Colonel, Louis Bossert; Major, Louis Finkelmeier; Captain, Christopher Lutz; Major, Adolf Orth; First Lieut. S. R. Blumke, and Quartermaster Henry Nape, Jr. During the same period resignations have been accepted as follows: Bache McE. Emmet, Twelfth Regiment; Col. Joseph Burger and Major Anthony Wiels, Twenty-eighth Regiment; Adjutant James A. Smith and First Lieut. Thomas Gesten, Fourteenth Regiment; Second Lieut. James L. Cook, Eighth Regiment; Capt. H. H. Fleddermann, First Lieut. H. W. Schmidt, First Lieut. Frederick Freudentnal, Second Lieuts. D. Bobjre and William Muller, of the Third Regiment Cavalry.

Major Arthur B. Leech, Captain of the Irish rifle team in the late international matches at Creedmoor, has written a letter to Col. C. B. Mitchell, President of the Amateur Rifle Club, of this City, in reference to another international match, as follows:

DUBLIN, No. 49 RUTLAND SQUARE, Saturday, Feb. 3, 1877.

MY DEAR SIR: I have pleasure in submitting to you the following resolution passed at a council meeting of the Irish Rifle Association, held at the Mansion House, Dublin, on the 22d ult., the Right Honorable the Lord Mayor in the chair: That an invitation be addressed to the Amateur Rifle Club of New-York to send a team to Ireland in the present year to shoot a match on same conditi as as Irish-American matches of 1874, 1875, and 1876. I have peculiar pleasure in forwarding this resolution, and I hope it will lead to another of those friendly contests which have in the last three years been a prolific source of much good feeling and honorable rivalry between two nationalities connected otherwise by many agreeable associations. The month of June is suggested as the most suitable for this match, as it will enable those gentlemen whom we hope to welcome as your representatives to take part in the annual competition of the Irish Rifle Association, and subsequently to visit the camp of the National Rifle Association at Wimbledon. I am, dear Sir, yours very faithful and sincere friend, ARTHUR B. LEECH.

The commissioned officers of the Thirteenth Regiment, Col. Philip H. Briggs commanding, are under orders to assemble, in fatigue uniform, at the regimental armory next Saturday evening at 8 P. M., for theoretical drill and instruction. The regiment will assemble, in fatigue uniform, at the regimental armory, for drill and instruction, on Wednesday, Feb. 28; Monday, March 12, and Tuesday, March 27, at 7:45 P. M. In relation to the case of Lieut. George E. Stevenson, of this command, Col. Briggs publishes the following paragraph in orders: "The recommendations of the Military Examining Board, made at its session held in the City of New-York, at the office of the Inspector General, pursuant to the provisions of Special Order No. 171, current series, of these headquarters, are hereby approved, and the commission of First Lieut. George E. Stevenson is vacated, he having failed to pass a satisfactory examination before the board; and the said Stevenson ceases to be an officer in the National Guard, from this date, (Feb. 8,) and a new election, to fill the vacancy created, is immediately ordered." At the annual meeting of Company C, in this command, the following civil officers were elected for the ensuing year: President, Capt. J. Pedroncelli; Recording Secretary, W. F. Etherington; Treasurer, E. Darveau. Committees were appointed as follows: Finance, R. Auerbach, G. H. Price, and P. Franz; Recruiting, G. Faiteuns, G. E. Reed, J. J. Lowrey, and C. E. Hoeg; Armory, W. C. Franz, W. C. Snyder, W. F. Etherington, and W. J. Peters; Court-martial, W. L. Franz, G. E. Reed, Darveau, and G. H. Price.

Col. Vose, commanding the Seventy-first Regiment, has determined to have an out-door parade of his command on Washington's Birthday, omitting the ceremonies at the State Arsenal or the Hippodrome, and in the evening a reception will be given at the regimental armory, Broadway and Thirty-fifth street. The regiment has, therefore, been ordered to assemble at the armory, in full uniform, on Thursday, Feb. 22, at 1 P. M. Line of march will be taken to the plaza in Union Square, where the regiment will pass in review before Brig. Gen. Vilmar, after which it will return immediately to its armory, thus making the parade of short duration. Col. Vose says, in orders: "This is deemed the most fitting manner in which to celebrate the day we all delight to honor. Your Commander expects to meet every regiment parade with full ranks, as it is a legal holiday, and no excuse for absence can be made." The right wing of this command paraded five companies of 12 files, for drill by Lieut. Col. Chaddock, last Monday evening. The movements executed included marching in column of fours, into battle front; wheeling into column of companies, and marching on the first company. Wheeling into a column of fours, the command was marched to the right oblique, and subsequently to the left oblique. The manual of arms was executed in a rather inferior manner, and showed a lack of proper company instruction in that respect. The time occupied in manipulation was not uniform among the companies, and it would be well to fix upon some standard by which uniformity among the companies might be secured.

BLESSING THE WATERS.

The Belgrade correspondent of the London Times writes under date of Jan. 19 as follows: "Yesterday the annual ceremony of 'blessing the waters' was performed by the Archbishop on the bank of the River Save—a rite which is observed in all countries where the Greek faith predominates. About 9:30 in the morning the service was held in the cathedral, at 10 the garrison of Belgrade, with the military band, marched down to the river side and formed in line opposite a stand erected on the quay; about half an hour afterward a procession marched from the cathedral to the stand. The column bore four very large square banners with figures of the saints painted upon them, a canopy, under which marched the Archbishop, and a number of rods surmounted by discs of metal surrounded with candles, was placed upon the stand, with a barrel of river water in front of it. The services at the altar were long, and were interspersed with chants and the firing of artillery from the old fortress. At the conclusion of the services the Archbishop stepped down from the stand, and with a large brush communicated sprinkling the water from the barrel over the adjacent crowd. His Grace then proceeded to sprinkle the Servian Army, and many of the populace ran to the edge of the river and filled bottles and jugs with the newly-consecrated waters. It is usual for several people to plunge into the river at this stage of the proceedings, but this year this feat was not performed, an omission which I suppose will be attributed by the ecclesiastical authorities to the 'progress of modern infidelity.' After the sprinkling was completed the procession marched back to the cathedral."

EPIDEMIC AMONG SCOTCH HORSES.

The Pall Mall Gazette says: "A strange epidemic among horses has made its appearance in some parts of Scotland, and there are, it is stated, more than 500 horses at the present moment suffering from its effects in Edinburgh. The disease commences with great weakness and swelling of the eyes and limbs, the left eye in the majority of cases being affected more than the right. There is also frequently intestinal disorder, and spots appear on the tongue as though from blood poisoning. The attack lasts on the average from 5 to 12 days. Opinions appear to differ as to whether it is infectious or not; at any rate, it is spreading rapidly, and affects horses indiscriminately in all classes of stables. One case has occurred of a cow suffering from it, and, as the animal was stalled beside a pony which had also suffered from it, there seems reason to fear that the disease must be infectious. On the other hand, instances are mentioned of horses escaping the disease altogether, although occupying stables where several other horses were attacked. The dampness of the atmosphere which has lately prevailed is supposed to have originated the epidemic, and indeed the abnormal state of the weather during the last six weeks is quite sufficient to account for any amount of sickness, not only in the stable, but also in the kennel."

QUEER DELUSION.

The Middletown Press of Saturday says: "Augustus C. F. Fritz, of Stanhope, who has been confined in the Morristown Jail since October last, on a charge of opening graves in the South Stanhope Cemetery, has been adjudged insane, and ordered to the Morris Plains Asylum. Fritz is about 40 years of age, and buried under the belief that his wife and child had been murdered and buried at Stanhope, where he resides. He dug up some graves under this delusion, and, being caught, was sent to jail. His wife and child are both alive and visited him in the jail, but he still persists in his delusion."

VERMONT REFORM CLUB CONVENTION.

A State convention of Reformed Men's Clubs of Vermont is to be held in Burlington, Feb. 21, 22, and 23, at which will be considered the practicability of forming a State organization. Good speakers are promised to be in attendance. Each club in the State is requested to send one delegate at large, and one additional delegate for every 50 members or fractional part thereof, to be provided with proper credentials. Other members are also invited as visitors. Return checks will be given over the lines of the Central Vermont Railroad.

VISCOUNT ALTHORP'S MEMOIRS.

Lord Spencer, better known as Lord Althorp, was, although comparatively little known on this side of the Atlantic, a statesman whose influence upon the history of his country was greater than that of many whose names are familiar as household words, and had there been a dozen nobles such as he and his friends in France in 1779, it is likely enough that the house of Capet might be as firmly established there to-day as that of Guelph is in England. The Spencer family has for centuries been settled at Althorp, in Northamptonshire, which continues to be the family seat. Charles Spencer, fifth Earl of Sunderland, succeeded, on the death of his maternal aunt, Henrietta, Duchess of Marlborough—in her own right being daughter and heiress of the first Duke—to the Dukedom of Marlborough; and his younger brother, Hon. John Spencer, then became the possessor of the patrimonial estates in Northamptonshire, and succeeded also to very large property under the will of his grandmother, the celebrated Duchess of Marlborough.

The eldest son of Hon. John Spencer, of Althorp, succeeded his father in 1746, and in 1765 was created an Earl. He died in 1783, leaving several children, one of whom was the celebrated Georgiana, Duchess of Devonshire, the foremost political lady of her day, to whom Macaulay, in his well-known essay describing the trial of Warren Hastings, alluded, when he wrote, "and there those ladies, whose lips, more persuasive than those of even Fox himself, had carried the Westminster election against palace and Treasury, shone around Georgiana, Duchess of Devonshire."

The first Earl Spencer will be long remembered in Northamptonshire for his share in the most expensive and violent contest ever recorded in election annals. "Lords Halifax, Northampton, and Spencer pitted their candidates against each other, being severally Osborn, Rodney, and Howe. The polling lasted 14 days, but the canvassing had begun long before; and though the number of real electors did not exceed 930, 1,149 votes were given. Horton, Castle Ashby, (Lord Northampton's,) and Althorp, were thrown open to all voters, and when they had drained the cellars of Horton of all the old port, and Lord Halifax had to place his claret before them, they declared that they would never vote for a man who gave them sour port, and went over in a body to Castle Ashby. The election was referred to a scrutiny of the House of Commons, which was then a committee of the whole House, and for six weeks during the inquiry 60 covers were daily laid at Spencer House, for members whose names were taken down. It resulted in the numbers being equal, and was finally decided by a toss. Lord Spencer winning and nominating a man then out in India. It is said to have cost Lord Spencer £100,000, and each of the other Lords £150,000; incredible sums, if they are to be doubled to express the present value. Lord Halifax never recovered the blow. Lord Northampton cut down his trees, and sold his furniture at Compton Winyates, went abroad for the rest of his life, and died in Switzerland. There is a sealed box at Castle Ashby, marked 'Election Papers,' which no one of the present generation has had the courage to open." The first Earl was succeeded by his son, who was the pupil of the celebrated Sir William Jones. This nobleman was for several years First Lord of the Admiralty, and took a considerable share in public affairs. He is further well known as the collector of the finest private library in England, most of which collection remains in the hands of his grandson, the present Earl, who was Lord Lieutenant of Ireland in Mr. Gladstone's last Ministry.

The subject of the present memoir was born in 1782, at Spencer House, St. James', a grand-seigneur mansion which still holds its own as one of the finest residences in London, a few yards south of the poet Rogers' whilom home, and divided from the palace of the Duke of Sutherland, Stafford House, by the magnificent mansion built by that nobleman's accomplished uncle, Lord Ellesmere. Lord and Lady Spencer appear to have been too much engrossed with society to pay much attention to their son, and the words of Bishop Sherlock that "When parents neglect the care of their children, they are left to pick up notions and opinions from others—perhaps the footman, who oftentimes is a constant companion to the heir," were literally illustrated in the case of Lord Althorp, whose "first impressions of duty and knowledge were derived from a Swiss footman of his mother. This person, though himself imperfectly acquainted with English, taught him to read, and was his sole instructor and intimate associate until he went to school." It must be admitted that his pupil did him credit. Here is a specimen of his correspondence at 7 years old:

DEAR PAPA: I went to Brington Hill this morning, and caught four rabbits, and there was a good many people, and I did not know who they all were. We threw off at 10 o'clock. Tartar and Bowler and Punch and Turpin did very well, but Jenny's puppy did not do well, for she cried at the bushes. Fanny did very well too. I rode upon Castlebar, [his mother was daughter of Lord Lucan, of Castlebar, Ireland,] and Ned Corns was behind; John Townshend and James walked by me, and I went at a gallop, and had good sport. When you come back there is to be a race in which you are to run, and so shall John Townshend, and Jack Corns, and Peter. I am to ride upon Ginger and you shall ride upon Cowslip. I got these horses at the races at Northampton, and yours is a very good one. You have been a long time away. So no more.

JACK SPENCER (Viscount Althorp).

Docketed by his father. Received 28th Oct., 1789.

In his letter may be seen the germ of the famous "Master of the Pytchley" of the future. At page 142 we read:

"His father and grandfather had kept the Pytchley hounds in a style that made the hunt the pride of the squires in the Midland districts. The kennels had been built at Althorp Park as well as at Pytchley, and the hunting was equally divided between the two districts. When the hounds were at Althorp, sub-minded hospitality prevailed both at Lord Spencer's and the principal seats in the neighborhood, and when they removed to the clubhouse at Pytchley Hall, (a fine old manor-house,) many country gentlemen actually shut up their houses and removed with them."

Lord Althorp, when about 30, became master of the hounds, and earned great distinction in that capacity.

"During eight months of the year he made it his sole employment, as if he had no other vocation, and could think of nothing else. Many years later, when he had become leader of the opposition in the House of Commons, he once went with a party to Deville, the craniologist. On his return he said that Deville knew nothing about the matter, for he had entirely missed and passed over the leading passion. A friend asked what that passion was. Lord Althorp replied: 'To see sporting dogs hunt.' He had then given up hunting, and he said he dare not trust himself even to take an occasional look at the hounds, for if he once began he could not help going in to it desperately."

"A pack of such hounds, and a set of such men, This a shrewd chance if ever you meet with again."

He entered Parliament when 22 as member for Okehampton, and stood two years after for the University of Cambridge, in conjunction with the late Lords Lansdowne and Palmerston, when the former was returned by a large majority. The same year he was returned, after a very severe contest, for Northamptonshire, which he continued to represent until his accession to the peerage. In those days boys went to school very early, and Lord Althorp—for so we shall call him throughout this notice—was under Byron's old master, Dr. Drury, at Harrow, when he was scarcely 8. He "was in no way distinguished at school." His school-friend, afterward Bishop of Worcester, told Sir D. Le Marchert that he seemed born for a country life, and that it was his wish to know what this was in the time of the Romans which led him to study Virgil's Georgics. All athletic exercises had charms for him, and in after-years he was conspicuous as a lover of prize-fighting. When he first settled in London he made a real study of boxing, and had many matches with his quondam schoolfellow, Lord Byron. Even when a Minister he sometimes startled his colleagues by a display of knowledge on this subject, by way of illustration, which they could not help thinking rather misapplied. Referring to a visit to him at Wiseton, the late Speaker of the House of Commons said:

"Something was said about stabbing. Lord Spencer observed that in his opinion stabbing arose from the manly habit of boxing having been discouraged. The pros and cons of boxing were discussed. Lord Spencer became eloquent. He said his conviction of the advantages of boxing was so strong that he had been seriously considering whether it was not a duty he owed to the public to go and attend every prize-fight which took place, and so encourage the noble science to the extent of his power. I have said he became eloquent. It was the one time in my life, in the House of Commons or out of it, that I heard him speak with eagerness and almost with passion. He gave us an account of prize-fights which he had attended; how he had seen Mendoza knocked down for the first five or six rounds by Humphreys, and seeming almost beat until the Jews got their money on, when, a hint being given him, he began in earnest, and soon turned the tables. He described the fight between Sully and "the Chicken;" how he rode down to Brickhill; how he was loitering about the inn-door, when a barouche and four drove up with Lord Byron and a party and Jackson the trainer; how they all dined together, and how pleasant it had been; then the fight the next day; the men stripping; the intense excitement; the sparring; then the first round; the attitude of the men—it was really worthy of Homer."

Lord Althorp at 32 thought, as so many men have thought about themselves, that he should never marry, but within a few months found himself the husband of a Yorkshire heiress, Miss Acklom, who having become, on a very slight acquaintance, deeply interested in him, contrived to let him know it—"a hazardous experiment, only to be justified by the result, which in this instance was a very satisfactory one, for a more attached and united couple perhaps never existed." Lady Althorp owned a most unprepossessing property called Wiseton, for which she entertained an intense affection, however, and for her sake her husband learned to love it better than any other place. After her death, in June, 1818, (they were married in 1814,) he repaired to Wiseton, where he remained for months in the deepest seclusion. His chief occupation was in reading the Bible. "At first he was perplexed with doubts and difficulties, the natural result of a previous (comparative) neglect of religion; but these gradually yielded to an humble and earnest search after truth, and he was able to write to his sister, Lady Lyttelton, (afterward governess of Queen Victoria's children,) that nothing but Christian faith and religious feelings could make him endure to live." His grief for his wife was intense, and he never was the same man after her death. When, in after years, a young friend mentioned to him his engagement, he wished him all happiness, but added, "The pain I have suffered from the loss of my wife has been such as no happiness could compensate." He never allowed any change to be made in his wife's rooms, and during the first year of his solitude her garden was his only out-of-door interest. To her mother, a by no means amiable character, he wrote every day.

Throughout his career Lord Althorp was the foremost advocate of liberal and enlightened measures. In 1810 he attacked sinecures. In 1812 he opposed the additional tax on leather, because he thought that its burden would fall chiefly on the poor, and especially on agricultural laborers. In April, 1815, he moved an inquiry into the Prince Regent's expenditure. In 1816 he moved for a committee to ascertain what diminution in the public expenditure had taken place since 1798. In 1817 he deprecated the maintenance of a large standing army. In 1820 he attempted to ameliorate the Insolvent Debtors' act. In 1823 he opposed a renewal of the Irish Insurrection act. In 1824 he endeavored to obtain a committee of inquiry as to the general state of Ireland, all coercive measures against which he vehemently deprecated. But his great claim to a place in the hearts of his countrymen rests on his services in promoting and carrying the Reform bill of 1831, the greatest political event in the history of England since the revolution of 1688, which placed William III. on the British throne.

Early in 1830 there were omens of the coming storm:

"An angry feeling pervaded the lower classes, showing itself in the rural districts by incendiary fires, which the peasantry either caused or refused to extinguish, and in the large towns by societies threatening still more extensive destruction. The Birmingham Political Union, the prolific parent of th se societies, had originated in a league among some of the leading people of that town to obtain a repeal of Peel's Currency bill, and their first public meeting in January, 1830, was professedly with this object. The principal parties in the movement happened to be Tories. Their organization of local committees under the control of a central body was admirably executed, and they saw it with great concern soon diverted to mere political purposes by the excitement resulting from the French and Belgian Revolutions. Parliamentary reform then became the watchword of an immense body of men, increasing in number, and therefore in power, with fearful rapidity, whose pretensions to a share in the administration of public affairs were incompatible with the existing state of society. From one end of the country to the other a vague expectation of approaching evils inspired general alarm. An intelligent lady, the daughter of a French writer of note who had figured in the Revolution, was present at one of the Birmingham meetings, and observed to a well-known gentleman, 'I have this day been reminded of the first French Revolution. Your country is on the eve of great political changes. I noticed almo t the entire company to be men under 40. So it was in Paris. You are a young man. Take your part. Place will soon be wanted.' They were indeed, and found more assisted the help of State to weather the storm than Lord Althorp."

The session of 1830-31 opened Nov. 2, and on the first night the Whigs drew from the Duke of Wellington, then Prime Minister, his declaration that he would oppose any change in the present system of parliamentary representation. The agitation spread rapidly, and presently the Government being beaten in the House of Commons, the Duke of Wellington resigned, and was succeeded by Lord Grey, who had wished Lord Althorp to be head of the Cabinet, but he positively declined. The rejection of the Reform bill by a Tory House of Commons, brought matters to a crisis, and in October, 1831, Lord Althorp wrote to his father:

"We are in a state of high excitement. Hitherto all has been quiet here, but the great meeting in Mary-le-bone has adjourned to Hyde Park, and they are there so near the Duke of Wellington's house, [whose windows, ever after protected by iron shutters, for many years always drawn down, they smashed,] that I think there is considerable danger. * * * The speech I have to make to-night is terrific: one word in its wrong place may produce the most disastrous consequences. If we can weather the next fortnight without a convulsion everything will then do."

A majority of 131, on a resolution in favor of reform, moved by Lord Althorp a few days later, assured the Ministers of the fidelity of their supporters and brightened their prospects.

When Parliament, whose sittings had been protracted till Oct. 20, adjourned, all parties had agreed on the necessity of a Reform bill, but the country continued in a highly excited state. Riots had taken place at Nottingham, Derby, and Bristol, and at the last-named place assumed a very serious character.

"Bristol," he writes under date of November, 1831, "is at last got under. There was a great escape at the Post Office there. The money in the office on Sunday night was £300,000; but the men were clever enough to slip away with it in a back chaise without being perceived, and it was put in the Post Office at Bath."

Later in the month the Birmingham Union came to such a pitch of boldness as to call a meeting to organize the non-payment of taxes, at which their members were required to appear armed. The Duke of Wellington at the same time wrote to the King that he had it from authority which he could not doubt that the Union had made a contract with an eminent gun-maker in London for a large supply of arms. During these audacious acts of the unions, no disposition to give way appeared among the Tory peers, though the public agitation increased. Lord Brougham (Chancellor) and Lord Durham proposed to settle the matter by asking the King to create no fewer than 60 peers, but Lords Grey and Althorp thought such a number far too unsparing, and set to work to see whether they could modify the projected measure in such a way as to coax the more moderate Tories into gulping it down. In December the House met again, and notice of bringing in the Reform bill was given for the 12th of that month. In the interval some Tory peers intimated a wish to confer with Lord Grey, with a view to a compromise. This negotiation originated, Sir Denis Le Marchant believes, with Mr. Charles Greville, of Diary fame, "a moderate politician, always favorable to progress, and singularly free from prejudice." It proved to Lord Grey and his colleagues the existence of a party in the Lords alive to the danger of rejecting the bill. Earl Russell, the "Lord John" of those days, introduced the bill in the House of Commons for the third time on 12th December, and the Government got a majority of 162 for the second reading. The subsequent passage of the bill was, however, beset with a sea of difficulties up to the motion for its third reading on 19th March, 1831, when, after a debate which lasted three nights, in which the leading statesmen of both sides eminently distinguished themselves, the House divided, and the motion was carried by a majority of 116. The bill finally passed without a division. Unquestionably the triumph was largely due to Lord Althorp. It has been the peculiar glory of England that in critical times men have never been wanting in the highest class to throw themselves heart and soul into a popular cause from the purest and loftiest motives of patriotism. Never was there a stronger exemplification of it than in the case of Lord Althorp, and here, coupled with his temper, judgment, and high personal character, was the source of his peculiar influences. Lord Grey pressed a peerage on him to take charge of the bill in the House of Lords, and the design was abandoned, not from any hesitation or unwillingness on his part, but from the difficulty of finding a successor to him in the House of Commons. Probably this intense work and turmoil were grateful to Lord Althorp as causing him temporarily to forget his grief for the loss of his wife.

In March the bill went up to the Lords, and the second reading was fixed for the 9th of April.

"In this interval the canvassing for votes on both sides was unprecedented. Lord Coventry, who from various causes, had mixed but little in society, gave an amusing account of the solicitation that had been made to him. 'I never before,' he said, 'was fully aware of the usefulness of indecision. It has raised me quite to importance. I have received more invitations to dinner this week than I had for years, and my hand has been squeezed by men who had long scarcely condescended to notice me.'"

The second reading in the Lords was carried by a majority of nine, but presently the Ministers were defeated in committee. They then determined to resign, unless the King consented to create a sufficient number of peers to insure a working majority, and accordingly did resign. Then came another period of intense excitement. The acount of the vote of the Lords was received as a public calamity. The bells of many churches and chapels tolled the whole night. The General in command of the Northern District wrote that he was wholly incapable of resistance in case of insurrection.

"Strickland," says Sir Denis, "showed me a letter from some of his leading constituents. They told him that people were tired of signing petitions and addresses. They wished to fight it out at once, and the sooner the better. The fight was believed to be so near at hand that a manufacturer offered to supply the Birmingham Union with 10,000 muskets at 15s. (£3 75) a piece. Lord Carrington told me that in his part of the county the respectable classes came to the resolution of not acting as special constables. In Birmingham, the magistrates represented that there was not a man in the town who would act."

Lord Grey was thus perforce recalled, and the King informed him that the Tory peers had agreed to absent themselves from the house, and so permit the passage of the bill, which received the royal assent on June 7, 1832. The Duke of Sussex—the King's brother—always a strenuous Liberal, who stood behind a curtain in the house when the royal assent was given, said, loud enough to be heard at some distance: "Thank God. This is the happiest day of my life." Mr. Courtenay, Clerk of the Parliament, had hardly pronounced the royal assent in the usual words, "Le Roi le veult," (old Norman French,) when a paper was handed to him with these words: "Surely it would have been more appropriate to have said, 'La canaille le veult."

We have no space to trace Lord Althorp's political career further, nor would it be of much interest to many American readers. In 1834 his father died, and shortly afterward he retired from political life. He found, on looking into his father's affairs, that they were in a most embarrassed plight, notwithstanding the large income he had enjoyed. His father had once spoken of retrenchment, but Lord Althorp replied that it would make his mother miserable. "Continue," he said, "to live as you have been accustomed, and let the work of retrenchment fall upon me. I have no desire to keep up the state of a great nobleman, and shall be prepared to live very economically until the mortgages you have contracted can be discharged." It scarcely speaks well for his father that he literally took him at his word, and continued to maintain three, and sometimes four, splendid establishments. Lord Althorp therefore found himself, to use his own words, "only the nominal owner of his patrimony." But, though surprised at finding his affairs so bad, he made no complaints, and set to work vigorously to retrench. He broke up the establishment at Althorp, turned the park into a cattle-ground, and distributed the deer—since restored—among his friends, and sold his beautiful place at Wimbledon. This seat, which his father's extravagance compelled him to part with, was not only beautiful but replete with historic association. In the earlier part of the eighteenth century it passed into the possession of his ancestress, Sarah, Duchess of Marlborough, who pulled down a magnificent old house which had been built in 1588 by the Earl of Exeter. The park embraced 1,200 acres, was exquisitely wooded, and contained a lake of 50 acres. Spencer House, in London, was virtually closed, and its owner spent most of his time at his wife's old home at Wiseton, among his beloved flocks and herds, now his sole indulgence; for after life as cattle-breeding and agriculture became to him what hunting once had been, and he is immortalized as a breeder by Hood's lines telling how Miss Kilmansegg:

"Was vaccinated, as babes are now,
Of Althorp—now Earl Spencer."

He contributed more than any one to the establishment of the Royal Agricultural Society, and was its first President. The extraordinary improvement in English sheep and cattle during the present century is largely due to his efforts in this direction. "One day," says his biographer, "when we were talking together of the influence of early-acquired tastes on the mind when it seemed engrossed by objects of a more exciting character, I mentioned the old story that the first letter Sir Robert Walpole, when Prime Minister, used to open on receiving the morning's mail, was always that from his Norfolk gamekeeper. Lord Althorp smiled, and said that he paid his bailiff the same compliment." We could imagine Washington doing the same. Indeed, he and Lord Althorp would have had much in common, besides being Northamptonshire men. His great great grandfather, Lawrence, lies buried in Brington, the family burial place of the Spencers, which is near to Sulgrove, their family seat. It is curious that the family of Lord North should have sprung from the adjoining parish.

Lord Althorp's was not to be a long life. In 1843 he seems to have had premonitions of his approaching end, and in 1845 he died at Wiseton after a brief illness, at the age of 63. On the last night of his life he said to his servant: "Give me that locket; [one containing his wife's hair;] I promised her to die with it on." He had previously desired to be buried beside her with the utmost privacy. Aware that his end was approaching, he said to a clergyman friend: "I have passed a happy life; I was sensible of my faults, prayed for grace and received it." His death seemed to be caused by a total collapse of physical power, which was explained by the excessive abstinence he had practised—thereby entailing great depression both of head and body—from fear of hereditary gout. He had to weigh his breakfast, and then, having eaten the very small portion he allowed himself, rush half-famished from the room to escape further temptation.

A letter from the late Right Hon. Edward Ellice, well-known in this State, where he had extensive property, tersely and graphically depicts Lord Althorp's character.

"He was an excellent illustration of the type of an English country gentleman, gifted with strong common sense, equal courage, firmness, and independence; incapable of doing or thinking anything inconsistent with the nicest sense of truth and honor; with a most humble sense of his own ability, a large and philanthropic heart, and a total absence of those aristocratic prejudices and habits and feelings which create so much heart-burning in this country, and deprive many other men of 'his order' of the popularity which he so largely enjoyed. He would have preferred to be an independent member of Parliament, and we all know the resistance he made to his nomination as leader of the party, as well as to Lord Grey, to undertake office."

Lord Althorp was, in fact, an insoluble portion of that leaven which leavened the lump of his order, and saved it in the hour of utmost peril from destruction, and there has scarcely been a man in the present century who has deserved the gratitude of his countrymen more than he.

FASHIONS OF THE SEASON.

NOVELTIES IN DRESS.

THE "COQUELUCHON"—NEW TRIMMINGS—LATEST FORM OF RIBBON BOWS—THE COLORS IN VOGUE—FAVORITE TISSUES—BALL DRESSES AND CHILDREN'S SUITS.

The "coqueluchon" is at present the favorite garment. It is principally used as an opera cloak. It is made in various combinations of satin and plush. The border of the hood is raised in fan shape on one side, where it is fastened by a handsome pin or a diamond ornament. Sometimes the ends of the garment are crossed in front à la Marie Antoinette, or tied à la Charlotte Corday. Sometimes, again, there are four ends, two of which fall over the train of the skirt. The "coqueluchon" is a most comfortable garment for the opera and balls, as it is very warm and stylish. The two descriptions following may serve as models for the article. One is of "carolus" plush, (a kind of dead leaf shade with a pinkish tint,) lined with cardinal red satin. It has four ends, two in front and two in the back. Those in the back fall over the train, and those in front are thrown over the shoulders. If preferred they may be left hanging. The hood is made upon a piece of crinoline and trimmed with raveled-out ruched satin; it is taken back on the side and fastened down under a steel ornament. The ends and borders of the "coqueluchon" are trimmed with fringed satin ruchings. The other model is of "tilleul" colored plush, lined with blue satin. This has but two ends, but the hood is like the one above described. The garment is cut somewhat like a cape with ends. In the back it is taken tight in to the figure. The ends are either allowed to hang in front, or are crossed, with one end thrown over the shoulder. The garment is trimmed with raveled ruched satin. While upon the topic of opera-cloaks, several models lately brought out are well worthy of notice. Plush is the material most used. A very full "visite" is made of white plush, trimmed with swan's down. This trimming is divided off here and there by tufts of peacock's feathers. Another model is of white drap de soie. The back is cut open and laced down to the lower part by means of a double silk cordelière with silver filigrane intermixed and tassels to match. The border of the garment and lower part of the sleeve are trimmed with a very rich fringe in the same style. Another kind is a large mantle cut somewhat in the shape of a dolman, with the middle of the back and the fronts made of plush, while the side pieces are of bluish "drap d'argent." It is trimmed with a deep band of down. Opera cloaks are also made of white, blue, or red woolen matelassé, trimmed with fur.

A novelty in trimming, which is likely to prove very useful to dress-makers, is galloon beaded in two shades of beads, called the "mordoré" and "clair de lune." The "mordoré" beads sparkle like fire; the "clair de lune" beads have a steel-white effect. The blending of these shades is most beautiful. A black velvet princess-cut dress can be trimmed with this galloon, combined with Chantilly lace and loops of ribbon in the shades of the beads.

The form of ribbon-bows has been slightly altered. The loops are arranged in cockades, or in the form of the Maltese cross. In both cases very narrow ribbon is used. The cockade is a rosette with little fullness and two or three falling ends. The Maltese cross is composed of a number of long loops crossing each other in various ways; the lower ones are the longest, in imitation of the lower part of the cross. The bow last described is placed down the front of the polonaise, upon the shoulders, on the lower part of the sleeves, on the pocket, and over the flaps of the "habit." The cockade can only be placed alone upon the side of a fichu, upon the waist, or on the side of a pocket.

There are prospects of shirred sleeves coming into use again. They will be plain from the wrist up to the elbow, then come some shirrs, and the upper part of the sleeve will consist of a puffing. The princess dress is still greatly varied in trimming, and the greatest addition to it yet made is the extra train. This train is arranged in several ways. One of the prettiest trimmings consists of a number of small flounces, about an inch deep, and closely ruched. For instance, a black velvet dress may be made with a gold-colored satin train, with nine flounces of this kind, trimmed with lace, with gold worked in. The front of the waist opens, showing a golden-colored brocart Louis XV. vest, trimmed with the same lace, slightly ruched. The lower part of the sleeves are of brocart, and the upper part of black velvet, trimmed with two puffings.

Yellow is still in vogue. It is a difficult color to combine with others. Brown, black, and dark blue are the prettiest combinations. Sky-blue and lilac are also used with yellow. Golden embroideries upon black lace are very fashionable, but embroideries in colored beads are still handsomer. The beads are generally gold, silver, and steel. A long black velvet princess dress, trimmed with lace of this kind, makes a royal attire. The waist may be open in a square, low neck in front style, and the sleeves trimmed with this lace worked with beads. The "Valois" is a waist out very low in front and high in the back. It has a standing collar only reaching to the shoulders. Underneath is a white lace collarette with the border showing. A crêpe lisse "modestie" made in small hollow plaits is worn under this waist. It buttons in the back. Around the neck it is trimmed with a plaited ruching. The "modestie" is either scalloped around with silk or trimmed with colored chenille. For dinner and evening entertainments this style is more favored than the round low neck. The sleeves must always be either of lace or tulle. This waist is often trimmed with point d'Angleterre, Malines, or any handsome lace. A ruffle is placed upon the lower part of the sleeve, which must not fall much below the elbow.

Long mittens are to replace long gloves. This fashion was brought out about a year ago, and is only now beginning to be adopted. They are made of white and black "filet de soie," handsomely embroidered. White silk mittens are very elegant, and show the arm to good effect. This is a fashion only suited to a handsome hand. The bracelet and rings show to great advantage. For dinners, operas, and companies at home, long mittens are excellent, but they are not suitable for balls.

Brownish Autumn leaves are more used than leaves of any other kind. Golden corn is sometimes mixed with the leaves, and is most suitable when the toilet is trimmed with gauze or tulle, with gold intermixed. White lace worked with chenille is a very new style. Parures are made of white Spanish lace worked with beads.

Plush gauze is a very light tissue, which is made in all shades. Many ruchings are made in three rows of Malines tulle, bordered with colored chenille. Tulle and colored laces are also used for this purpose. "Galon étincelle," worked with gold or silver satin and plush, are also used by lingères. Some of the sleeves of the dresses are replaced by sleeves of "gaze pelucheuse" trimmed with lace ruffles, worked with chenille. These sleeves only reach to the elbow. Fichus are made of the same material, and trimmed in the same manner. A newly-shaped fichu covers the front of the waist, and falls on the side over the skirt, forming a pocket trimmed with lace. Many of the new fichus button in the back. One in this style has a white crêpe lisse breast-piece terminating in a point. It is made in small double plaits, and buttons up the back. It is trimmed with crêpe lisse ruchings and lace. The point of the fichu is ornamented with a Maltese-cross bow of gold-colored satin, or with black and caroubier satin loops. The same bows are upon the shoulders. On one side is a bunch of flowers. Some berthas are plain, and others are draped, plaited, and adorned on the shoulder, with a cockade with long ends.

For evening wear the hair is dressed with garlands of leaves; this style is much preferred by middle-aged ladies. Puffs are made of gaze d'argent and gaze d'or combined with flowers, birds, flies, and aigrettes, fastened down by diamond and steel pins. The hair is ornamented, when curled, with bands of tiny golden and silver flowers, or with plain bands of ribbon or velvet.

The most suitable way to trim the skirts of ball dresses is with plaitings, flowers, and puffs, which make on the train a light and graceful trimming. The upper part of the dress is draped and trimmed with scarfs and plaitings to match the skirt. Most ball dress are made of light tissues, such as tulle and gauze, with silver and gold intermixed. The trimming most used is golden and silver "galon étincelle." This galloon is light and easily sewed upon the dress. Sometimes it forms the only trimming, and sometimes it is combined with flowers and garlands of embroidered flowers. As many dresses are trimmed with these garlands, embroidered in silk or chenille, as are trimmed with flowers. Garlands of flowers are used exclusively for ball dresses, while the embroidered ones are used for dinner-dresses and small reunions as well as for ball dresses.

A ball dress may be made in two shades of pink faille and gaze de soie. The train faille skirt is trimmed in the back with two rather narrow gauze plaitings. The front of the skirt is tightly drawn back. The sides have revers, which are separated and serve to fasten down the apron where it is draped. On the lower part of the side of the apron is a bunch of pink flowers, with leaves. The tunique, which almost covers the back of the skirt, and the apron are trimmed with gauze plaitings. The faille cuirass is trimmed with a bias faille fold in a darker shade. Around this band are two gauze plaitings, the lower one extending up the side seam under the arm. Around the waist is a gauze scarf, trimmed with plaitings, which is draped on the lower part of the cuirass. It starts from the side of the basque, under a bunch of flowers, and terminates in the back under the basque in two ends. The upper part of the basque is ornamented with a faille bertha trimmed with gauze plaitings, headed by a faille fold in the darker shade. On the shoulders is a bunch of flowers. The "modestie" worn underneath is of crêpe lisse, with scalloped borders.

The corsage habit replaces advantageously the Jeanne-d'Arc cuirass. There are several kinds of habits, such as the "Longueville," the "Frondeur," the "Louis XV." the "Mousquetaire," and the "Garde Royal." The corsage "Valois," which is very popular now, is but a reminiscence of the fashion at the court of Charles IX., or of Henri III.

At an American soirée, recently given in Paris, the corsage habit was particularly conspicuous. One worn on that occasion was a tilleul faille habit with a pink vest worked with beads, silver, and blonde. The vest formed a low-neck square. The buttons formed silver pendants. The long pointed basque had revers embroidered with beads. The skirt was trimmed with puffings and plaitings alternating and extending up to the knee. Between the puffs were flowers.

Children's garments are made in light shades of serge, blue and white cloth trimmed with fur, poplin trimmed with bands of embroidery, or with Russian or English lace.

A suit for a little boy from 5 to 7 years of age can be made in a brown cloth "costume Breton." The short trousers are trimmed over the hem with green and red cloth; on the side are three white buttons. The Bretonne-shaped vest is cut in heart shape in front. The borders are trimmed with a band of white cloth, with a binding of red cloth on one side and blue on the other; this vest is drawn in at the waist by a cashmere sash. The blue "veste Bretonne" is open in front and trimmed with groups of three white buttons placed on at regular intervals. Between the buttons on the upper part of the coat is a small embroidered piece bound with red. The sleeves are finished at the wrist like the lower part of the trousers. The small shirt has a rather deep falling collar. The felt hat matching the suit has a broad brim. Around the brim is a scarf in the colors of the suit.

A suit for a young miss from 13 to 15 years of age may be made as follows: The skirt is of brown velvet, trimmed with a plaited flounce. The light blue cloth tunique and the "casaque habit" are bordered with brown plush. The pockets are of plush. The plush fichu is trimmed with a silk and chenille fringe; it is fastened on the breast under a faille bow. Another suit for a young lady about 15 years of age, is a dark green serge. The skirt is trimmed with two flounces, surmounted by a bias faille band. The tunique is trimmed with a similar band. The faille sleeves have deep serge cuffs, with four rows of buttons upon the outside. The front part of the waist is of faille, trimmed in front with narrow bands of passementerie, forming a lattice-work. The side of the basque is cut open and joined by a passementerie lacet. The waist is cut in a square, low neck; underneath is a batiste "guimpe," with Valenciennes insertions. The linen collar and cuffs are hemstitched.

A baby's dress is made of white or sky-blue cachemire. The skirt is trimmed with a plaiting with a small silk heading, and a similar trimming below. The sash is tied on the side. It is trimmed with a plaited ruffle surmounted by three plaits. On either side are pointed pockets, with a button in the point, and on the top are fine plaits and a very narrow ruffle placed in the shape of the point.

An infant's apron can be of gray linen trimmed with cardinal braid. The pocket is trimmed to match, with the addition of buttons placed all around. The small pointed sleeves are trimmed with cardinal braid, and so is the belt around the waist.

CATCHING A TRAIN.

From the Mobile (Ala.) Register, Feb. 14.

The following amusing incident, which happened a few days ago, will show wherein "vaulting ambition overleaped itself and fell on the other side." An influential voter, Mr. R., from a precinct of this county, was in the city a few days ago on business, when he fell into the hands of a Sixth Warder, who, for some time past, has been looking with longing eyes upon several fat municipal and county offices. The political aspirant, after treating Mr. R. several times, proposed a game of ten-pins, which was accepted, but the political aspirant managed to let his country friend beat him in the games, and otherwise made the evening so pleasant that his friend missed the 4 o'clock accommodation train, and so time passed until near time for the 6 o'clock mail-train to leave, and then the trouble began. Mr. R. had a bundle of stove-pipe and a jar of oysters to take home, and feeling tired after the severe exercise of five hours at ten-pins, he sprang into a cab and told the driver to drive rapidly to the Mobile and Ohio train; off they sped, but when half way to the depot they suddenly remembered that the train left from the New-Orleans Depot at the foot of Government street; so they turned down St. Louis street, and just as they got to Commerce street they saw the train coming slowly by. Mr. R. sprang out, and, with the jar of oysters and bundle of stove-pipe under his arm, he grasped the hand-rail of a car and scrambled aboard the moving train, all breathless and bruised. He was about comfortably seated in a car when he discovered that he had gotten aboard the wrong train and was on his way to Montgomery. At this moment the train was at the outskirts of the city and rapidly increasing its speed. There was nothing left for Mr. R. to do but gather up his oysters and stove-pipe, rush out on the platform, and jump off. He did so, and as he landed in the marsh he went knee-deep into the mud and water—oysters, stove-pipe, and all. By extraordinary effort he succeeded in extricating himself from the struggling essence of marsh and the soft embrace of the mud that forms the happy abode of swamp moccasins, alligators, and bullfrogs, just in time to see the Mobile and Ohio train coming toward him around the curve; he gathered himself for another desperate effort, and succeeded once more in getting aboard the train (this time the right one;) pretty soon the conductor came along and informed him that his was a way station, and it was impossible for that express mail train to stop there. Here was another dilemma, but being determined to get home, when the train got to Whistler he went forward to induce the engineer to stop at his station. All his powers of argument and persuasion were in vain, so R. said: "You are forbidden to run faster than six miles an hour over frogs and switches, and when you come down to that speed is passing my house I will jump off in the sand-bank." So he got out on the platform of the car and made a leap, but the momentum of the train threw his heels up, and he went into the sand bank head foremost. When he picked himself up he had one leg through a joint of stove-pipe, an oyster in his left ear, his eyes full of sand, and his hair matted mass of oysters and sand; and, worst of all, the train had come to a full stop 200 yards beyond to cool down a hot box. R. says he has oysters planted for 50 feet along that sand-bank, and his entire body is like the union jack, a blue ground with a few white patches for stars; and he has sworn "by Joe Peter," if he ever votes for that Sixth Warder for any office he hopes he may never eat another oyster.

AN OLD IDIOT BUYS A YOUNG WIFE.

A telegram from Liberty, Ind., to the St. Louis Republican, dated 14th inst., conveys the following unpleasant story: "A singular case of purchase of a wife occurred here recently. An old man named William Smith, aged 70, who lived near here, became widowed some years ago, and had since lived in entire seclusion, deaf, demented, and hideous in appearance. He, though reported wealthy, was shunned by nearly every one, until, finally, a few weeks ago he announced his desire to marry again, and offered $5,000 to any one who would furnish him a wife. The announcement created merriment at the time, but nothing further was thought of it till this morning it was announced that the old man was married to Miss Phœbe Johns, a highly-respected young lady, aged 17, living in the neighborhood. Inquiry to-day develops the fact that the old man's offer, made several weeks ago, was not once taken in hand by Powell Slade, with whose family the young woman lived, and who commenced negotiations by which the purchase was actually made, Slade receiving the $5,000 $2,000 of which was paid to the girl's father, the girl herself receiving as an inducement a deed from the old man for his farm of 200 acres of very valuable land. The negotiations, which had been pending some time, were completed last week, and the wedding occurred last night in the presence of a number of guests, a grand supper being one of the conditions imposed by the bride before consenting to the sale."

DROWNED OR KIDNAPPED?

A BOY UPON WHOSE IDENTITY HIS OWN FAMILY CANNOT AGREE—THE QUESTION LEFT BY THE COURT IN OBSCURITY.

From the St. Louis Globe-Democrat, Feb. 15.

The trial of the case of William Woehler against Henry Lochmueller, which took place yesterday in the Circuit Court, developed some of the most romantic and extraordinary facts and circumstances. The suit was for $20,000 damages for false imprisonment. Lochmueller, the defendant, is a hard-working German, residing in the northern part of the city. He had accumulated sufficient means to purchase a lot and build a house, and was rapidly growing rich. His family consisted of a wife and three children—a girl and two boys—the youngest, named Henry, being now 10 years old. One day in the Summer of 1

Director.....Mr. J. C. FRYER

GRAND WAGNER OPERA FESTIVAL.

EXTRAORDINARY ANNOUNCEMENT.

INAUGURAL NIGHT OF THE WAGNER OPERA,
MONDAY, MARCH 12, 1877.

Mr. FRYER takes great pleasure in announcing the completion of an organization under his direction for the proper reproduction of the renowned musical works of Richard Wagner.

Until now there has been no thoroughly systematized endeavor to illustrate upon the American stage the grand creations of the German master, and the spasmodic attempts hitherto made to introduce examples of his genius, have necessarily failed to do justice to the great art embodied in the structures of his wonderful dramas.

Desirous of insuring a series of performances worthy of these compositions, Mr. FRYER has formed a company in which are comprised the finest artists of the German lyric style, a powerful and perfectly disciplined Chorus and an Orchestral Band representing the flower of the principal musical organizations.

the eminent Conductor, who not only enjoys the advantage of having assisted at the late festival at Bayreuth, when Wagner's supreme work "The Ring of the Nibelungs," was given with such memorable effect, but who was also honored with copies of the score, together with special instructions from the composer, concerning its reproduction in the United States.

While the interest in the NEW FORM of Opera has everywhere deepened since the extraordinary success of the test production of Wagner's crowning work at Bayreuth last Summer, in no part of the world have the Wagner theories of lyric art found more enthusiastic acceptance than in this country, notw thstanding the imperfect manner in which they have heretofore been presented to the public. The therefore with no ordinary degree of confidence that the Director anticipates for his costly and difficult enterprise the liberal encouragement of the musical public, whose advanced taste in this amition so greatly merits a meritorious presentation of the following Operas, now given for the first time in complete form, and with adequate scenic effects and accessories:

REPERTOIRE OF THE WAGNER FESTIVAL.

THE FLYING DUTCHMAN, TANNHAUSER,
LOHENGRIN.

STATEN ISLAND'S MYSTERY.

NEW COMPLICATIONS IN THE CASE.

ARREST OF A TALKATIVE GERMAN ON SUSPICION OF HAVING MURDERED THE YOUNG WOMAN—HIS LANDLADY'S STORY REGARDING A MYSTERIOUS FEMALE CALLER—THE PRISONER'S STATEMENT, AND THAT OF HIS WIFE—PECULIAR CIRCUMSTANCES AND SUSPICIOUS DISCREPANCIES.

A man, whose name and address are withheld for the present by the Police, called at the office of Inspector Dilks yesterday morning, and informed him that he could impart certain information which he believed would tend to throw some light on the mystery surrounding the young woman who was found dead on Staten Island on Sunday morning last. The Inspector's informant said that while in a lager beer saloon in Washington or Greenwich street, he overheard a conversation between two men, one of whom he knew as John, who is employed as a porter at No. 314 Washington street, and the other was a stranger. They were talking about the Staten Island mystery, and in the course of their conversation John said there was a man employed as a clerk in a grocery store in Washington street who appeared to know all about the girl, and that he was about to take passage for Europe on the Bremen steamer which sailed yesterday. Deeming the information of importance, Inspector Dilks at once detailed Sergt. Suttie and Detective Dilks to investigate the matter. After considerable trouble, these officers discovered that the man they were in search of was George L. Ernst, a German, who is employed as a clerk in the grocery store of Henry Welsh, No. 345 Washington street, and who lives at the boarding-house of Mrs. Henrietta Schaal, No. 188 Franklin street. The officers proceeded to the house, and questioned Mrs. Schaal about her boarder. At first the woman was very reticent, but, on being taken to the Leonard Street Police Station and confronted with the Inspector, she consented to tell all she knew about him. She informed the Inspector that Ernst came to her house about six weeks ago, and represented himself as a single man. During his stay at the house, a young woman, whom Mrs. Schaal describes as being a very pretty blonde, with light blue eyes and a small mouth, and who was generally well dressed, called to see him as often as two or three times a week. He was also in the habit of receiving letters addressed in a lady's handwriting, which he said came from the same girl. Shortly before 6 o'clock on last Saturday evening, this young woman called at the house and asked for "George." Mrs. Schaal told her that he was not in. The young woman seemed greatly agitated and burst into tears. She appeared to be very much troubled, and said that she must see Ernst. Mrs. Schaal advised her to go to the store, and the young woman departed. When Ernst came home to supper Mrs. Schaal told him that the woman had called, and informed him also of her agitation. Ernst then said that he was in great trouble. He said he had seduced the girl, and that she was pregnant and wanted him to marry her, and threatened to have him arrested if he refused. Mrs. Schaal advised him to marry her. He then told Mrs. Schaal that he was going to take the girl to her father's house on Staten Island. After supper he went out and did not return until Monday. On Tuesday, after accounts of the finding of the corpse on Staten Island had been published, one of the boarders who had overheard his conversation with Mrs. Schaal said to Ernst, "Well, George, I guess your girl committed suicide." Ernst remarked, "Oh, no, that wasn't my girl; I brought her back with me. She's all right." Mrs. Schaal informed the Inspector that since her visit on Saturday, the 10th inst., the young woman had not called at the house, nor had any letters been received there for Ernst from her. Mr. Carl Schaal, the husband of Mrs. Schaal, corroborated his wife's story in many particulars. The description of the young woman who called on Ernst was found to coincide very closely with that of the dead woman, and Inspector Dilks felt convinced that he had struck a trail which would lead to the clearing-up of the mystery.

Sergt. Suttie and Officer Dilks were sent back to the house to await the arrival of Ernst, and Mrs. Schaal, at the request of the Inspector, remained at the station-house. At 12:30 o'clock Ernst arrived at the house for dinner as was his custom. The officers told him that Inspector Dilks would like to see him, and requested him to accompany them to the station-house. He did not appear to be at all alarmed, but very coolly asked the officers what was wanted of him. They told him that he was wanted in connection with the supposed murder or suicide of a young woman on Staten Island. "Oh, yes," remarked Ernst, "I was on Staten Island that night and passed near the spot where the body was found." He accompanied the officers to the station-house, and on being questioned freely admitted that he had visited Staten Island on the Saturday evening in question, but stated that he was in company with his wife. He said he was married, but, being too poor to keep house, he did not live with his wife, who was in a situation up town. His wife usually met him on Saturday night, and they went together to her father's house, in New-Jersey, where they generally remained until Monday. On the evening of Saturday, the 10th inst., his wife called at the store and he sent her to the ferry at the foot of Liberty street, to wait for him while he went home to get his supper. He delayed so long that they missed the train, and he and his wife then took the boat to Staten Island, and walked over to the Bergen Point ferry and proceeded to his father-in-law's house, where they remained until Monday, when they both returned to the City by the train. He said that in walking from the landing on Staten Island to the ferry which took them to New-Jersey they passed close to the place where the body of the supposed murdered woman was found, and he attributed his arrest to the fact that he might have been seen in the neighborhood with a woman, but this woman was his wife. He said that he was well known on Staten Island, as he had lived there with his wife for several years. When asked where his wife was, he at first refused to tell, as he did not wish to expose her, as she was living with a family who did not know she was a married woman, but on realizing that the suspicion resting on him would be greatly strengthened by any equivocation or concealment, he told the Inspector that his wife could be found at a house in West Nineteenth street. The officers proceeded to the house indicated, and found there a very handsome young woman, living with a highly respectable family, in whose employ she had been for some time as a children's governess. On being questioned she admitted that she was the wife of Ernst, and had been married to him for eight years. She accompanied the officers to the station-house, and on being interrogated by Inspector Dilks, she corroborated in the main the statement made by her husband. There is, however, a strange discrepancy between the statements made by the woman and her husband. Ernst said that they walked a distance of three miles before reaching the ferry, passing the old Quarantine grounds on their way, and that the cemetery near which the corpse was found, while Mrs. Ernst says they went direct to the ferry, and their walk from the wharf where they disembarked from the boat which took them to Staten Island to the ferry-boat which conveyed them to New-Jersey did not occupy more than seven to ten minutes. Mrs. Ernst states positively that her husband was with her at her father's house on Saturday night and all day Sunday. She also states that she never called at the boarding-house of Mrs. Schaal, but had frequently called at the store where her husband is employed. Mrs. Ernst was then confronted with Mrs. Schaal. The latter said that she looked very much like the young woman who called on Ernst on the Saturday evening referred to above. The resemblance was so striking that she could not be positive whether Mrs. Ernst was the woman or not. A young son of Mrs. Schaal who saw Ernst's visitor was brought to the station-house, and he was as much puzzled as his mother. Mrs. Ernst, however, reiterated her former statement that she had never called at the Franklin street boarding-house. Ernst also denied in the most positive terms that any female had called on him at the boarding-house, as described by Mrs. Schaal, or that he had received any letters from women.

Under the circumstances, Inspector Dilks deemed it prudent to place Mr. Ernst under arrest, and locked him up to await further developments. On being arraigned at the desk in the station-house, he said he was 34 years of age, a native of Germany, married, and a clerk by occupation. Subsequently he was taken to the Tombs Police Court and arraigned before Justice Kilbreth, where Mrs. Schaal made a statement substantially as given above. The prisoner was remanded for further examination, and at the request of Inspector Dilks was taken to the Leonard Street Police Station, where he was locked up. Sergeant Suttie and Detective Dilks will proceed to Staten Island this morning, and will take with them young Schaal, who is positive that he can identify the woman who called at his mother's house on the eventful Saturday evening and asked for "George." Young Schaal is an intelligent youth, about 17 years of age, and will be permitted to see the corpse, which has not yet been interred. If he identifies the corpse as that of the woman who called for Ernst on the Saturday night previous to her death, a strong circumstantial case will be made out against the prisoner, but if he fails, the whole case against him falls to the ground, and he will be released.

Ernst, though quiet, poor now, has been in very good circumstances. He came to this country from Germany several years ago, and was married in this City eight years ago. At that time he held a responsible position in a Maiden lane jewelry house, receiving a salary of $5,000 per annum. He set up housekeeping with his wife and lived in fine style on Staten Island. Subsequently, he resigned his position and went to Germany with his wife. About three years ago he returned, leaving his wife in Germany but in a few months he sent for her to rejoin him, which she did. He failed to obtain employment in this City, and started off on a tour through the far West in search of something to do. He failed, and his money becoming exhausted, he returned to this City. As they were too poor to live together the couple agreed to separate. The wife took a situation as a governess, and they determined to live apart until they had both saved enough from their earnings to furnish a modest home for themselves. Nine weeks ago Ernst obtained the situation as a clerk in Welsh's grocery store at a salary of $10 per week, and has been employed there ever since. His employer was well pleased with his conduct. He was steady and industrious, although very talkative and much given to bragging. Mrs. Schaal, the boarding-house mistress, stated to a reporter last night that Ernst had been boarding at her house for about six weeks, and she had no fault to find with him as a boarder. He was a great talker, and Mrs. Schaal says his long tongue has got him into trouble. He was constantly boasting of his amours, and told her that he had seduced a young girl and that she was four months advanced in pregnancy. He was advised to marry this girl, and said he would. About the first of the present month he told Mrs. Schaal that he had married the girl and was going to Germany with her. He said first that he would sail on the steamer which left yesterday, but on Friday he changed his mind, and said he would not go until the next steamer sailed. Mrs. Schaal said she was positive that the woman whom she saw yesterday afternoon at the station-house, and who was represented to be Mrs. Ernst, was the woman who called at her house on Saturday evening and asked for "George." Her son also said he was satisfied of this important fact, but still would accompany the officers to Staten Island to-day to view the corpse. Mrs. Schaal says that she thinks Ernst has two wives, but has no evidence to substantiate this charge. A very suspicious fact was that Ernst had his moustache shaved off during last week, and this would tend to show that he has endeavored to disguise his appearance, although the sacrifice of the moustache may have resulted merely from a whim on his part. The room occupied by Ernst was searched yesterday, and nothing was found to throw light upon the mystery.

THE CORONER'S INQUEST AT STAPLETON—ANOTHER YOUNG GERMAN HELD ON SUSPICION—THE GIRL'S NAME THOUGHT TO BE KATIE RIEDEL.

The inquest to discover the manner of the death of "K. R." the unfortunate young woman whose body was found in the old Quarantine Grounds on Staten Island, was resumed last evening by Coroner Dempsey in the Police Station at Stapleton. A new witness appeared, of whom the general public had no previous knowledge, but his statements do not throw light upon the way the young woman, whose name is now believed to be Katie Riedel, went to Staten Island, and how she died. The witness was a young man named George Dyckman, who lives at No. 437 East Eighty-fourth street, in this City, and is employed as a milkman. He was acquainted with a young woman named Katie Riedel, to whom he gave his address. As that address, in his handwriting, was found in the hat of the deceased, it is assumed by Coroner Dempsey that she is the person Dyckman knew, although that young man declared he could not recognize her.

The first witness examined was Mrs. Burns, of No. 382 Fifteenth street, this City. She testified that she knew nothing about the deceased, but her sympathies had been aroused by the case, and she had desired to inter the body of the unfortunate young woman decently, at her own expense. Dr. Isaac Lea then testified that he assisted Dr. Walser to make the post-mortem examination, and had reached the conclusion that the young woman had died from the effects of poison. He had never seen a body in which the organs were in a more healthy condition. Michael Conway testified that while handing the hat of the deceased he found a piece of paper bearing an inscription, which he gave to Detective Romer. A paper with embossed edges, having on it the name George Dyckman, and the address "No. 437 East Eighty-fourth street," was here handed to Conway by Coroner Dempsey, and was recognized by him as that which he took from behind the band of the hat of the deceased. Detective Isaac Romer also identified the paper as the one given him by Conway. Police Capt. Blake now appeared in the room accompanied by a fresh-faced young German, with disordered hair, and the general appearance of a laboring man. He stated that his name was George Dyckman, a milkman, 25 years of age. His employer for the past six years, he said, had been Mr. Jeremiah Linehan, of No. 437 East Eighty-fourth street; every morning he served milk on the east side of the City, between Seventy-fourth and Thirty-ninth streets; he had seen the body of the deceased, but was not able to recognize it; it somewhat resembled a young woman he had known for a short time named Katie Riedel, but was not so stout, and the hair was darker; from the fact that the initials "K. R." and his address in his own handwriting, were found on the deceased, he thought it possible she was Katie Riedel; he gave the young woman his address at her request, three weeks ago yesterday; at the same time she told him she was going to leave her place and would reside for a time with her aunt at No. 134 Hester street, or with her brother in Lewis street, between Delancey and Rivington streets; at that time Katie was employed by Mr. Phelps, of No. 111 East Thirty-ninth street, as a waitress; he had never seen her after she left Mr. Phelps' house three weeks ago; he had never been alone with Katie in the house, and never met her outside; he saw her the first time on Jan. 1 last; she promised to write, telling him where to call upon her, but had never written. Dyckman declared that he did not seek the acquaintance of Miss Riedel, but she treated him in a free, good-natured way, and at the time she asked for his address called out to him for it from where she stood in the dining-room, while he was in the basement hallway. There were two other servants in Mr. Phelps' household, and he had been no more familiar with Katy Riedel than with them.

Coroner Demsey held Dyckman as a witness and adjourned the inquest until Monday evening at 7 o'clock.

QUEENS COUNTY CRIMINALS.

THE MURDERER OF MAGGIE BAUER TO BE PLACED ON TRIAL MONDAY—ANOTHER MURDER CASE ALSO TO BE DISPOSED OF.

Judge Pratt and associates, Judge Armstrong and the Justices of the Sessions, will convene the Oyer and Terminer Court, at the Queens County Court-house, Hempstead Plains, Long Island, tomorrow morning, for the trial of two men who are accused of capital crimes. District Attorney Downing will appear for the prosecution, and ex-Judge Busteed for the defendants. The first case to be called is that of Frank McConichi, the alleged murderer of little Maggie Bauer. The history of this case is of such recent occurrence that it must still be fresh in the mind of the public. On the 14th of last August the deceased, a child of 9 years, left her father's house, at Foster's Meadow, early in the afternoon to show a woman named Kate Hoffman the road leading to the Valley Stream Railroad depot. Maggie never returned home alive. Her body was found the following morning, concealed under cedar boughs in the middle of a dense wood. There was every evidence that the slayer was guilty of a double crime, and, but for this fact, the circumstantial evidence all pointed to Kate Hoffman as the culprit. She was arrested on suspicion, and was committed by the Coroner to await the action of the Grand Jury. She was subsequently discharged from custody, and the arrest of Frank McConichi followed. A bloody shirt was found beneath the feed-bin in the barn of farmer Davison, where McConichi was employed. It was then remembered by persons in the house that the prisoner returned the night of the murder and asked in an excited way to be given a shirt. The bloody garment was fully identified as his. It was also ascertained that his face bore scratches, and other suspicious circumstances pointed him out as the probable murderer. The Grand Jury, however, discharged him; but he was rearrested and locked up in Jamaica Jail, and he soon after confessed being the perpetrator of the double crime.

Denis Ryan stands indicted for the murder of Patrick Taft. Ryan and Taft were fellow-watchmen at the freight office of the Long Island Railroad Company. On Sunday night, Nov. 28, Ryan, Taft, and a man named Smith, were drinking in a hotel. They were all under the influence of liquor. Smith, at a late hour, parted from his companions, and Ryan and Taft returned to the freight depot. In the morning the latter was found murdered in the office, but by whom remained a mystery for some time. Suspicion pointed to Smith, but Ryan spared the detectives further trouble by surrendering himself to Capt. Wood. Ryan stated that he shot Taft accidentally while they were struggling for the possession of a pistol. It is stated that Ryan at one time was an Assistant Alderman in this City, and a member of the Tammany Hall General Committee.

THE NEWARK MURDERERS.

REVELATIONS AT THE INQUEST.

THE FUNERALS OF OSCHWALD AND RYAN—THE CORONER'S INQUEST—LETTERS BY THE PRISONERS CONFESSING THEIR INTENTION TO COMMIT SUICIDE—THEIR FEEBLE EFFORT TO ESCAPE.

The funeral of Charles Oschwald, who was hanged on Thursday in Newark for the murder of Policeman Brock, and also that of Thomas Ryan, who died of poison three hours before the time appointed for the execution, were held yesterday afternoon at the houses of the respective families. The funeral of Ryan was appointed for 2 o'clock, but long before that hour the house in which he had lived, and where his mother, father, brothers, and sisters now reside, was filled with friends and curious people, who seized the opportunity to gaze upon the face of the man who had escaped one ignominious form of death only by adopting another almost as repulsive. The body of the dead man was inclosed in an expensive rosewood coffin, upon which was a plate with the name, date of birth, and death of the deceased. Upon the lid lay a shield of flowers with the word "Tommy" worked across it in immortelles, while there were also quantities of cut flowers. A force of policemen were present to maintain order among the crowds of people, who were allowed to pass through the house and look upon the face of the dead man. A large proportion of the visitors were young women and mere children. The services began at 2 o'clock. They were conducted by Rev. Mr. Allen, one of the clergymen who had waited upon the prisoners in the jail, and were short and of a simple character. At 2:20 the funeral procession moved from the house, No. 67 Howard street, near South Orange avenue, toward Fairmount Cemetery, the streets along the line for several blocks being lined with scattered groups of spectators. There were 13 carriages in the line. Oschwald's funeral was held in his father's house, No. 269 Thirteenth avenue, and was attended by a crowd much larger than that present at the funeral of Ryan. As in the case of Ryan, Oschwald's body was deposited in a handsome coffin, with silver ornaments and plate, and beside a large pillow of flowers, with the words "Faith, Hope, and Charity," worked across it in letters, formed of immortelles there were several armfuls of cut flowers, which covered the coffin. The lid was removed, and an opportunity given to look at the face of the dead, which bore no traces of the violent manner of his death beyond a slight discoloration. The body was neatly dressed. The funeral services were conducted by Rev. William Korn, and were short and simple. At their conclusion, soon after 3 o'clock, the coffin was closed and carried out to the hearse. An immense throng had collected in the neighborhoood, a force of 30 policemen being present to maintain order. About forty carriages followed the body to Woodland Cemetery, where it was buried.

THE CORONER'S INVESTIGATION INTO THE CAUSE OF RYAN'S DEATH.

The Coroner's jury assembled at 3 o'clock in the Court-house. Prosecutor Abeel was present, together with Dr. Leslie Ward, the County Physician; Deputy Sheriff Davis, and many other officers. The first witness was Col. A. J. Johnson, the Warden of the Essex County Jail. He testified that the first intimation he had of Ryan's illness was on Wednesday morning, about 9 o'clock, but he did not think enough of it at the time to go and see him; after breakfast he found Ryan lying on the floor of his cell, and he seemed to be faint. The witness asked both Ryan and Oschwald about the former's sickness, both being in the same cell, and Ryan said he had had similar attacks before and thought it was biliousness. Oschwald said the sickness began at 4 o'clock in the morning and that he had purged and vomited. A short time after, hearing that Ryan was worse, witness sent for Dr. Kornemann, the jail physician, who came promptly. The witness said he had a slight suspicion of poisoning when he first heard that Ryan was sick, but he did not mention his suspicions until the doctor said to him, "I wonder if he has taken anything?" The witness had answered "no," and Dr. Holden, who had been present with Dr. Kornemann, expressed the opinion very positively that the prisoner had not taken anything. The jail physician stayed during the evening two or three hours, then went away and did not see Ryan again before he died, at 8 o'clock Thursday morning. The witness only saw Ryan once after the Sheriff's officers took charge of him at 5 o'clock on Wednesday. The witness described the position of cell No. 24 in which the prisoners were confined together, and the precautions taken to prevent outsiders from reaching it. He had heard Ryan talk, on Tuesday night, about the effect that his death would have on his family, and how one of his brothers had been invited to "pop" that day by Billy McCann, of four nights before, in Market street, because he wore crape on his arm. He feared it would be thrown up to his relatives afterward, and he closed his remarks with a flood of tears and sobbing. No one was allowed to go into the cell on the second tier besides the prisoners' counsel and spiritual adviser, and all others were under the surveillance of William Carson, the Deputy specially employed to guard them, except Rev. Mr. Lee, who came on one occasion with two others, and had a meeting in the cell with the prisoners. The watchman sat on the floor looking up at the cells when there were no visitors, and, if he were not looking, a person could easily throw things up to the platform. At night, when all the prisoners were locked up, Carson was relieved, there being no possibility of anybody communicating with the prisoners. The meals of the prisoners were brought in regularly by Ryan's family. The witness had never heard either of the prisoners express a wish to die in any other way than by hanging, and never referred to it except when Ryan spoke of the matter. He knew that a small cold chisel had been found in cell No. 24 since the execution, and he had put it in his tool-chest. The men were kept together because it was easier to watch both in one cell than in separate cells, and because Oschwald had objected to being locked up with anyone but Ryan. The witness testified that he thought the prisoners were fed a longer time by their friends than was prudent, and he could not recollect whether he gave the order to have Ryan's outside food stopped during Ryan's sickness or after it. There were a thousand ways by which poison could be conveyed to the prisoners, but he did not believe any prisoner would take poison until there was no reasonable hope.

The next witness was Deputy Warden George H. Johnson, son of Col. Johnson. He said he had entire charge of the eastern side of the prison; he had heard of Ryan's sickness on Wednesday morning, and at 4:45, when he went to the cell on the second tier, to shift the men to cells Nos. 3 and 4, he found Ryan lying on his right side, covered with a blanket; he said to Oschwald, "Charley, you've got to go down stairs;" Oschwald exclaimed, "My God," hesitated, and then seemed much disturbed; he said to the witness that Ryan had been taken sick at 3 o'clock, and his vomiting had made him [Oschwald] vomit; the witness said, "Come, let's go down stairs;" Oschwald stooped to reach under the bed for his shoes, and when put them on; starting for the door of the cell he turned, halked, looked back and down in a corner, and then stooped over and fumbled in a lot of papers on the floor; the witness said, "What are you looking for?" You can't take anything away from this cell;" then the witness searched Oschwald, took a pen-knife away from him, made the men leave the cell, and then returned to arouse Ryan; Ryan turned over on his back, with a vacant look in his eyes, and when the witness asked, "What's come over you?" he replied, "I don't know what the —— come over me; I think I'm kinder bilious, and feel as though there were something in me;" the witness carried Ryan down stairs, he said Oschwald came out and stood hands with him; having locked the men up, the witness went back to cell No. 24 and gathered up the scraps of paper on the floor and put them in his pocket, as he thought they would give some clue to the murder; he pressed the fragments all out in a ball and put them in a drawer in his father's back room until the afternoon of the day of the execution; when he came to examine the papers, the first thing that caught his eye was "we die by our own hand;" he called his father, when they ironed the pieces out and fitted them together; being three pieces short, he returned to the cell and found the piece required to complete Ryan's letter to his father; on Friday he searched the cell, scraping everything together, and under the spit-box found the remainder of the letter to Col. Johnson. Behind the box was a piece of newspaper folded into a physician folds a powder paper, which contained some white powder, and on a shelf he found a white pill like an ordinary sugar-coated one. Another search in the south-west corner resulted in the discovery that the prisoners had tried to pierce the wall. Under the bed was a mason's cold chisel, and one leg of the bed had been broken off and converted into a clay with which they were working. Two patched letters having been produced, written with lead pencil, the witness identified them as being in the handwriting of Ryan, and then read them. That addressed to Col. Jounson was as follows:

Col. A. J. Johnson, Dear and Respected Sir We leave you these few lines asking you to pardon us for what we have done in this cell we tryed to get through the wall and make our escape without doing anybody any injury but we found out that we could not succeed so we took the last remedy to destroy ourselves so them that loves us much for our lives will not have the satisfaction of creating a sensation in the city of Newark by a double execution We are innocent of the crime of which we are doomed to die All I hope is that the guilty party or parties may be brought to light We ask you to forgive us for we know we have done wrong toward you and you have always been a good and kind and efficient officer and warden ever since we have been under your charge We will now conclude by asking you to state to the public we die as we lived innocent young men of the crime of which we were doomed Give our best wishes and parting regards to our kind friends Mr. Carson and Mr. Harvey and all inquiring friends we die trusting in the lord to save us P S—Col. do not accuse any one for our doings for the stuff has been in here quite some time as we had our minds made up that if the worst came they would never have the chance to have a sensation over us as we know that there is several in the city would like it to happen

Good night and may God Bless & protect you we die believing on the lord Jesus Christ.

Mamma I die an innocent man although I die by my own hand. God forgive me for the rash act.

The witness, continuing, said that the tearing up of the paper was to him a mystery, but his theory was that Oschwald had changed his mind after the letter had been written, and that only Ryan had taken poison, so that Oschwald had determined to destroy them and not to commit suicide. Oschwald had taken two cups of coffee, an ounce of whisky, and two slices of buttered toast just before he was executed.

William Carson, the special watchman, employed to guard the prisoners, testified that no one could approach them without being seen by him, and he watched them carefully, particularly the reporters; Mrs. Wicks and Miss Rose, the "good women," came to see the prisoners frequently, and he stood as close as he could to them while they conversed with the prisoners; nothing was said he did not hear, but he could not understand Oschwald's mother, who spoke only German; the different members of the Ryan family brought meals to the prisoners, and sometimes took them inside; he had heard Ryan say something about Newark's wanting a sensation in a double execution, but never heard him express an intention to take his own life. Ryan's sister and two cousins brought his breakfast on Tuesday or Wednesday, but he did not want to eat. Once during his illness, he said to the witness: "Mr. Carson, I think I'm poisoned; they would give it to me in apples, oranges, or even in tobacco or cigars." Ryan did not ask for the doctor, but seemed anxious that he should arrive when he was sent for.

The inquest was adjourned until Wednesday next, at 3 o'clock, when Dr. Ward expects that the analysis of the stomach by Prof. Chandler will be completed. The impression is strong in Newark that the poison was furnished by the friends of the prisoners.

BONDS AND STOCKS STOLEN.

SECURITIES AMOUNTING TO $70,000 MISSING—JAMES D. KING'S SONS THE VICTIMS—NO CLUE TO THE THIEVES.

Wall street was startled late yesterday afternoon by a report that a large robbery had been committed. James D. King's Sons, No. 53 William street, were ascertained to be the victims. Mr. King said to a TIMES reporter that on going to look up the safe on Friday afternoon he discovered that two tin boxes containing securities which had been placed there on deposit were missing. None of the employes had seen them removed, and no persons to whom suspicion attached had been seen about the office during the day. There was, in fact, no clue whatever to the thieves, but all the bonds and stocks are numbered and registered, and cannot be made available by any person but the owners. Their total value will not exceed $70,000. The following is a complete list: $3,000 United States registered 6 per cent. 5-20s of 1867, interest January and July, certificates Nos. 10,515, 10,516, and 19,517, $1,000 each, Edgar H. Richards in trust; $2,000 New-York Bounty Loan, certified, No. 9, same name, 1st July, 1866.

JOE COBURN IN THE TOMBS.

FUTILE EFFORTS TO PROCURE THE RELEASE OF THE PRISONER—THE TRIAL TO BEGIN TO-MORROW—COBURN'S BAR-TENDER ARRESTED AND HIS SALOON CLOSED BY THE POLICE.

Mr. Edgar M. Chipman, counsel for Joseph Coburn, went before Judge Sutherland, yesterday, in the Court of General Sessions, and renewed his motion for the release of the prisoner on bail. He stated that the accused was suffering severely from his wounds, and ought to be released in order that his injuries might be attended to. District Attorney Phelps in opposing the motion said that the release of the prisoner on bail was entirely unnecessary. The prosecution was ready to try the case at once, and had put it on the calendar for Monday. Judge Sutherland coincided with the District Attorney, and denied the motion to admit to bail. Mr. Chipman subsequently applied to the District Attorney for an order on the Tombs physician to examine Coburn, with the view of having him removed from the Tombs to Bellevue Hospital. The District Attorney issued the required order, but up to a late hour last night, owing to the forms necessary to be complied with in such cases, nothing had been done in the matter, and Coburn, therefore, still remains in the Tombs. He will be taken to the Court of General Sessions to-morrow morning, and placed on trial, unless it can be shown that his injuries are serious.

At 10 o'clock on Friday night, Capt. Williams, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, sent Detective Schmittberger, of his command, to Coburn's drinking saloon to ascertain if the place was licensed by the Board of Excise. The officer found the place in charge of George Pettinger, the bar-tender, and filled with a motley assemblage of "sporting" characters, drinking freely and discussing Coburn's arrest. Pettinger, when interrogated by the officer, said the place was licensed, but on being asked to exhibit the license he admitted that his statement was false. Capt. Williams thereupon ordered the arrest of the bar-tender and the closing up of the establishment. Pettinger was taken into custody and conveyed to the West Thirtieth Street Police Station, where he was locked up for the night. Pettinger was arraigned before Justice Flammer at the Washington Place Police Court yesterday, charged with violating the Excise law, and was sent to the Tombs in default of bail. On inquiry at the office of the Board of Excise it was learned that Coburn had never applied for a license. The Excise Commissioners say that the last license issued for the drinking-place at No. 1,286 Broadway was granted to J. Enscor, and expired on June 23 last. About a month ago an application for a license was received from F. J. Bang, and this was favorably indorsed by Capt. Williams. The license was not granted, however, as Bang in the meantime had ceased to be the proprietor of the place. Yesterday a communication was received by the Excise Board from Inspector Dilks and Capt. Williams protesting against the issuance of a license to Coburn.

A COOL COMEDIAN.

W. W. Newcombe, a comedian, while playing in the pantomime of "Nix" at Hooley's Opera-house, Brooklyn, yesterday afternoon, accidentally fell on the stage and broke his leg. Though suffering acute agony, he kept a smiling face, and managed to have himself removed from the stage without conveying any knowledge of the accident to the audience. Mr. Newcombe was taken in a carriage to the City Hotel in this City.

Mr. Moritz Ellinger will lecture on "The Cuneiform Alphabets" this evening at the Teutonia Assembly Rooms, under the auspices of the Maimonides Library Association.

Rev. James S. Ostrand, assisted by the teachers of the Sunday-school, will give a spectacular entertainment, consisting of scenes in the Orient, illustrative of Bible times, next Tuesday evening, in Rev. Dr. Deems' Church of the Strangers.

There were reported last week at the Bureau of Vital Statistics, 410 deaths, 467 births, and 128 marriages, being a decrease of 13 deaths, 17 births, and 28 marriages as compared with the preceding week.

Hon. A. B. Meacham, ex-Superintendent of Indian Affairs, ex-President of the Indian Peace Commission, &c., will lecture in Rev. Dr. Burchard's church Sunday evening, by special invitation. Subject—"The Religion of the Red Man."

A petition, signed by a large number of merchants and business men of this City, has been sent to Congress, urging the passage of the bill now pending for the appropriation of $50,000 to aid Capt. Howgate in his scheme for the discovery of the North Pole.

The Lotus Club, No. 2 Irving place, was entered by a burglar early yesterday morning, but his arrest was secured before he could carry away $200 worth of silver-ware, which he had packed away in a box. On being arraigned before Justice Bixby he gave his name as Thomas Nash, of No. 33 East Twenty-ninth street. He was committed for trial.

About 100 entries have been made for Mr. J. Marion Pollock's amateur athletic meeting, which will take place in the American Institute Building, Sixty-third street and Third avenue, on Thursday evening, March 1. Many of the well known athletic, boat, base-ball, and dramatic clubs of this and other cities have signified their intention of participating. Entries close Feb. 22.

Capt. Welsh, of the Twenty-sixth Precinct Police, has been unable to take further action on the complaint of William Powers, of Springfield, N. H., who states that Russell & Co., of No. 37 Bond street, notified him that he had drawn a prize in the Laramie City lottery, the prize being a gold watch valued at $200, and that it would be forwarded to him on receipt of $20. Until Mr. Powers comes forward to substantiate the charge nothing can be done.

Louis Shaubert, one of the three men injured by the fall of an elevator on which they were standing, at Ringler's Brewery, Ninety-second street and Third avenue, on Friday afternoon, died yesterday at the Ninety-ninth Street Hospital. The two other victims of the accident, Jeremiah Lawler and Maurice Flood, are lying in the hospital suffering from serious injuries. Coroner Woltman has taken charge of the case of Shaubert.

James Jacques, a young man residing at No. 137 West Fortieth street, employed as a clerk by Collins, Downing & Co., No. 480 Broadway, was arrested last evening by Detective Lyons, of the Central Office, on a charge of larceny. It is alleged that Jacques, when leaving his employer's store last evening, took with him twelve yards of black cloth valued at $15, and was arrested while attempting to pawn it at a pawnshop in the Bowery. The prisoner was locked up at the Central Office.

BROOKLYN.

The Police made 480 arrests during the past week.

Supervisor at large Howell intends to veto the resolution passed by the Board of Supervisors directing the purchase, for $25,000, of a site upon which to build a new jail. Mr. Howell thinks the present jail can be put in a proper condition to receive prisoners.

William Way, of No. 463 Columbia street, was committed by Justice Ferry yesterday, on a charge of shooting three boys, named James Brady, Peter Terrence, and James Hughes. A crowd of boys were annoying Way, and he loaded a shotgun and fired at them.

The residence of Mr. John Mansbacher, on East New-York avenue, was entered by a burglar early yesterday morning. Mr. Mansbacher was aroused by the thief, and fired two shots without effect at the intruder. The burglar succeeded in carrying off $75 worth of property.

Mr. Charles Lowrey, Secretary and counsel to the Dime Savings Bank, died at his residence, No. 10 Seventh avenue, yesterday morning, after an illness of 10 days. Mr. Lowrey, who was only 48 years of age, was a well-known lawyer, and for several years the partner of the late Cyrus P. Smith.

THE ATTACKS ON THE COMMISSION.

DISREPUTABLE AND FRAUDULENT PRETENSES OF THE DEMOCRATS IN CHARGING PARTISANSHIP ON THE REPUBLICAN MEMBERS—HEWITT'S MISREPRESENTATIONS MET BY FLAT DENIAL—THE PARTISAN ACTION ON THE DEMOCRATIC SIDE FROM THE BEGINNING.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—Mr. Hewitt says to-night that there will be no effort to defeat or delay the final decision of the tribunal, but he is terribly severe upon the Commission, and he has prepared a speech which he will deliver to-morrow, when the Louisiana case shall be under consideration, in which he will assail the Commission generally and Mr. Hoar particularly. He will declare that when the bill creating the Commission was under consideration in the committee appointed to frame it, Mr. Hoar distinctly and unequivocally stated that under this measure it would be the duty of the tribunal not only to decide the cases of contest, but, in making its decision, it should examine into all the evidence upon which the contest was made. Mr. Hewitt says he can substantiate the assertion that Mr. Hoar made these statements by all the Democrats that were on the committee, and he expects to be followed, in his arraignment of Mr. Hoar to-morrow, by Mr. Hunton and Mr. Springer, who are his Democratic colleagues on the committee. After Mr. Hewitt shall have delivered himself of his remarks, he will appear before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections to tell what he knows about the attempt to purchase a Republican Elector in Oregon to vote for Tilden.

The assertion by Mr. Hewitt that Mr. Hoar had said in the joint committee, while framing the bill creating the Electoral Tribunal, that the Commission should go behind the returns and take testimony, is pronounced by Mr. Hoar as absolutely untrue. He says he never gave even an intimation to Mr. Hewitt or to any one else that he held such a view, and when Mr. McCrary's bill, which in express terms gave the Commission such power, was up for consideration, the House members of the committee distinctly said that they were opposed to it. Mr. Hoar scouts the idea that he or any of his associates gave any such promise as Mr. Hewitt claims they did, and says the whole tenor of the debate in both the House and Senate shows that all the Republicans combatted the view that the Commission had a right to go behind the returns. He feels very much annoyed that Mr. Hewitt should make this charge after the full understanding upon all three questions that was had in the committee while the bill creating the Electoral Tribunal was being framed.

The Democratic charge of partisanship in the Commission is one of the most disreputable and fraudulent pretenses of the campaign. It will not be denied by any one of several leading Democrats that when the bill establishing the Electoral Commission was before the Joint Committee, and while it was yet undetermined how the judicial part of the Commission should be composed, it was ascertained, through David Dudley Field and inquiries otherwise made, that Justices Clifford and Field could be depended on to vote as Democrats as certainly as the Democratic Commissioners to be chosen from the House and Senate could be depended on. The information which Hewitt and the other Democratic members had made them absolutely certain that they had provided for seven partisan votes in the Commission, and they submitted to the chance of gaining another when they thought they would have Justice Davis. The Democratic members of the Joint Committee had made such assumptions of fairness as to lead one, at least, of the Republican members to earnestly believe that on the question of going behind the returns, Senator Bayard and, probably, Senator Thurman would vote in the negative. This too-confiding hope has been unfulfilled. The story is told that Senator Edmunds assured Barney Caulfield that the bill allowed the Commission to go behind the returns, but this, like Hewitt's charge against Mr. Hoar, is wholly false. The debate shows that the understanding was distinct and clear that what was left to the Commission to decide was whether, acting with the power of Congress, it had any right to go behind the returns and how far. The Republicans would not have voted for the bill if the unconditional power to go behind the returns had been in it, and the Democrats would not have accepted it with that power excluded, and that question, far more important, as was pointed out in THE TIMES, than the question of who was to be President, was left to the Commission. The discussion before the Commission recognizes this fact fully. The trouble now arises from the numerous agreements and understandings that were not embodied in the law. But it may be positively asserted that no agreement, on either side, went to the extent of controlling in any way the action of the Commission when organized.

A MISCREANT OR AN IDIOT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—The Sunday Capital returns again to-day to the discussion of the Electoral Commission and its decision, and in a double leaded editorial suggests and abets the assassination of President-elect Hayes. The first part of the article teems with vile abuse of the Supreme Court, and those members of it who are on the Commission, in particular, and then says: "If a man thus returned to power can ride in safety from the Executive Mansion to the Capitol to be inaugurated, we are fitted for the slavery that will follow the inauguration. We do not believe the people of the United States are of this servile sort. We do not believe that they are prepared without a blow to part with their hard-earned, blood-stained possessions. Notice is now served on the citizens of Louisiana and South Carolina that they must care for themselves. How soon lamp-posts will bear fruit is for them to say. To the people of the North and West notice is given that all the toil to which they are subjected, that bond holders and monopolists may fatten secure, is repaid by no security of their rights, and that a shrinkage of values is now in order. If there is law for fraud, there is reason for violence, and to that end we make our last appeal." This approval of assassination, as a means of preventing the inauguration of President Hayes, has caused intense indignation. It is believed that under laws in force in the District the writer has committed an indictable offense, and if so, it is likely that the case will be brought before the Grand Jury and the courts, and prosecuted to the extent of the law.

THE OREGON ELECTORAL VOTE.

THE COUNTING OF THE VOTES EXPECTED TO PROCEED TO-DAY—OPPOSITION TO OREGON'S VOTE ANTICIPATED — THE TILDENITES FAR FROM HOPEFUL OF SUCCESS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—It is expected to-night that the counting of the votes will proceed in the joint meeting till the certificates of Oregon are reached and referred to the Commission. There is possibility, however, that after the Louisiana decision has been debated and decided in the House a recess may be taken till Tuesday. This course is desired by some of the Democrats, and may be attempted, but the good faith of the action in caucus last night will best be exhibited by going on with the count as far as possible, with a recess as to Oregon. There seems not to be a very definite policy determined upon, though it is now announced that the Democrats will contest it as though they expected to succeed. At the same time, they disclaim all hope of success. The judgment of the best men in the party, whoever they may be, is said to be against making any claim whatever to a Tilden vote from that State. The returns must be sent to the Commission, and objections to counting Cronin's vote have been prepared by the Republicans. There is only the one simple point of eligibility to be heard, but the question of whether the Governor's certificate was based upon the canvass of votes will have to be determined. There is nothing in the decisions of the Commission heretofore to prevent them from taking evidence as to this fact, for all the decisions have recognized that the certificate must be based upon the canvass, and there have been no allegations in previous cases which required any consideration of this fact. It is not probable that any evidence will be taken, nor is it probable that any is needed, since the certificates unquestionably show the fact that Watts received a majority of votes over Cronin. The Oregon testimony of the last few days has dampened the Democratic ardor for disputing the Hayes vote. The Democrats are possessed of a vast amount of that kind of Spartan virtue which is much more grieved that the truth has been disclosed than indignant at the rascality itself. The Commission ought to be able to dispose of the Oregon case in a single day, and certainly cannot be led into spending more than two days on the subject.

HEWITT AND PELTON TO TESTIFY.

THEY ARE SUMMONED TO APPEAR BEFORE A SENATE COMMITTEE—THEY WILL BE COMPELLED TO TELL WHAT THEY KNOW OF TILDEN'S ATTEMPT TO BRIBE AN ELECTOR—ALSO TO EXPLAIN THOSE CIPHER DISPATCHES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—Messrs. Hewitt and Pelton have been summoned to testify to-morrow in the Oregon case, before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, and to bring with them their check-books, bank accounts, and other books and papers calculated to throw light upon this "crooked" business. Mr. Hewitt has been summoned at his own request, in order to show that he had no knowledge of, or connection with, the Oregon cipher dispatches recently published. Senator Kelly's explanation upon this subject made in the Senate yesterday has caused a flutter among those who were charged with the direction of Tilden's campaign, and it is probable some other gentlemen will be forced to make explanations in this connection. J. H. N. Patrick's brother is here, and is considerably exercised over the position in which Patrick has been placed by Kelly's explanation. If he knows anything about the cipher dispatches it is likely he will divulge it before the Senate Committee. This committee expect to have before them in a few days some important witnesses other than those whose name have been announced.

DAVID DUDLEY'S OCCUPATION GONE.

ALL HOPE OF AIDING HIS MASTER GIVEN UP—PROBABLE ABANDONMENT OF THE LOUISIANA CASE—THE DISCHARGE FROM CUSTODY OF GOV. WELLS AND OTHERS SOON EXPECTED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—Mr. David Dudley Field seems to have given up all hope of aiding the cause of his master Tilden by further investigation. He has virtually abandoned the Louisiana case, and it is understood that an effort, on the part of certain Southern Democrats, will be made in a few days to have Gov. Wells, Gen. Anderson, and their associates discharged from custody. Messrs. Arthur, Sharp, Phillips, Patterson, Pinckney, and others from New-York who have been summoned by the committee in question, have been notified that their testimony may not be required, and this intimation is generally regarded as an abandonment of all effort to influence the Electoral Commission by taking testimony relative to the election. Indeed, there is no State to dispute now except Oregon, and the testimony regarding that Commonwealth is not calculated to aid or encourage the great reformer. It seems now to be definitely understood that a determined effort will be made by the Democrats to have the South Carolina matter reopened, but there is not much prospect that they will be successful. The Louisiana people here are exceedingly conservative in their talk, and it is believed that some of them, at least, will be among the warmest supporters of President Hayes.

THE APPROPRIATION BILLS.

PRESENT STAGE OF LEGISLATION ON THESE SUBJECTS—MUCH WORK YET TO BE DONE BEFORE THE 4TH OF MARCH.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—It is probable that the bill to amend the Pacific Railroad acts, so as to create a sinking fund for the liquidation of the indebtedness due the Government by the Pacific Railroad Companies, will be laid aside when the Senate resumes legislative business. This bill has been thoroughly discussed during the past two weeks, and comes up again as unfinished business, but the Committee on Appropriations have several bills ready, and they will press their consideration as soon as possible. There are but 12 working days of this session remaining, and only two of the appropriation bills have become law, leaving 10 to be disposed of. The Consular and Diplomatic and Pension bills have been passed. The Indian, Fortification, and Military Academy bills are before conference committees, and will be acted on this week. The Legislative, Judicial, and Executive, and the Post Office bills, are ready for the action of the Senate, and will be called up as soon as legislative business is resumed. The Naval and Deficiency bills are before the Senate Committee on Appropriations and will be reported to the Senate this week. The Sundry Civil, River and Harbor and Army bills have not yet passed the House of Representatives. It will thus be seen that the general appropriation bills are in a more backward condition than usual, and it will be necessary to have prolonged sessions to finish up the business before the 4th of March. Several of these bills will, no doubt, cause some discussion in the Senate, though the five-minute rule will be applied, and speeches on the pending question limited to that time. Mr. Windom will have charge of the Legislative bill, Mr. West of the Post Office bill, and Mr. Sargent of the Naval bill. The others have not yet been assigned to members of the committee.

THE SOUTH CAROLINA ELECTION.

REPORT OF THE DEMOCRATIC INVESTIGATING COMMITTEE—HAYES' MAJORITY CONCEDED TO BE 831, AFTER DEDUCTING ALL IRREGULAR RETURNS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—Representative Sayler, of Ohio, Chairman of the South Carolina Investigating Committee, will make his report to-morrow. It says many mistakes and inaccuracies were found in the different returns, and some of them were signed by one and some by two managers, but if all the returns affected by such irregularities were rejected it would not change the result. The result, by ascertaining the votes cast at all the precincts, and correcting the mistakes made by the managers in the returns, shows that Bowen received the smallest vote on the Republican Electoral ticket, namely: 92,093 votes over McGowan, who received the largest vote on the Democratic ticket, 91,262 votes' a majority of 831 votes. The law of South Carolina, which passed in 1875, divided the different counties into precincts, and provided that all elections should be held at the voting precincts so established. It established in the County of Abbeville 17 voting precincts, naming the Abbeville Courthouse and 15 other places; thus, although it was enacted that there should be 17 voting precincts, the names of 16 only were given. The same mistake was made in the several statutes in some other counties. In several other counties provision was made for from two to four voting places in the county seat, usually called the "Court-house," as "Abbeville Courthouse," in the county of the same name; but in all these instances they were carefully specified as Nos. 1, 2, 3, and 4 Previous to the election the Commissioners of Election for this county, having no manner of power by law in the premises, in addition to the voting precinct provided in the statute at Abbeville Court-house ordered another precinct to be established in the same town, called No. 2. This action was protested against by the Democratic member of the Board of Commissioners, who also took the opinion of counsel and presented it to his associates, setting forth such action to be illegal and unauthorized; but the two Republican Commissioners persisted, and the voting place was established; 432 votes were there cast for the Republican Electors, and 10 for the Democratic Electors, giving a majority of 422 to the Republicans. The committee are of the opinion that this voting place was illegal and unauthorized, and that no votes cast there should be received or counted.

The committee show that an attempt was made by the Board of State Canvassers to count the vote alleged to have been given at Robbins' Precinct. The return which was sent to the Secretary of State and produced by him among the genuine precinct returns was signed by only one of the managers and another person never appointed as manager, and by a Republican Supervisor. This return gave the Republican ticket 1,317 votes and none for the Democratic ticket. The only manager signing it could not be obtained as a witness, although many efforts were made to procure his attendance. The vote cast at Robbins in 1874 was 366, and the Supervisor at that election certified that this was the full vote of both parties. If the 1,317 votes claimed to have been cast at the Robbins poll are added to the vote of the county there will be about 800 more votes cast than there were voters in the county in 1875. The committee are satisfied that no votes were cast as claimed, and that no second polling place was ever opened, and that the whole return was a fraud gotten up to insure the election of county and State candidates on the part of the Republicans. The committee say: "Before South Carolina claims through her Representatives to help make laws for the people of her sister States, or through her Electors to participate in the election of a President of the Republic, she ought in justice to be held to comply with the provisions of her own Constitution to secure a just and honest election. Every consideration of public policy, where the very existence of a Government like ours must depend on preserving the purity of the ballot, would require that any election held in wilful violation of a constitutional provision made only to secure honest voting, should be treated as void and of no effect.

That the recent election in South Carolina was held in violation of the mandate of the Constitution is clear; that it was so held that the party in power might better retain its hold on the Government, the committee have no doubt. That great frauds were committed there by reason of such refusal to set up the great safeguard of registration, the committee think it equally clear.

Under these circumstances it is for the House of Representatives to consider what effect is to be given to an election so held. The committee say that if troops were sent to South Carolina, without any legal and justifiable cause, for political purposes, and to overawe a portion of the voters, clearly an election held under such circumstances should not stand for a moment. To uphold it would be at war with all sense of right, and would shock every fair mind. An election to be valid must be free.

The committee review the proceedings of the State Supreme Court in the habeas corpus and quo warranto cases, in favor of the Democratic claimants of electors against the Republican Electors, has recently been dismissed. There was also a petition for a mandamus at the relation of William Wallace, the Speaker of the Democratic House of Representatives, against the Secretary of State, to order the delivery of the returns of votes for Governor and Lieutenant Governor to him, as provided for by the Constitution, he claiming to be the Speaker of the only legal House, and that the other House was an illegal body, without authority as a part of the General Assembly. The court decided that Wallace was the Speaker of the only legal House, and that the other body was illegal, with no authority as a part of the General Assembly; in fact usurpers. Before the service of process, however, the votes had been delivered to the Speaker of the illegal body claiming to be the House, that House had counted them, rejecting the votes from two counties entirely, on ex parte affidavits, and declared Chamberlain elected, and on such declaration he was inaugurated and kept in office entirely by the authority and power of United States troops.

The committee think that the employment of soldiers for the purpose of sustaining a usurping Legislature and Executive against the judgment of the highest court of the State one of the gravest crimes which can be committed under a Government like ours, and that it cannot be condemned in terms sufficiently strong.

The committee have no doubt from the evidence that a much larger number of blacks were kept from voting the Democratic ticket by the threats, violence, and intimidation of people of their own race, than were prevented from voting the Republican ticket by a resort to like measures on the part of the whites. Many cases of threats and actual violence were proved as coming from colored people, to deter men of their own race from voting with the Democrats. Women utterly refused to have any intercourse with men of their own race who voted against the Republicans. One instance was proved of the actual desertion of a wife, with her child, because her husband made campaign speeches for the Democrats. The colored people cast a larger vote than ever before for the Republicans, and a larger proportion of the voters actually voted than in any other State. The increase of votes was no more where the Democrats controlled than in those places where the Republicans were largely in the majority. Both parties cast votes in every voting place, and there was no precinct where there was not some colored Republican votes. The evidence not only shows that there was no considerable intimidation or violence, either before or at the election; but in direct conflict with most of the testimony of the colored people who were called to testify as to the same places.

The committee feel bound to say that the conduct and bearing of the officers and soldiers of the United States Army were both prudent and wise, and although their presence was made available to overawe the colored voters and prevent them from voting against the Republicans, yet, as a general thing, neither officers nor men did anything to give encouragement to such belief. The present State Government, like its predecessors, has no power to protect the people, and is so utterly weak that nothing but the moral power of the support of the General Government keeps it in existence a single day. Take this wrongful support from Chamberlain's unlawful Government, and it will quickly vanish, like dew before the sun, and no longer disturb the peace of an oppressed and long-suffering people.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—Mr. Logan's bill for the issue of silver coin and to make the silver dollar a legal tender was last Friday made in the Senate the special order for 1 o'clock to-morrow; but the probabilities are that the two houses will be in joint meeting at that time to count the Electoral vote, or if separated they will be discussing the Louisiana vote under the law which allows each house two hours for discussion, so the Silver bill must take its place on the calendar of special orders. It is very doubtful that the bill would be considered even if legislative business should be in order at 1 o'clock to-morrow, and the appropriation bills were out of the way, as a large number of Senators are adverse to taking it up prior to the report of the Silver Commission, which will be submitted on Saturday next, the 24th inst. The report of that commission will be voluminous, as they have examined a large number of witnesses in this country, and have propounded interrogatories to correspondents, distinguished financiers and business men, abroad. They also, through the State Department, sent interrogatories touching the various propositions to the representatives of the United States in the different countries of the world. Numerous answers were received, all of which have been properly digested and arranged.

The Mexican Government, through its Minister, Mr. Mariscal, has filed with the Secretary of State a protest against the payment of several large awards found in favor of certain American citizens or corporations against that Government, and testimony has already been filed with a committee of the Senate, impugning the award of the umpire in the Weil case, the award being $400,000. Testimony will shortly be produced in order to show that two other claims, each of a much larger amount than the Weil case, are illegal and fraudulent.

The friends of the Texas Pacific Railroad have determined to make no further effort to pass their bill this session. The Electoral complication and the pressure of appropriation bills preclude the consideration which its importance demands, and which its friends desire it should have. They think there is no doubt whatever that the bill would pass could a vote be legitimately reached.

Attention having been drawn to the absence from the seat of Government of several of the foreign Ministers accredited here, and who persistently reside in New-York, it is rumored that the Secretary of State is about to call the attention of their Governments to their constant absence, and to request instructions to the Ministers to be at their posts, or that others may be appointed who will remain at the seat of Government.

Mr. G. W. Griffin, Consul at the Samoan Islands, who has been in Washington for weeks, having been empowered by the Government of that country to negotiate a treaty of friendship and commerce with the United States, will return to his post early in March. He did not ask to be received in the character of minister with which he was accredited, but simply made representation of the subject in his capacity of United States Consul. Much interest is taken in the object of his visit, especially by sojourners from the Pacific coast, as, apart from securing a profitable trade, the Samoans would, by a treaty, be incidentally protected from the injustice now inflicted upon them by the representatives or subjects of European powers.

It has been ascertained from a trustworthy source that Maddox, the witness before the Committee on the Powers, Privileges, and Duties of the House in counting the Electoral vote, called on the President after returning from New-Orleans, and represented to him that Gov. Wells was afraid of his life, and therefore claimed protection. The President referred him to Secretary Chandler, the Chairman of the National Republican Committee. This was all the witness had to do with the President, who did not promise protection, although he said Wells ought to have it if necessary.

SERIOUS FIRE ON LONG ISLAND.

THIRTY-THREE BUILDINGS IN SAG HARBOR DESTROYED—THE ENTIRE VILLAGE AT ONE TIME IN GREAT DANGER—A FORTUNATE CHANGE OF WIND—THE LOSS UPWARD OF $200,000.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SAG HARBOR, Feb. 18.—About 1 o'clock this morning fire was discovered in the rear part of M. H. Gregory's store, on the west side of Wharf street, and which was already under such headway that all efforts to extinguish it proved fruitless. The wind was blowing a perfect gale from the west, and the night was dry and cold. In a few minutes the wind shifted to the north-west, and had it changed due north the whole village would have been swept away. As it was, however, the fire was confined to the north and north-east of the village, consuming thirty-three buildings. The fire broke out in the extreme northern building on Wharf street. It swept away all the large storehouses and shops on that thoroughfare, the large Hunting brick block at the foot of Main street, and the east side of Main street up to and including the Nassau House; then east and south-east across to Coss and other streets, burning several dwellings, including the house of Zachariah Rogers. The Cream-tartar works, the steam planing mill, Music Hall, and the Maidstone steam flouring mills were among the buildings burned. The loss on buildings will exceed $150,000, and on movable property about $50,000, on the whole of which there was but about $35,000 insurance. The fire, it is believed, was the work of an incendiary. M. H. Gregory loses one building, Nickerson & Vail, 1; S. S. Crowell, 1; B. F. Hunting, 1; John Fordham, 1; H. & S. French, 2; Hunting Cooper, 1; W. & G. H. Cooper, 1; Maidstone Mills, 4; Jedediah Conklin, 2; Cream-tartar works, 1; George B. Brown, 1; John Decastro, 3; Nassau House, 2; John Kelly, dwelling; Edward Murphy, dwelling. Mrs. H. Graham, dwelling; Mrs. William Lowen, dwelling; N. Matthews, dwelling and shop; Mrs. F. Corcoran, dwelling; Peter Hughes, barn, Z. Rogers, dwelling. The Maidstone Mills Company's loss is nearly $40,000, and the Hunting Brick block upward of $20,000. The insurances on buildings, as far as heard from, is as follows: Gregory, $5,000; Crowell, $500; H. & S. French, $1,500; Fordham, $700, Maidstone Mills, $12,000; Decastro, $2,000; Brown, $2,000; Kelly, $1,200; Murphy, $800: Graham, $500; Rogers, $1,500; Nassau House, $500 on furniture.

Sag Harbor is a quaint and picturesque village founded about the year 1730, and situated on the north shore of the Southern promontory of Long Island, in the townships of East Hampton and South Hampton, Suffolk County, at a distance of 107 miles from New-York. The population in 1870 was 1,723, and in 1875 2,100. It has a good harbor, and was formerly largely engaged in the coasting trade, being the only outlet of a good farming district. During the Summer season the "Hamptons," which are situated a short distance from the village, are quite a fashionable resort, and the place is frequented by a large number of visitors from New-York. Several handsome Summer residences are to be found in the rural districts adjoining, and the drives in the vicinity are considered the most pleasant on this part of the island. The village itself stands upon an eminence, commanding a fine view of the bay and the surrounding country. In 1861 there were 61 ships and brigs, owned by the residents of the place, engaged in the whaling business, besides a number of smaller vessels employed in the coasting trade, with a capital invested of about $2,000,000. Shortly after the organization of the Federal Government the place was made a distinct port of entry, and officers of customs were appointed. In 1790 Henry P. Deering was appointed Collector of the port by Gen. Washington. During the Revolution Sag Harbor was the scene of a brilliant victory over the English by Col. Meigs, who, with a force of 170 men, on two whaling boats, stood the fire of an English schooner, armed with 12 guns, and finally succeeded in destroying two sloops which were laden with provisions for the British troops, killing six men and taking 90 prisoners. In 1768 the first church was erected, and in 1817 this was replaced by a more commodious and handsome structure. A fire occurred in the same year which destroyed the greater part of the town and dealt a severe blow at the rising trade of a village only just recovering from the suspension of business during the Revolutionary War. The burned portion of the town was, however, soon afterward rebuilt, and by the energy and thrift of the inhabitants prosperity was again restored.

RAILROAD BRIDGE BURNED.

HARRISBURG, Feb. 18.—Eight spans of the Lewiston and Sunbury railroad bridge at Selinsgrove were destroyed by fire last night, involving a loss of $30,000. The loss of the bridge destroys the connection of the Lewiston road with Sunbury.

MILL OPERATIVES ON A STRIKE.

NEW-BEDFORD, Feb. 18.—The strike of operatives at the Wamsutta mills is fairly inaugurated, and the mills will not start to-morrow morning. The strike is in the hands of a committee of 30. A finance committee will visit other manufacturing of ins to secure pecuniary aid.

THE SOUTHERN DEMOCRACY

COURSE OF THE LEADERS.

NORTHERN REVOLUTIONISTS DENOUNCED—THE DECISION OF THE ELECTORAL COMMISSION TO BE SUSTAINED—VIEWS OF JOHN YOUNG BROWN AND BEN HILL—A NEW EFFORT TO OVERTHROW THE PACKARD GOVERNMENT IN LOUISIANA BY ARBITRATION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—The chagrin of a great majority of the Northern Democrats is very great over the result of last night's caucus. While there had been no concert of action or conference among the rank and file of the Democracy in the House, a large number of them believed from the beginning that the decision of the tribunal, if against them, could and would be defeated by delay or otherwise. When the decision was made this hope was very strong, and for a time seemed to have great force, but it was soon observed that the dishonorable attempt to defeat a promulgation of the decision of the tribunal came almost entirely from the North and West, and that the South was almost a unit in favor of standing by the decision of the Commission. Up to the meeting of the caucus last night it was, however, confidently hoped and believed by the Northern extremists that the division of sentiment among the Democratic members would be so equal that there would be an opportunity to bind the party organization in favor of resisting an announcement of the decision. After the caucus assembled, however, it was soon found that this was a vain hope; for the South came up with a solid front in favor of abiding by the tribunal's decision, and in the stormy scenes that followed they made their influence felt in the direction of the right, and when the final ballot was taken they voted to a man to abide by the decision and to give it prompt force and effect. Out of the 56 negative votes all were, with one exception, from the North and West. The speeches of Ben Hill, of Georgia, and John Young Brown, of Kentucky, were models of good judgment and sober intelligence, and to-day both of these gentlemen are the recipients of congratulations from their friends and denunciations from their Northern party associates, who desired to dishonor their calling by defeating the objects for which the Commission had been created. Some of these Northern copperheads go so far as to declare that the Southern Representatives have deserted them in a body, so as to make fair weather with the Republican Party.

Mr. Hill and Mr. Brown, as well as all the other prominent Southern members, defend their actions by the declaration that there was but one path in honor and duty to follow, and that was in the direction of accepting the work of the tribunal promptly and in good faith. John Young Brown said that he had never given so much thought to any public act of his life as to his vote on the Electoral Tribunal bill, and that he had worked himself up to an enthusiastic support of the measure because he believed it was a peaceful solution of the question, and because he believed that a careful review of all the facts by the Tribunal would give Mr. Tilden the Presidency. He felt, he said, as bitter a disappointment at the result as any man could feel, but there was only one thing in honor to do, and that was to accept the result whatever it might be. If the outcome had been different he would have thought it perfidious for the Republicans to have attempted by any means to have delayed the announcement. The South, he said, would stand to a man against any attempt to delay. Mr. Hurd, of Ohio, made a very bitter speech against the tribunal, and was opposed to accepting the result of its labors. Ben Hill reminded the caucus that this was a grave matter; that they had created a body to decide certain disputed matters in reference to the late election; that the body named had made its decision, and the same body that assisted in creating it proposed not only to deny its assent, but by unmanly if not dishonorable means prevent its acceptance. He said the Southern people would never support or defend such an action. They could stand defeat, but not dishonor.

The defection of the Southern Democrats is evidently very formidable and is frightening the New-York managers. The Southerners at the beginning of the session took a position which defeated the immediate adoption of the revolutionary measures proposed by Fernando Wood, and now that the decisive point in the controversy has been reached they again stand in the path of revolutionary proceedings. In this course there can be no doubt they are sincere. Expressions from many of them are confidentially repeated whose names cannot now be used, and which are much stronger than any that have been heard in caucus. The Southern Representatives generally are men who have the virtues of frankness and manliness at least, and they are not naturally like the New-York managers, plotters, and intriguers. They say now that they have gone far enough. They will not lend their influence to cause a disturbance. They have had one war and don't want another. From the beginning they have been for a peaceful solution, and they will insist upon maintaining the law as it stands. They cannot be expected to say they prefer Hayes to Tilden, for they voted for the latter—though they would be unwilling to do it again—and there is a spirit existing that may lead to a co-operation of Southern Democrats with the Hayes Administration in certain contingencies which may arise.

The announcement that the decision to recognize the Packard Government had been reached was at least premature. There is now a movement on foot to submit the State questions at issue in Louisiana to the peaceful arbitration of the courts or a Congressional Commission, and if the details of a plan can be satisfactorily arranged the proposition is likely to receive encouragement from leading men of both parties.

THE DUAL GOVERNMENTS.

THE PROBABLE ACTION OF THE PRESIDENT IN THE SOUTH CAROLINA AND LOUISIANA CASES—SOUTHERNERS DESIROUS TO HAVE THE MATTER LEFT TO THE NEXT ADMINISTRATION.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—The Administration has not as yet taken action regarding the Louisiana Gubernatorial question. The President said, several weeks ago, that he would not do so pending the investigation, by committees of Congress, into the election in that State; but it is supposed that after the vote shall have been counted in the joint meeting of the two houses, he will come to some determination as to Louisiana, as well as to South Carolina, in relation to the Governorship.

A number of Southern members of Congress, together with representative men from the South, will call on the President to-morrow to request him to take no action on the Gubernatorial questions in Louisiana and South Carolina, but to leave it to the determination of his successor.

THE DEMOCRATIC CHANGE OF FRONT.

THE NORTH CAROLINA SENATE REVERSES ITS ACTION ON THE ELECTORAL BILL—RESISTANCE TO THE INAUGURATION OF PRESIDENT HAYES ALL BUT ADVISED—FIERCE RAGE OF THE EX-REBELS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

RALEIGH, Feb. 18.—Pending the passage of the Electoral bill in the House, the Legislature of this State passed resolutions indorsing the bill, and requesting the Congressmen and Senators from this State to vote for the measure.

Yesterday, having seen the decision in the Louisiana case, the following preamble and resolutions were introduced in the Senate by a Democratic Senator:

Whereas, The action of the Electoral Commission in establishing fraud and corruption as a legal, constitutional and effective method of electing the President of the United States, is an unparalleled outrage upon the rights of the people, and tends to the certain and speedy destruction of our form of government; therefore Resolved, First—That the General Assembly of North Carolina deplores the action of the majority of the Electoral Commission, and denounces it as wicked, unlawful, and unconstitutional. Second—That a candidate who has not been elected President according to law, but who has been rejected by a large majority of his fellow-citizens, cannot, by the fraud of Returning Boards, and the wicked partisanship of the Electoral Commission, be lawfully installed as the Chief Magistrate of the people. Third—Because the Electoral Commission upholds fraud and subverts right and justice, therefore, that our Senators and Representatives in Congress be requested to use all means known to the Constitution and laws to prevent its action from becoming final.

A long debate occurred, and seeing that the adoption of the third resolution would stultify the Democrats because of their former resolution indorsing the bill, that resolution was stricken out, and the resolutions were adopted—yeas 21, nays 13. Three Democrats voted in the negative. Whether the second resolution means that the Democratic Party of North Carolina will aid in an armed resistance to the inauguration of Gov. Hayes, remains to be seen; and but for the adoption of the former resolution indorsing the Electoral bill, the third resolution would have been adopted as expressing the views of the Democratic Party. It is now insisted by the Democrats that the whole Electoral scheme, as enacted into a law, taking into consideration the election of Judge Davis as Senator from Illinois, was the result of a careful and deliberate conspiracy on the part of the Republican leaders, and that a trap was set for the Democrats, which they fell into upon the idea that they were assenting to the measure in the interest of peace. Democrats who supported the bill are soundly denounced as unfit to lead. No one expects the Cronin vote to be counted. Democratic rage and mortification is to be seen on every hand.

TILDEN'S VOTING MACHINES.

THE EXPOSURES OF "EPH" HOLLAND IN CINCINNATI — THE LEADING BALLOT-BOX STUFFER IN BALTIMORE RECOGNIZED IN THE CHAIRMAN OF THE MARYLAND DEMOCRATIC EXECUTIVE COMMITTEE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 18.—Parties here have no trouble in identifying the leader of the Baltimore ballot-box stuffers at the Cincinnati election of October last, mentioned in Holland's testimony concerning the Democratic frauds then perpetrated in the latter city. He is well known to have been Harry McCoy, Chairman of the Maryland Democratic Executive Committee, and one of the leading Democrats of the State. He left here early in October in charge of a large gang of experienced ballot-box stuffers and repeaters, whom he divided between Cincinnati and Indianapolis, and brought back after they had done their work. McCoy was on the slate for Collector of Customs or Naval Officer at this port in the event of Tilden becoming President.

THE BROOKLYN NAVY-YARD LAND.

THE PROPOSED SALE TO THE CITY OF BROOKLYN—THE BILL SENT TO THE PRESIDENT—THE RECOMMENDATION OF THE NAVAL BOARD DISREGARDED.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 18.—The House bill to provide for the sale or exchange of a certain piece of land in the Wallabout Bay, New-York, to the City of Brooklyn, which passed the Senate last week, has been handed to the President for his approval. As heretofore mentioned, it provides for the appointment of a commission to consider the terms of sale, &c., and before such sale or exchange can take place the recommendation of the commission must be ratified by Congress. The Committee on Naval Affairs, in reporting the bill to the Senate, submitted a long report, in which they express no opinion as to the sale of the land, and unless the amount to be realized is its full value, and can be appropriated to the improvement of the remaining part of the yard, it would not be considered for the best interests of the naval branch of the service to part with it. The cob-dock, so called, is an important part of the Brooklyn Yard, and is in great need of repairs. It is an artificial island in Wallabout Bay, and contains about 35 acres, 12 of which in the centre are already partly dredged, and well calculated for a wet basin. It is entirely surrounded by navigable waters, and on the East river front has 21 feet of water at low tide. Ships can be moored on the East River front out of the tide and free from the risk of ice, and out of the way of the navigation of the river. On the Wallabout channel there is also a large water front entirely out of the tide. This front will need dredging to any required depth. The present piers, wharfs, &c., around this island are in a rotten condition, entirely unfit for use, and discreditable to the Government. With the money expended upon it which would arise from the proposed sale to the City of Brooklyn, if Congress should hereafter authorize the sale, it could be made the most valuable part of the Navy-yard, having a large water front and a basin capable of containing at one time from 12 to 20 ships in a perfectly secure position. The importance of improving the cob-dock is so great that the committee are willing to recommend the sale of the land mentioned in this bill, provided the purchase money can be wholly applied to said improvement.

FOUND FROZEN TO DEATH.

UTICA, Feb. 18.—Barney Burgess, an old resident of Oriskany Falls, disappeared from his home mysteriously on Thursday, and his body was found frozen on Charles Terry's farm, three miles from here, on Saturday night.

WRESTLING IN CENTRAL NEW-YORK.

UTICA, Feb. 18.—Major J. H. McLaughlin, the champion wrestler of America and England, and John Cavanagh, of Vermont, are both in the City in readiness for the wrestling contest on Tuesday evening. The men are evenly matched in size, and both are in magnificent condition.

A HOUSEBREAKER SHOT.

EVANSVILLE, Feb. 18.—The Journal's New-Harmony, Ind., special says a burglar known as Charles Johnson was shot while breaking into a store on Thursday night at that place. Nothing is known of his antecedents. He was a man about 50 years of age of medium build, with gray whiskers.

NOTES FROM ENGLAND.

POLITICAL AND GENERAL GOSSIP.

THE EASTERN QUESTION—MR. GLADSTONE AND THE LEADERSHIP OF THE OPPOSITION—BENNETT'S ARRIVAL IN LONDON—THE CASE OF AN AMERICAN SPIRITUALIST—THE UPS AND DOWNS OF A CONSERVATIVE NEWSPAPER—DEATH OF A CHARMING LADY—HENRY IRVING'S SUCCESS IN RICHARD III.

From Our Own Correspondent.

LONDON, Saturday, Feb. 3, 1877.

The conference at Constantinople closed a fortnight ago, as everybody who understands anything of Eastern affairs expected it to do, with a complete triumph for Turkey. As regards the question of peace or war, that remains in the hands of Russia, the only arbiter on that point from first to last. A week ago, no explosion of anger or resentment having marked the last ceremonies of the ambassadors, we began to think that the tension was over, that Russia being left with no further excuse to fight, and having no money to back her pretensions, Europe would fall back into something like a tranquil condition. Even Mr. Gladstone and Mr. Bright seemed better satisfied with the Government, and congratulated their supporters upon the hypothesis that their opposition had brought Lord Beaconsfield and Lord Salisbury to their senses. Turkey, anxious to give evidence of the sincerity of her intentions in regard to internal reformation, set to work with vigor, and our stock markets became buoyant. Chatty and so-called fashionable newspapers began to discuss and to invent incid force to Bowles, of the American Exchange. It was done on a post card, and read as follows:

DEAR S.: One hundred thousand Romans saluted the old flag on Sunday. There aint been no such a time since Augustus died, several thousand years ago. Augustus used to run a moral show in the Coliseum, and have Christians eat wild beasts, but Gus is dead now, and the show is bust up. As the Tiber carried me into the Eternal City on last Sunday from Orte, a distance of 200 kilometres, all his old customers came to see me. I was 31 hours afloat, and it was almighty cold, "you bet." Remember me to all friends. Yours, BOYTON.

This is Boyton's fun. In a private letter he speaks in the warmest terms of the treatment he has received, and with great admiration of the Italian people. He expected to be honored by an audience with his Holiness the Pope yesterday. By the bye, it occurs to me to warn Americans who have been accustomed to make for Bowles' at Charing Cross, on their arrival in London, that after March next they must not be surprised to find this institution standing no longer there. The lease of the premises is expiring, and the landlord not only raises the rent, but demands a premium of $5,000 for a renewal of it. Mr. Bowles will therefore probably change his location after the next quarter, but the Reading-room and Exchange will be found somewhere in the neighborhood of Charing Cross. As this little snuggery is the only attempt at an American club in London, where strangers can see the papers and get information, one can imagine the consternation of visitors who, relying upon its usefulness, may find the old quarters occupied by new comers. I learned there that Mr. James Gordon Bennett, the duelist, had arrived in London, having reached Liverpool in the steamer City of Richmond. He has taken rooms in Bond street, but he keeps himself remarkably quiet. They were discussing his vagaries—half a dozen Americans—most of them intensely tickled with the humorous article of THE TIMES on the whole affair, which has been barely commented upon by the English press. Your chronicles of the scandal have been quoted, and, unfortunately, untraveled English people regard the Herald as a representative American journal, and Mr. Bennett as a type of your editors, so that his escapades are not calculated to exalt John Bull's opinion of the American press. But the day will come, I suppose, when even English people at home will understand how to estimate such papers as the Herald, and such journalists as James Gordon Bennett.

There is a significant paragraph in the Echo under the heading of "The Labor Market." It bemoans the shock which the watch trade has received by the continued large importation of American chronometers. The London watch-makers are described as "getting alarmed," and quite a panic has seized the Swiss watch-makers, who have for years supplied the English market with cheap goods. It was lately mentioned by one of our trade journals that America had received some important locomotive contracts from English colonies. We shall get accustomed to this kind of competition in due time, and as our exports to the States decrease, possibly we may be successful in "fresh fields and pastures new." There is plenty of room for a large trade in European Turkey, and it may be that the Turkish reforms will open up that little-known part of the world, and make it profitable for commercial enterprise.

DR. SLADE AND HIS TRIALS.

When the clerk made out the conviction of Slade, the Spiritualist, he omitted in copying to include the sentence "by palmistry and otherwise," forming part of the crime of obtaining money wrongfully, which was charged against him. Therefore, when the appeal against the conviction came to be heard, the flaw was pointed out by counsel, and the informality was sufficient to give the prisoner his freedom. The whole structure, therefore, falls to the ground, and must be rebuilt. It is argued by the legal journals that the court had power to amend the indictment, but it did not do so. Fresh summonses have therefore been applied for and granted by the Bow Street Magistrate, who hopes some other stipendiary will hear the case on its reopening—he has had enough of it. Meanwhile another Spiritualist, Mr. Lawrence, has been serving his three months' imprisonment in Horsemonger Lane Jail until yesterday, when he was released on bail pending his appeal; and recently, in various parts of the country, other professed mediums and fortune-tellers have been committed to prison as rogues and vagabonds. It would be a useful thing if the act of Parliament could be turned against the City, where "by palmistry and otherwise" dupes are taken in to a much larger extent than is the case in Spiritualistic circles. When the officers went to serve the new summonses on Slade and his assistant, Simmons, their birds had flown. In the interval of the break-down of the appeal and the fresh application of Mr. Lewis, the doctor and his man slipped away en route for Russia. It is said that the Czar's Chamberlain and Dr. Slade are Spiritualistic friends, and although this is asserted as "chaff," there may be more truth in it than scoffers imagine; for the late "Emperor of all the Russians" received Mr. D. D. Home at his court with great marks of friendship, made him presents, and actually became godfather to his child. Spiritualism is fashionable at more than one of our European courts, though the Pope had Mr. Home expelled from the Eternal City. Touching Dr. Slade's sudden disappearance, his solicitors, Messrs. Munton & Morris, have issued a card, in which they say that their client is alarmingly ill. "Several medical men have advised that any public appearance at this juncture would be attended with serious, if not fatal, consequences. It must have been obvious to every one on Monday that Dr. Slade was not in a fit state to be in court; indeed he had been so ill for several days that he contemplated asking the Treasury to have him visited by a physician of their own selection. We may say, in fact, that he absolutely crawled into court to keep faith with his bail and prosecute his appeal. As was publicly stated at Bow street in October, Dr. Slade only came to this country en route to Russia. Honor alone, therefore, kept him in England at great personal loss. Before it was known that fresh proceedings had been taken, our client had left London to insure the rest and quiet he so urgently needed, traveling by easy stages to the Continent, where he now is. The summonses left at Bedford place have been handed to our Mr. Munton, who intends to proceed to the Continent in a day or two to take medical advice as to Dr. Slade's fitness to appear to the renewed charge on the 8th, the day appointed. We feel confident that if the decision rests with Dr. Slade alone, he will return at once, at any risk, as he is anxious to have any charges against himself finally disposed of before the trial of the action against Mr. Maskelyne." Dr. Slade is now supported by what is called the British National Association of Spiritualists, and it is said they mean to find all the money that is necessary to vindicate Slade and his peculiar power; so that it is to be hoped we may have Mr. Maskelyne, the conjurer, on the stand, for he still continues, in spite of writs and processes, to call Slade an impostor, and at the same time to demonstrate the simplicity of the slate trick and other "manifestations."

NOTABLE NEWSPAPER CHANGES.

There has been a delicious row in the editorial room of The Standard, the slighted organ of the Conservative Party. Some years ago Mr. Johnson, the proprietor, discharged the editor in chief, Capt. Hamber, and the financial editor, Mr. D. Morier Evans, because he thought they profited too much by the influence of the paper. Capt. Hamber had been prime officer of light horse, and had obtained all his editorial experience on The Standard. Mr. Evans had been financial editor pretty well all his life. He started The Rour in opposition to The Standard, and Capt. Hamber was his editor. When the latter died, he left his money, some hundred thousand dollars, he died suddenly, and it was said he had committed suicide. Mr. Johnson had a son, who was doing fairly well as a manufacturer of printers' ink. His father promoted him to the editorial chair of The Standard, and the young man assumed the airs of a grandee with the manners of an ink-maker. He quarreled with the best men on the staff, and for the last two or three years has edited the paper down to its present level. The other morning his father rushed into his room and discharged him as keenly and as promptly as if he was dismissing his footman. Mr. Mudford, the manager, has been promoted to the vacant chair, and the opening of the session of Parliament is to see great changes in the style and contents of the paper. To return to Capt. Hamber; he edited The Hour until Mr. Macdougall, the Emma Mine sensationalist, bought it and killed it with libel suits, and soon afterward an awful calamity happened to the Captain, who is a fine, manly, kind-hearted fellow. He was a fond father, and had a handsome family of children. Three of his little ones died in one week, stricken down with scarlet fever. For the past year he has rarely been seen by any one, except now and then at his club, The Junior Carlton. Some six months ago Col. Richards, editor of The Morning Advertiser, (the property of the Licensed Victuallers' Association,) died. Capt. Hamber became a candidate for this appointment, which is worth about $6,250 a year. He has this week obtained the position by a large majority of votes, and everybody is pleased with the selection, no one more so than Mr. Charles Williams, one of the specials of The Standard, who went to the wall under the régime of Mr. Johnson, Jr. The Conservative Party has been talking of starting another journal, as Lord Beaconsfield sneers at The Standard, but the proprietor hopes under the new management to win back the respect and confidence of the Cabinet. The history of this journal is a small romance in itself. It was the old Morning Herald. Mr. Johnson bought it out of the Bankruptcy Court and converted it into a penny daily. The Carlton Club lent him $50,000 in the interest of Conservatism. For a year or two they worried him with suggestions, and at last with "commands." In due time the paper became profitable. Mr. Johnson flung the $50,000 at the heads of the Carlton Club Committee, and declared himself independant of the world. He now derives an income of $150,000 a year from the paper, and is the owner of two magnificent estates.

LONDON DRAMATIC NOTES.

Those who have any acquaintance with the most fashionable receptions in Bohemian London will miss the pretty little figure of Mrs. Montagu Williams, who was always ready to dance or sing or play the piano for the advancement of "the harmony of the evening." She was the celebrated and charming Louise Keeley, whose theatrical triumphs were cut short by matrimony. Mr. Montagu Williams was a rising barrister and a good fellow. When he deprived the stage of one of its brightest ornaments, he did not shut his wife out of the society which has its chief charm in the easy and graceful mixture of artistes and men of intellect. Mr. and Mrs. Montagu Williams dwelt together in the upper regions of Bohemian life, and were much sought after and much liked. Mrs. Williams died a few days ago. Her mother still lives in health and affluence, having survived husband and children.

Mr. George Clarke, formerly of the Fifth Avenue and other New-York theatres, is organizing a second tour in the Provinces with "The Shaughraun." It is said that his Conn is a very successful performance. Another American, Mr. Carlos Florentine, who ought to do well here, has just returned to us from the States. As a concert singer he is admirable. He did not succeed on the stage when he appeared at a West End theatre two or three seasons ago, but the other evening he sang at the Camden Athenæum, and was rapturously applauded. I have heard, in its way, no more pathetic rendering of a charmingly touching ballad than his singing of "The days when you'll forget me," written by Mr. Thomas, of New-York.

In one of my earlier letters I described to you in brief the history of Mr. Arthur Sullivan, the composer and intimate friend of the Duke of Edinburgh. He has sustained a sad loss in the sudden death of his brother, Mr. Frederick Sullivan, who played humorous parts in Arthur's musical comedies. His latest success was in "Trial by Jury," by Sullivan and Gilbert, and he was on a tour with this play when he died. It is not generally known that he lost his life, as Mr. Perkins, the American vocalist, lost his in this country, through sleeping in damp sheets at a provincial hotel. Mr. Frederick Sullivan commenced life as an architect, studying in the offices of Mr. Cundy, architect to the Duke of Westminster. He was buried on Tuesday in the Brompton Cemetery, in the presence of a crowd of sorrowing friends.

Mr. Henry Irving has made the most legitimate of his successes in "Richard III.," which was produced on Saturday night as nearly as possible as it was constructed and written by Shakespeare. All the alterations, audenda, and tinkerings of Cibber are removed, and the play, if not the better for this excision, is certainly none the worse, which is saying a great deal, when one remembers that all our great actors have regarded Cibber's additions as not only defensible, but strength put into an ill-constructed drama. Richard and Malvolio (in "Twelfth Night") are the two characters which seem especially suitable to Mr. Irving's peculiar physique. His mannerisms fall into the historic conception of the King, and he represents the craft as well as the cruelty of the well-known portraiture with a rare suavity. Mr. Irving's Richard is as far above Barry Sullivan's as the Richard of a student and a thinker who can act is likely to be above a mere copyist of tradition, who has stumped the country on the strength of his lungs and his sword-fight. This is the reason why Mr. Irving crowds the Lyceum for hundreds of nights, while Mr. Sullivan can only ventilate a London theatre. The new critic of the Times who has hitherto made a dead set at Irving, is obliged to admit that there are beauties and quaint conceits in his picture of Richard, while the entire press is as unanimous in chronicling his success as they were in jeering at the stagey display of Sullivan. The truth is, we no longer admire "acting" in the old meaning of the word; a passion torn to tatters delights us no more. We ask something as near nature as we can get it, and I suspect if Mr. Macready could come back to us we should laugh at his tragic stride, his up-turned eyes, his hand in his bosom, and his deep "tragedy tones." We could only tolerate Charles Kean in Louis XI. and Richard III. Mr. Creswick is supposed to be a fair representative of the old school. We don't laugh at him, because he is a scholarly gentleman, but we don't go to see him, and he is getting out of favor even with our East End houses, which answer to your Bowery Theatre. Mr. Irving is a young man, and he has the sense to see and understand the changes which have come to pass; and further than this he recognizes even in his Shakespearean productions the feverish desire of the public for novelty, and makes Shakespeare new by stepping out of the well-known grooves of tradition. The Lyceum has been crowded all the week, and "Richard" promises to have a long and successful run.

This reminds me that a short and successful run is applicable to steamers, and that some of the runs made by the mail-boats from this side of the Atlantic to the other are not quite satisfactory to those who have business to transact by letter between London and New-York. To make matters worse, Thursday's mail has been withdrawn from a ship which makes the journey from Queenstown in eight days and a half, in favor of a ship that takes 10 or 12. The reason for this change is a reflection upon the enterprise of the Postal Department of the English Government. They have been in the habit of paying $500 for the detention of the former ships at Queenstown while waiting for the mails. The proprietors asked for a larger sum, finding that the passengers and the engines consumed extra food and fuel to the extent of much more than that sum. The Post Office Department refused to pay more, the proprietors declined to go on at this price, and the consequence is that the mails are now sent out from this side on Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Saturdays by three of the slowest boats that cross the Atlantic. I have not a word to say against the vessels or the companies for passengers and goods. Indeed, as the ocean steamers are marvels of build and management. But in the transmission of mails speed is the great consideration. On your side you recognize this fact; we do not on ours, and the more the necessity grows for speed the less the Post Office authorities regard it. An intimation upon the subject from your Government to our Post Office authorities would have great weight—just as every suggestion from your side has with every one of our Government departments.

A WARNING TO YOUNG MEN.

The Bridgeport (Conn.) Standard of Friday publishes the following: "An East Bridgeport mother has sued a young man from Newtown to recover $60 for food and lights wasted, as she evidently considers, during his courtship of her daughter, said courtship having been brought to an untimely close by the stony-hearted swain in spite of the protestations of the young lady and her practical mother. The case comes off before a Justice in March, and the young man has been duly notified to answer."

From an Occasional Correspondent.

DUBLIN, Tuesday, Jan. 30, 1877.

Since I wrote last we have had a new Viceroy. The Duke of Abercorn has gone away, and the Duke of Marlborough reigns in his stead. There is not much to choose between them. The Duke of Abercorn was courtly and dignified, and the Duke of Marlborough is serious and slow. A good deal of gossip has been aroused by the Duke of Abercorn's departure, and a thousand reasons have been assigned for the step, but the gossipers admit that no adequate reason has been adduced, and so the mystery remains. The facts of the case are plain enough. His Grace is a poor man; he has 11 sons and daughters and 41 grandchildren. All his daughters are married save one, Lady Georgina Hamilton, whose loneliness is accounted for by an early disappointment, which has never been shaken off. Three of the sons are in the House of Commons, one of them being Under-Secretary of State for India. These sons cost a good deal of money, and the paternal estates are neither free nor large. The Duke himself is a very young man, although he has seen 66 years, and he carries his fancies and follies of youth with a light hand and an easy mind. The estate in Ireland is pretty largely incumbered, and the yacht and the town-house in London and the festivities of the season run through the £40,000 a year and leave nothing for creditors. As has been freely remarked here, most of the children came into the world owing money, and are likely to leave it in the same condition. Well, a man whose family is in this predicament can hardly afford to throw away £21,000 a year—the salary attaching to the office of Lord Lieutenant of Ireland. Besides having this direct income, he escapes all the extravagance of the London season; so that the residence in Ireland was doubly advantageous. He had been the Vice formerly, and had made himself so popular that life in Dublin with its semi-regal state, seemed to be very attractive. His daughters had made the best marriages in this generation; for although their poverty was well-known, one of them married a Marquis, one of them the heir to a dukedom, and four of them married Earls. For girls with nothing but good looks and pretty graces this was not bad. I am sorry to tell you, but the lady who married the heir to the dukedom is decidedly unhappy. The heir is a great scamp and an absentee husband. I hardly knew how to convey to you the exact line of conduct he has hitherto pursued. But I may signify it. He effects a reconciliation, behaves himself for a week, and then flies off. In the course of that year the lady has a baby, and after a time the same system is repeated. In this way the Marchioness of Blandford has had three children. Her husband is the eldest son of the Duke of Marlborough, the very nobleman who has succeeded the Duke of Abercorn. As far as rumor goes, young Blandford is in Spain. Certain it is he left London about eight or ten months ago, and at the same time the wife of another noble Marquis was found wanting in her ancestral home. Altogether, the future Duke of Marlborough is not a nice man, nor would he find a very popular reception if he visited Ireland just now.

THE NEW VICEROY'S VIOLENT CHANGES.

I need hardly tell you that the Duke of Marlborough comes of the celebrated conqueror, of course, in the female line. The great Captain's eldest son died of small-pox, and there remained but daughters. The family enjoy a pension of £1,000 a year forever, in virtue of a grant made to the Duke for having won the battle of Blenheim. With this grant of money came the estate of Woodstock, on which a palace called Blenheim was erected, all out of the public funds; so that the nation takes an interest in the family and wishes to see it behave well. As I have shown you, this feeling has suffered considerable disappointment within the past few years. The Duke and Duchess are cold people, of easy life and correct manners. Since their arrival here they have effected one or two changes, which, however estimable in themselves, have not given perfect satisfaction. The changes are oddly opposed. One relates to divine service and the other to the manner in which ladies are to be presented at the drawing-rooms in the castle. Perhaps I ought to tell you what a drawing-room is like. Of course, everybody is in court dress, the gentlemen in breeches, wearing swords, the ladies with head-dresses, and huge trains sweeping the floor. All ladies, on being presented, are kissed by the Lord Lieutenant, and to see one man kissing 50 or 60 ladies seriatim is to see a very startling performance. Up to the present time any lady who had been herself presented had the privilege of presenting another, having previously left the lady's name and rank at the Chamberlain's office. If the lady was objectionable on any ground—usually on the score of want of rank—her cards were sent back to her, and that was the sign that she was not to come. Of late years this seldom happened, for, as Dublin society is made up of persons engaged in commerce of some kind, the difficulty of drawing the line gradually ran into theirs being no line at all. The Duke of Marlborough has determined to change all this. He has ordered solemn notifications to be inserted in all the newspapers, laying down in the most rigid manner the course to be followed by all ladies desiring to present or to be presented. There is a considerable fluttering in the boudoirs of the gentle, for the regulations seem specially intended to exclude a class considerable in numbers, though not particularly remarkable for culture or elegance. The other matter in which the Duke has shown his disposition is in directing the Dean of the Chapel Royal—why "royal" nobody can tell—to have divine service every day, instead of on Sundays only as heretofore. There is usually a choral service on Sundays, the choirmen and boys being paid. These persons must now work 365 days per annum instead of 52, and there is no fund from which their stipends may be increased.

But this is a small matter compared with the discontent, almost touching revolt, which the Duke's orders have aroused among the aides de camp and superior officers. He has signified his wish that the daily service shall be attended by the whole Court; and among the younger members of the household and the military men this means early rising and headaches. His Grace left Dublin for Killarney shortly after he arrived, and, therefore, the pains and penalties of the new system have not yet been experienced. There are signs of irugality, too, in the new Vice King. He is allowed a private secretary by Parliament, and, as a rule, has another on his own account. It is well known that no salaried officer of the Crown can retain his seat in Parliament without vacating and recontesting that seat in the first instance. The Duke's second son, Lord Randolph Churchill, (married, by the way, to a daughter of Leonard Jerome, of New-York,) is member for the family borough of Woodstock, and he is at present secretary to the Duke. There is more or less gossip on this point, because Lord Randolph has shown no signs of consulting the voters of Woodstock concerning his acceptance of £800 a year from the Crown. It is not usual, it must be confessed, to see the son of a Duke secretary to anybody, and when he is a member of Parliament the situation becomes even more delicate. Parliament will assemble in a few days, and then we shall hear whether any member of the Liberal Party chooses to challenge the right of the honorable member for Woodstock to hold his seat and his office.

MR. BUTT AND THE CHIEF JUSTICESHIP.

The great popular topic of the hour is the negotiation said to have been opened between the Government and Mr. Butt, the leader of the Home Rule party, concerning the vacant Lord Chief Justiceship. I have my own opinion concerning the alleged negotiation, its character and purpose. I shall, however, set down the facts first, and any surmises after. The rumor that the Tories had offered Mr. Butt the first judicial office in the country came upon all parties by surprise. There are several considerations which tend to make any such story improbable in the last degree. In the first place, Mr. Butt's position as head of the Home Rulers renders his acceptance of office from an English Minister impossible. It would be an act of treachery to millions of people—always taking it for granted that the millions are in favor of Home Rule. But even a more serious objection lies against Mr. Butt's character as an individual. The appointment to the Lord Chief Justiceship of Ireland of a man totally wanting in morality, incessantly torn by "the want of pence which vexeth public men," and harassed by creditors of all sorts and conditions, would, in a community such as there is in Ireland, be nothing less than a national scandal. Every supporter and friend of Mr. Butt knows this in his heart, and knows that the judgments of the Queen's Bench would not invariably command the respect and loyalty of the people. It is very sad to be obliged to say this much of so remarkable a man; but nature, while lavish in her gifts, denied her spoiled child prudence, a sense of meum et tuum, and the slightest capacity for self-denial. A London journal stated the rumor, and wrote a very cheerful article, in which there were displayed a very limited knowledge of Mr. Butt and a very profound ignorance of Ireland. This article was copied into the national organs, as they are called in Ireland. And then the uses of the rumor came to light. I should tell you that there has been going on in Ireland for the last three years what is called a national testimonial to Mr. Butt. He has practically given up his business at the Bar, and it was felt, and justly, that he ought to be remunerated in some way. Grattan received a grant of £50,000. O'Connell lived for years on the contributions of the people. It is a fall from Grattan and O'Connell to Mr. Butt; but undoubtedly if ever anything is to come of Home Rule it must come through Mr. Butt. Well, this testimonial has failed. Certain members of Parliament who owed much to Mr. Butt in a public relation, contributed liberally; but the Irish people hung back. When I say that in three years, and with incessant appeals in the press, the whole sum has barely reached £5,000, you will see the hopeless character of the provision. When I add further that the money was spent by the beneficiare as it was collected, and that at this moment there are not £100 to his credit, it is plain that the national testimonial has been of nothing better than a temporary use. Now, the whole purpose of this rumor about the Chief Justiceship, in the opinion of the many, touches closely this condition of affairs. I happen to know that a certain member of Parliament—albeit a nationalist, a Home Ruler, a patriot of the first water—on hearing of the rumor wrote to Mr. Butt and begged him to accept the office, pointing out the duty of providing for one's household. Whether this letter was sincerely intended or was thrown out as a straw to show the true current, is hard to say. Mr. Butt replied in the most cautious terms, and the reply was then sent to all the newspapers. I subjoin a portion of the letter, and then beg leave to ask any candid man whether he believes the Lord Chief Justiceship was ever offered to Mr. Butt. He says:

"I hasten to thank you for your letter. You may rest perfectly satisfied that the occasion to which you refer will never arise. Indeed, those who have the power of making the offer must know perfectly well that if made it would be declined. To say that it would be a sin to forsake the old and homely poverty which prescribes the propriety of waiting to be asked; but I should be sorry you should misunderstand me. If it were possible that the offer should be made, it would be impossible for me to accept it. The position I have taken toward the Home Rule cause obliges me not voluntarily to abandon it. It is probable I may not be able long to continue to take the part I have done in public affairs, but when I cease to do so it must not be for any personal advantage to myself."

After this he proceeds to say how serious would be the injury to public morality if he, the leader of the people, accepted place from the English Minister. "For me to increase the distrust which so largely prevails against all public men would be a crime." You will see that the whole letter is hypothetical, and that the only serious part of it is that wherein he says that he may not be long able to continue in public affairs. This has been seized upon by his friends, and the dead horse of the testimonial is being flagellated in quite a terrible manner. One journal declares that to lose Mr. Butt would be a national calamity, and the nation is called upon to save itself. Letters have appeared, calling upon some one "to point out the way," so that an income may be secured to the national champion. I believe all this is very dismal and shows how unsound is public feeling in Ireland. If the people really wanted Home Rule, and really believed in the man who has raised that standard, would they not be willing to give him bread? There are 32 counties in Ireland. If they subscribed £1,000 apiece, and invested the whole at 5 per cent., Mr. Butt would have £1,600 a year certain. He could always make £500 a year in the Parliamentary recess, and this, with the tribute, would suffice to sustain him. But no such notion has ever been entertained, and if it were tried to-morrow would fail utterly. I believe I am right in stating that the entire West of Ireland has given the munificent sum of £25 to the Butt testimonial, although Home Rule meetings in the West are as enthusiastic as you can fancy. But the consideration which is most painful is the knowledge that a myth is being blown into magnificence for the purpose of squeezing money out of an unwilling people. It is as clear as day that Mr. Butt has refused nothing, because he was offered nothing; and to sound the alarm, flourish trumpets, and bray on the bassoon that he has given up honor, emolument, and ease for the cause of Ireland, is little less than a pitiful fib. He himself, in the letter from which I have quoted, speaks of the offer as a "miracle." Well, the days of miracles are over, and there is no Chief Justiceship for the leader of the Home Rule party. As to the numerical strength of that party I have no doubt, just as I have no doubt that any cry that might be raised to-morrow would enlist the verbal loyalty of the crowd. The people are too wretched to engage in political affairs with anything like heart. The promises made by successive leaders have been too big, and the resulting disappointments too grievous. I do not say that the intention of the Home Rule party is unworthy, but I am satisfied there is no sincerity in the cry as it comes to us in scores of resolutions. That Ireland is economically in a wretched condition no man can doubt; but while the people are torn by mutual detestation and religious rancor, there can be no hope for internal improvement and none for imperial charity.

AMERICAN BEEF IN IRELAND AND ITS PROBABLE RESULTS.

Let me direct attention to a matter of the very gravest practical importance, and one that touches the prosperity of America not a little. I mean the importation of American meat into these kingdoms. You can hardly imagine the anxiety which exists in this country as to the possible effects of that importation if it be carried out on anything like a large scale. The facts are simple. For 20 years Irishmen have been turning from agriculture to grazing. Ceaseless emigration rendered labor very dear, and when harvest-time came round the profits of the crops were swallowed up in wages, and too often the crop was endangered by delay in waiting for the men. The liberal introduction of machinery did not suffice to obviate the difficulty, and, in any case, there is no machine, as yet, for digging potatoes. This gradually brought farmers to the belief that it was foolish to sow corn when it could be bought cheaper from abroad; that it was foolish to stick to tillage while labor was every year getting scarcer and dearer; and that a change to grazing, with its simple responsibilities and steady income, would be prudent and profitable. This movement was aided in two ways—by the succession of wet Winters and Summers, which destroyed a great portion of the crops; and by the prevalence of rinderpest in England, which raised the price of beef. The rinderpest never visited Ireland, and the lucky speculators who had already engaged in the cattle trade realized enormous profits in a short period. And so it gradually came about that year after year there was more land turned to cattle and removed from tillage. For at least 15 years we have realized the profits of this change; albeit sound economists knew that it was wrong to substitute cattle for men, to the ruin of the general interests of the country. A certain class grew rich, of course, and by a keen management and not very scrupulous attention to honesty, the prices of meats were raised until the butcher's bill became the terror of the householder. In the meantime the landlords, ejecting small tillage-men, amalgamated their farms, leveled all into a huge sheep-walk or grazing ground, put it up to auction, and so raised the price of land. Well, we have been paying a shilling per pound for beef, and a penny or two less for mutton, and pork and bacon are far from cheap. The complaints were universal, and in Ireland the pressure was most acutely felt. The depreciation in the purchasing power of money led, about five years ago, to a general rise in wages, and there was then a natural desire to spend more rather than to be guided by the real value of the increase. One of the most immediate results was an increased consumption of meat. This had the effect of putting up the price. Now wages have fallen somewhat, and the fall has been preceded by a series of strikes. Impoverished by the battle and the defeat, the working classes are now in a very critical condition, and the general stagnation of trade, not only in Europe, but in America, has afforded no pleasant outlook for those whose interests or pursuits lead them to study anticipations. Suddenly we heard of a great scheme for transporting the countless multitudes of the prairies to these islands. At the start the idea was laughed at, but when we knew that the cattle were killed and dressed at the port of embarkation, that the ocean steamers had been so altered in construction as to allow of the meat being preserved during the voyage, things began to look ominous. It now turns out that the meat has been sold in London by the butchers for some time and not a word said. Be this as it may, the great fact stands that beef is selling in Liverpool and other large towns for 5 pence the pound, or less than half the home price. Those who have eaten it declare that it is as delicious food as man can desire, and certainly the demand just now is universal. This very morning 100 tons arrived in Dublin, and the butchers are in a state of panic as to the result. But far more serious than anything that can befall the butchers will be the revolution effected in the chief interest of the country—the growing and selling of cattle. If you can send us an unlimited supply of beef and sell it here for less than half the local price, it follows that the Irish cattle trade will be annihilated. Our London and Liverpool trade alone involves scores of millions of pounds sterling. At one blow this would be swept away. I cannot exaggerate the feeling of dismay which just now prevails with regard to this important subject. Steamer after steamer arrives laden to the deck with this beef, and the popular cry is on all sides in its favor. Then, again, pleuro-pneumonia is devastating our own herds, and they are being slaughtered under a recent enactment, and the owners receiving compensation, partly from the local rate-payers and partly from the national Government. The plain issue will be ruin to the grazing interest here, a speedy return to certain forms of tillage, perhaps beet-root and tobacco—the latter is at present prohibited. If this turn out—and I have given this business a great deal of thought, and have come to the conclusion that something of this sort will happen—then we must have a great coming back. The emigrant who has failed at your side will be very glad to favor his home-sick heart; and I shall be surprised if before Midsummer day we have not a third of a million of able-bodied Irishmen on the ocean track for home.

GOOD FORTUNE OF A POPULAR ACTRESS.

Turning from these grave topics, let me add, by way of gossip, a paragraph concerning a lady well known in your City—Mrs. Michael Gunn, née Miss Bessie Sudlow. Miss Sudlow came from Niblo's to Dublin about two and a half years ago, on the recommendation of Mr. Sothern. She came to the Theatre Royal here, the proprietors of which are Messrs. J. & M. Gunn. She played the principal part in the Christmas pantomime, and won general applause, not less by her personal attractions than by her gifts as a vocalist and actress. Leaving Dublin, she visited London, and played with great success in one of the theatres. Once more she came to Dublin to play Dick Whittington in the pantomime, and after a very successful season she was duly announced as the fiancée of Mr. Michael Gunn, the younger of the proprietors of the theatre. Mr. Gunn has long been recognized in Dublin society as a man of uncommon ability and excellent character. He is a member of the Dublin Corporation, and was regarded as "coming" for the office of Lord Mayor. Well, he married Miss Sudlow toward the end of last year, and soon after a testimonial project was successfully set on foot. About a fortnight ago the matter was concluded. About 150 citizens sat down to dinner, Mr. Gunn being the guest. The Lord Mayor presided, and Mr. Brooke, member of Parliament for the city, occupied the vice-chair. A beautiful service of plate, valued at several hundreds of pounds, was presented to him, and a very handsome address congratulated him on his union with Miss Sudlow. I thought you might like to hear of the good fortune of a lady who I understand counts her New-York friends and admirers in considerable numbers.

SUNDAY POLICE COURT NOTES.

A HIGHWAY ROBBER HELD FOR TRIAL—THE USUAL NUMBER OF CASES OF INTOXICATION AND DISORDERLY CONDUCT DISPOSED OF AT THE SEVERAL COURTS.

At the Tombs Police Court yesterday morning, John Bowles, aged 24, a native of Canada, residing at No. 79 Chatham street, was arraigned on a charge of highway robbery. The complainant, Edmund Murphy, of No. 429 East One Hundred and Nineteenth street, testified that as he was standing near the corner of Pearl and Chatham streets at 12:30 o'clock on Sunday morning, he was assaulted by the prisoner and another person unknown, and robbed of a double-case gold watch valued at $100. He gave the alarm and pursued the thieves. On catching up with them a struggle ensued, and Bowles, seeing the Police coming to his victim's assistance, cunningly slipped the watch into the latter's outside pocket, where it was afterward found. Bowles was arrested by Capt. Murray, of the Fourth Precinct, and another officer, and both were taken to the station. After hearing the case yesterday, Judge Kilbreth decided to hold Bowles in $3,000 bail for trial. The complainant Murphy was held in $500 to appear as a witness.

Judge Wandell presided at Essex Market Police Court yesterday morning, and disposed of a number of cases of intoxication and disorderly conduct. Among the prisoners arraigned were old men and women, the record of whose misspent lives could be plainly traced in their haggard looks and shabby appearance; youths who had just taken their first step on the downward path that leads to ignominy and shame; husbands who charged their wives with intoxication, and begged the Judge to commit them to the keeping of the officers of the law; with the average number of professional thieves and burglars, old in iniquity and hardened in crime. Joseph Stein, of No. 79 Delancey street, was charged with keeping a disorderly lodging-house, and was held in $500 bail. James Lawrence, of No. 232 East Tenth street, was arraigned for breaking into the house of Samuel Krowsky, No. 20 Ludlow street, and stealing clothing worth $55. He was held to answer. Mary Perry, an old woman, who was evidently no stranger to the court, after hearing the officer accuse her of being intoxicated, inquired of the Judge, in a familiar tone which evinced little concern for her position, how much his Honor was going to give her this time, and was answered three months' imprisonment. A laboring man, named Lindsay, charged his wife with intoxication and disorderly conduct, and begged the Judge to send her to the Island. The woman pleaded that she was the mother of seven children, and on promising to mend her ways the court advised her husband to take her home and give her another trial. After disposing of several other similar cases, Inspector Thorne called Judge Wandell's attention to the case of a man named George Wilson, a professional thief, residing at No. 23 Monroe street, who was arrested last week on a charge of stealing a case of jewelry valued at $700 from R. A. Keeping, No. 24 Maiden Lane. Wilson was arrested in South street on Wednesday last, by Officer Maloney, of the Seventh Precinct, on suspicion of having stolen the case of goods, which he was conveying to one of the railroad depots in a wagon. Upon inquiring into the matter it was found that the officer's suspicions were well-founded, the case of jewelry having been taken away from the sidewalk in front of the store in Maiden Lane. Wilson watched his opportunity, and while Mr. Keeping was out he employed a cartman and a porter, and having placed the case upon the wagon, ordered the driver to proceed to one of the depots. He was locked up in the prisoners' box at Essex Market on Wednesday night, and next morning, when arraigned before the Police Justice, he had so completely changed his appearance by shaving off his beard and changing his dress that the porter and truckman whom he employed to take the case away could not identify him. At present it is not known whether he succeeded in changing clothes with one of the other prisoners or was aided by the officer in charge. Inspector Thorne stated that he was determined to get to the bottom of the matter in the morning.

FOREIGN MISCELLANY.

HOW THEY ARE CULTIVATED—ONE OF THE INDUSTRIES OF A GREAT EMPIRE.

From the Pall Mall Gazette.

One of the industries of Japan is the cultivation of mushrooms, which are exported in large quantities from that country, and some interesting information respecting them is given by Consul Robertson in his report on the trade of Kanagawa lately issued. The best of the edible species of mushrooms are known as "matsutaké" and "shiitake." The difficulties attendent on preserving the former kind almost exclude them from the market for export; for not only do they decompose very rapidly, but even when successfully dried are nearly tasteless, and thus useless in cookery. The shii-take species, however, have this peculiar excellence, that, though all but tasteless in their raw state, when they are dried they have an extremely fine flavor. The quantity that grows naturally on the decayed roots or cut stumps of the shii-tree is not sufficient to meet the demand for them, consequently much skill has been brought to bear on their cultivation, notably by cutting off the trunks of the shii and other trees and forcing the growth of the mushroom on them. Different varieties of oak are most in favor for the cultivation of the mushroom, the tree known as the shii giving, however, the best results. About the beginning of Autumn the trunk, about 5 or 6 inches in diameter, is selected and cut up into lengths of 4 or 5 feet; each piece is then split down lengthwise into four, and on the outer bark slight incisions are either made at once with a hatchet, or the cut logs are left till the following Spring, and then deep wounds 2 or 3 inches long are incised on them. Assuming the first course to have been pursued, the logs, after having received several slight incisons, are placed in a wood or grove where they can get the full benefit of the air and heat. In about three years they will be tolerably rotten in parts. After the more rotten parts are removed they are placed against a rack in a slanting position, and about the middle of the ensuing Spring the mushrooms will come forth in abundance. They are then gathered. The logs are, however, still kept, and are submitted to the following process: Every morning they are put in water, where they remain till afternoon, when they are taken out, laid lengthwise on the ground, and beaten with a mallet. They are then ranged on end in the same slanting position as before, and in two or three days mushrooms will again make their appearance. When the logs are beaten so heavily that the wood swells, mushrooms are induced of more than ordinarily large growth. If the logs are beaten only a great number of small-sized mushrooms grow up in succession. In places where there is a scarcity of water, rain-water should be kept for steeping the logs in. There is yet another plan. The cut logs are buried in the earth, and in a year's time are dug out and beaten as above described. The mushrooms thus grown are stored in a barn, on shelves ranged along three sides, with braziers lighted under. Afterward they are placed in small boxes, the bottoms of which are lined either with straw or bamboo mats. These boxes are then ranged on the shelves, and all approaches carefully closed. An even degree of warmth is thus diffused. The boxes ranged on the upper or lower tiers are constantly changed, so that the contents of each are thoroughly dried. Another mode of drying is to string the mushrooms on thin slips of bamboo, which are plied together near the brazier; the heat

MARCH MAGAZINES.

HARPER'S MONTHLY.

—For March the complexion of Harper's Monthly will be colored chiefly by natural history and art. The especial phase of art treated of in Harper's initial article is that of painting, and the essay is, moreover, limited to France. Mr. S. G. W. Benjamin tells us about the modern painters whose pictures we see in almost every collection, and supplies us with vignettes of them besides. Gérome, Meissonier, Bonnat, Doré, Cabanel, Millet, Troyon, Rosa Bonheur, and Jules Breton are here in good wood-cuts, and not a few representative pictures are also given. Hamon's Aurora and Gérome's staircase, with courtier's groveling before the King's confessor, Regnault's "General Prim" and Detaille's "Retreat" assist the text very nicely. A short article on Litchfield Hill, in north-western Connecticut, gives a chance for further portraits taken from pictures of celebrated Americans, but these are less carefully cut. Natural history is seen, too, in an article by S. S. Conant, based on Wallace's Geographical Distribution of Animals, published by Harper & Brothers. It is of the usual kind and quality that readers of Harper's may expect. As to poetry, the programme is a slim one, but the longer set of verses, by Philip Bourke Marston, go a certain way toward redeeming this department. These are wordy, but have good feeling, and that is more than can be said, we regret to say, about "Love's Voyage," a poem, with vignette heading, by Mr. C. P. Cranch. The whole appearance of this last leads one to suspect an endeavor to write down, and draw a picture down, to the level of some imaginary popular audience.

Travel is always a strong point with Harper's, and we have in the March number the first paper on an interesting part of the globe, the Azores. Another paper, illustrated with rough sketches, is on the Russian Wends and their homes, by Herbert Tuttle. Science has a celebrated champion in Dr. Draper, who gives a popular exposition of some scientific experiments, on which were based the results which made Dr. Draper famous. The short stories are "About Dolly," by Rose Terry Cooke; "Ideals," by Edward Everett Hale, and "My Great Aunt's Will," by Elizabeth A. Smith. Of late Harper's Monthly seems to be regretting the old days of an illustrated charivari at the end of the magazine. This month we have two small pictures of children, by Woolff, one of the numerous comic draughtsmen that have lately been coming up in a mushroom crop along with Thomas Nast. His small children are a little monotonous, but he often shows a good streak of humor. The strange story, called "A Woman Hater"—not a very strange title, by the way—comes to a close in this, its ninth part, and finishes in a mild bath of gore. The article on "Webster and the Constitution," by Hon. Henry W. Hilliard, is well worth reading. From another point of view it is an amusing example of the gulf that the war fixed between ante-war times and the present. The language, the ideas, the way of looking at things, are all of a piece and quite out of the present modes of thinking. There is an enthusiasm about Mr. Hilliard's articles that is somewhat sadly missed in this generation. We suppose that the South, unaffected by emigration or railway improvements, remains necessarily very much as it used to be in the old times. A new generation has grown up, but exactly like their fathers in ideas and aims.

THE ATLANTIC MONTHLY.

—Constance Fenimore Woolson has first honors in the Atlantic Monthly for March, and not without good cause. "Rodman the Keeper," is a story finely constructed, and well carried out. Not that there is much plot to it, but that Miss Woolson has brought into play between individuals the great questions that draw a hard line between the people of the Northern and Southern States. We might ask for a different ending, a happier finale, which would violate, very possibly, the reality a little, but that is a matter resting with the artist. It is pleasant to see so much progress in a writer of fiction as this little story evinces; some of Miss Woolson's early tales hardly contained so much promise as appears to be coming here to fruit. We fail to see why people applaud the sonnets of Mr. Longfellow. It is true, they are sweet and even; they contain the usual essence of his poetry, a charm which comes of knowing his end perfectly well, and going to it gravely and quietly. But surely his stand as a sonnet-writer is inferior to the position he takes in other and simpler forms of verse. The five sonnets put together under the name of "A Rosary of Sonnets," only prove, to our judgment, his inability to deal with that species of versification. The first is on nature, the second on a church-yard, the third on Eliot's, the Indian apostle's, oak; the fourth is called "The Descent of the Muses," and the last is on Venice. Other poets present with rhymes are H. H., who has a slender trio of stanzas called "Apart;" Charles H. Noyes, with "The Prodigal" from which we will pick these three lines:

"Keep thou immortal some good thought of mine
Which, in oblivion's dark, may softly shine

and A. R. Grote who has "A Last Word." In the second installment of "Out of the Question" Mr. Howells continues his semi-dramatic method of writing. The story so far occupies a transition place between novel and drama, as if it were all ready by the cutting away of a few superfluous passages to leap on to the real stage. The hero is a young Western man, poor, and an inventer of a railway patent; the heroine is a Massachusetts girl of great wealth and of the true blue type as to family, but as to herself, not so consumed with knowledge as the Massachusetts girl is popularly supposed to be. The story by Henry James, Jr., is of that subdued, restrained nature habitual with him. In the twenty-first and twenty-second chapters, however, the American discovers the skeleton in the closet of the Bellegardes. Mr. James is a very careful and conscientious artist, whose work never betrays hurry or neglect. There is a sense of things being in their places in his novels which indicates the thorough workman at his craft. Mr. E. S. Nadal, who may be said to have some experience in writing for the newspapers, tells some interesting truths about them, or rather lets slip, as it were unconsciously, many little things that are usually passed over in accordance with the conventional hypocrisy habitual in the world. There is an installment of Fanny Kemble's "Old Woman's Gossip," and the Contributors' Club appears to keep fully up to the expectations formed at the beginning of that department of the magazine. S. G. W. Benjamin also contributes a very readable account of the Canary Islands and an ascent of Teneriffe.

THE GALAXY.

—The March Galaxy opens with a subject supposed to be dear to the heart of the American—"The English Peerage." Justin McCarthy furnishes a second installment of "Miss Misanthrope," which is likewise of English setting, being a novel with scenes laid in London. Titus Munson Coan makes a study of the poetical methods of a great genius in "Wordsworth's Corrections," while "M. E. W. S." has a poem with a French title, ostensibly on the plan that the guide-book of the Florence Gallery gives the picture in question under the same name. It is called "Portrait D'une Jeune Femme Inconnue." There is also a love story, in five chapters, by Henry Sedley. Sidney Lanier has one of his uncomfortable strained poems "To Beethoven," which one continually finds oneself longing to see improved by some quality not very evident, but certainly wanting. The scientific miscellany is as full and instructive as usual. But the point of the number resides in a translation of a story by Ivan Tourgrieneff. The magazine would be worth looking at for this alone, even though all else were below par. The story is that called "Assja."

LIPPINCOTT'S MAGAZINE.

—The March number of Lippincott's has two very pleasing illustrated articles to start with; one is on Peru, being from the travels of the Frenchman, Marcoy; the other relates to Japan, and has to do with the adventures of another Frenchman, M. Collache, who served the Japanese as military instructor. The illustrations have the French clearness and audacity which make the reader look twice before passing the articles by. A very remarkable story follows; "Seth," by Fannie Hodgson Burnett would do credit to the very best of our writers of fiction. The story is partly in that Lancashire dialect which we know in Mrs. Burnett's other work, and in plot is not entirely without likeness to other things she has written. But her grasp of human nature is really extraordinary, and her ability to deal with that dangerous quality, in fiction, the pathetic, is beyond praise. We hesitate to say how much pleasure this little tale has afforded us, but would merely like to express our conviction that, judging from her present work, the author has great things in store for the reading world. As an antidote to this, one has to suffer such unmitigated stuff as "Place aux Dames," which is a comic hash of Shakespeare's characters heated over. Sidney Lanier has a short poem called "Redbreast in Tampa." Berthold Auerbach's story, translated by Mr. Charles T. Brooks, rather improves in this number on the former installment. The German emigrant's son in his relation to kinsfolk and acquaintance in the ancestral village is sketched with great keenness and considerable force—young Aloys, "the Gawk from America," who is suffering from two evils on his visit to the paternal village, one arising from his father's nickname, "Gawk," the other from the fact that the one girl whom his father does not want him to marry is the girl whom he takes a liking to. The wife his father has recommended him to take comes on the scene in this installment. "Our Monthly Gossip" contains an interesting communication from W. W. C. in regard to the late Rev. Henry Harbaugh. His great-grandfather came from Switzerland in 1736, and he himself is likely to be more famous as a poet in the Pennsylvania Dutch dialect than as a clergyman or theological writer. The dialect seems very close to common or "Bauer" German, with remarkably few English intrusions. There are no very noticable points of likeness between the specimens here given and the dialect used by Mr. Charles Leland in his far-famed Hans Breitmann ballads. The poems have been published in a new edition under the title Harbaugh's Harpe, by the Reformed Church Publication Board of Philadelphia.

APPLETONS' JOURNAL.

—George Sand's "Tower of Percemont" is continued in this month's Appleton, and the second installment of "Cherry Ripe" is here, with a finely composed illustration by C. S. Reinhart. There are also a story by Ellen W. Olney called "The Young Doctor," and a poem, "The Singer's Error," by Howard Glyndon. Mrs. Piatt has a little poem, which has some of the fragile grace we are used to admire in her work.

Charlotte Adams writes about "Venice," and Julian Hawthorne continues his ree and easy disquisitions on anything and everything having the slightest connection with his present abode in England. The "Defenses of Constantinople" is the title of an opportune paper by George M. Towle, while a sprightly little story called "My Son Victor," bears the name of Mary Wager Fisher. D. H. Jacques writes about a Floridian island, and M. E. W. S. has a most ambitious article in verse, adorned with vignettes, under the title "Love or Study." American topics are well discussed by Christian Reid in "The Mountain Region of North Carolina," an illustrated paper on a country of which too little is known, and by John T. Short, who writes an interesting account of "Culture-Heroes of the Ancient Americans."

A MAIL-BAG RIFLED.

The Springfield (Mass.) Republican of Saturday says: "The Stockbridge mail-bag was cut open the other night, and all the letters, some 40 or 50, taken out, and no signs of them have yet been found. The mail carrier takes the bag from the train a little after 9 in the evening, puts it in his sleigh, drives home, puts up his horse, and then takes the bag to the Post Office, throwing it in at the outside door, where it lies until morning. It was found mutilated on this occasion when the office was opened in the morning, but the papers being left in, it was thought the mischief was done while the man was putting up his horse."

LADY TREVOR'S SECRET.

IN THE BLACK FOREST.

The principal building in the village is the little wooden Lutheran church, the only house of worship.

The Pastor of this church, a year or two ago, was Herr Brocken, or Father Brocken, as he was affectionately called by his people. He was a kindly, simple-hearted man.

Here he had dwelt twenty years, the father, the pastor, and guide of his simple people; here his wife had recently died, and here he hoped to be buried. He was childless, his family consisting of an old housekeeper and a young girl known as his niece.

This niece of the Pastor was the idol of the good people of Zorlitz. She tended the peasants in their illness; she visited the quaint old houses like a sunbeam, bringing with her always warmth and sunshine

One afternoon in June, at the time we have indicated, our heroine, after making a call upon a sick old woman, began the ascent of the steep hill in the direction of the parsonage. When half-way up the slope, she turned aside into the woods, pursuing a shaded path at an easy pace, swinging her broad-brimmed hat by its ribbons from her arm, and caroling a German song in a sweet voice that roused the birds to emulation.

She was about seventeen years of age, tall, slim, and graceful, with a beauty unmistakably English, and yet more unmistakably patrician.

This girl, with her wonderful beauty, which would have made a sensation in the Queen's drawing-room, with her exquisite refinement of looks and manner that declared her gentle birth and breeding, possessed a grandly generous nature, a warm heart, and impulsive temperament, and, withal, a personal magnetism that attracted every one to her.

She had been thoroughly well educated, the good pastor and his wife having gloried in her keen intellect, and in her thirst for knowledge. They had taught her various languages, music, for which she had a positive genius, drawing and painting, and various feminine arts; but her accomplishments were among the least of her charms.

The path along which she was walking came out upon a spring, whose clear pool was shadowed by bending trees. This was a favorite resort of the young girl, and she sat down upon the green bank, the song dying on her lips, and a strange gravity overspreading her face.

"Oh, dear," she said, sighing; "I am so tired of this dear, stupid old Zorlitz. I wish that I could see something of the world outside. I have read of the great towns, of different peoples, of life beside which ours is stagnation. I am growing discontented. Must I live here all my life, and die, and be buried here, knowing nothing of any better existence? If it were not for leaving uncle I'd beg to be allowed to go somewhere as governess. But I can't leave him, and he will never leave Zorlitz. And yet I'd give half my remaining life for a change—if I might only go somewhere and see something of the world."

Did some mischievous spirit hear her complaint and resolve to grant her wish? For a change in her life was close at hand—a change greater than even her vivid imagination would have dared conceive. That very hour was Lord Glenham and Maidred Crafton, his kinsman, hastening toward the sheet of paper, his eager old eyes fairly devouring its contents.

The letter, as we noticed after reading it, was written in plain white paper, without watermark or imprint of any sort whatever. The handwriting was coarse, and slanted backward with evident attempt at disguise. There was no date to the letter, which was as follows:

"HERR BROCKEN: It is now fourteen years since I left with you the little nameless child whom you agreed to bring up, and in all that time I have never written a line to you, nor have I heard from you directly, but I am aware that the child is, unfortunately, still alive. I have remitted regularly to you for her support the sum of fifty pounds per annum. I remit that sum herewith, as usual, in Bank of England notes. As she is now about seventeen years old, and quite able to make her own way, I shall not send any more money for her. As this is the first, it will also be the last communication you will ever receive from me.

"I suppose that she has been brought up, in accordance with my instructions, as a German peasant girl. I suppose, also, that she is contented with her lot, since she has never known any other. If she should marry some wood-carver of your people, then my best wishes for her welfare will have been fulfilled.

"It is scarcely necessary for me to repeat what I told you fourteen years ago, that the girl has no friends save those she may have made at Zorlitz; no relations; and that the best she can do for herself is to live and die in the obscurity of the Black Forest. My care and concern for her end herewith. Neither are nor you will ever hear from me again."

There was no signature to this epistle. Herr Brocken read it over the second time and sighed heavily.

"The unknown guardian washes his hands of Cecil," he muttered. "All connection between the girl and her early past is now completely severed. She will never solve the mystery, never know her origin. I almost wish that I had not sent Lord Glenham away, and yet I could not do otherwise. According to the traditions and usages of the world, a girl like Cecil, no matter how great her beauty, genius, and goodness, is no fitting wife for a great lord."

The door opened while his eyes were riveted on the paper, and Cecil came in slowly, half-shyly.

The Pastor made a movement to put the letter in his desk, but changed his purpose.

"My dear," he said, "you seem somehow less of a child to me than usual to-night. My heart is heavy and sore with many burdens. Shall I lay them upon your young shoulders?"

The tender young face at once grew stronger with a gravity and courage that touched the old scholar.

"I did not know that you were bearing secret burdens, uncle," said Cecil. "Let me help you. Do you need money?"

The Pastor glanced at the two bank-notes on his desk.

"No, dear, it is not any fear of poverty that troubles me," he said, gently. "I feel strangely weak. I realize to-night that I am growing old. I may not live another year, and there are things you ought to know. I will tell them to you now, Cecil, this handsome English lord asked me to-day for my consent to address you as your suitor."

"What did you say, uncle?" she whispered, after a little pause.

"I bade him wait a year. I told him that you were too young to marry."

"He loves me! He loves me!" Cecil said to herself softly, her glorious young beauty radiant as a star. "And he is coming back next year! Oh, uncle, I am the happiest girl in all the world to-night!"

The old Pastor sighed and stroked her hair with a shaking hand. A great struggle was going on within him. At last a look of decision settled upon his careworn features, and, with his trembling hand resting on Cecil's head, he told her her history so far as he knew it. He also informed her that he had told it to Lord Glenham, and that it seemed to make him love her all the more. He then handed her the letter from her unknown guardian, closed his eyes, and leaned back in his chair. His face looked singularly worn and sorrowful in the dim light, and there was a weariness in the drooping features that told of extreme physical weakness. No one marked the rapid change of expression in the young face at his knee, the passionate anguish in the sweet eyes, the tense lines about the lovely mouth, the bitterness, horror, and despair indicated in all her perfect features.

The letter fell at last from Cecil's hand, and the bright head drooped to the Pastor's knee, while Cecil gave way to a burst of passionate weeping.

"My child," said the old scholar, arousing himself with his former bewildered expression, "hush, dear, you pain me. I would have kept this from you if I had dared. Lord Glenham may come back. Goodness, beauty, and genius are of more value than ancestry. Put the letter in your pocket. It may prove a clue some day."

He took from the desk a small packet, which he opened.

"My good wife wrote out the history of your coming here," he said, "and here it is. We both signed it. And the good wife, who was clever with her pencil, made that night, after your guardian's departure, a sketch of his face. Here it is. It can perhaps do you no good, but as the man might have been your father, we preserved it for you!"

Cecil seized the paper eagerly, and stared at the picture with great, devouring eyes.

"Do you think that he was my father?" she asked.

"The good wife thought not. But he might have been. Men can be very cruel to their own flesh and blood when they are supremely selfish. Keep the picture, dear. And now, Cecil, we must say good-night."

Cecil knelt down beside him, and he laid his hands on her head and blessed her. Then he embraced her tenderly as she arose, and dismissed her.

The old Pastor leaned back in his chair. His long, scanty locks fell around his venerable face, and his eyelids drooped wearily.

"Poor little Cecil!" he said to himself, yet without seeming to realize his words. "I seem to have the gift of second sight to-night. A terrible future yawns before her. Poor little one! God shield her!"

When morning dawned he still sat in his easy-chair, but his head was thrown back; the gentle smile was frozen on his features, which were rigid as marble.

The old Pastor had gone to join his good wife. He was dead, and Cecil Rosse was left alone in the world to meet the terrible perils in store for her!

The grief of Cecil, when, the next morning, she discovered the old Pastor sitting dead in his chair, was indescribable. She felt that she was now indeed alone, and without a guide in the world. But old Gretchen and all the neighbors comforted her, and by the time the funeral ceremonies had ended and the affairs of the Pastor's estate had been settled, she had recovered her usual elasticity of spirits and had resolved upon her course, which was to go to England, accompanied by Gretchen, and see if she could not find some trace of her family. As they set out, old Gretchen, looking back at the forest-village through her tears, muttered:

"I hope that we ain't rushing straight into trouble! And yet a creeping feeling comes over me that there are dark days ahead! I wish I could read the future!" The above we publish as a specimen chapter; but the continuation of this story will be found only in the N. Y. Ledger. Ask for the number dated March 3, which can now be had at any news office or book-store. If you are not within reach of a news office, you can have the Ledger mailed to you for one year by sending three dollars to Robert Bonner, publisher, 180 William street, New-York.

ENGLAND'S HORSE SUPPLY.

THE DIFFICULTY OF OBTAINING SUITABLE CAVALRY HORSES.

From the London Telegraph, Jan. 30.

A large number of letters have been forwarded for insertion in the columns of The Daily Telegraph, in answer to those that have recently appeared from "Emeritus" and "X Dragoon" on the interesting and important question, "How are we to get horses?" "Stockwell" is of opinion that those writers ought to have rather propounded the query, "Where are we to get horses?" In Ireland, which is the great horse-producing country for our troopers and cavalry remounts, the regimental dealers have the greatest difficulty in finding the suitable article. After much industrious search they collect a batch of animals for the inspection of the Colonel and veterinary surgeon, whose requirement may be stationed in some English town. Many Colonels of crack cavalry regiments are exceedingly particular in their selections as to uniformity in size, color, &c., and in order to conciliate these officers the contractor will in some cases pay the farmer or breeder a price in excess of the regimental standard for a good young horse. The proposition of "Emeritus" and "X Dragoon" is never likely to be carried out, as many regiments are stationed in great manufacturing and commercial centres, where horse fairs are seldom held, and where "Colonel Fire-eater" would be unable to select half-a-dozen that would meet his requirements. He would be shown "a parade" of "the halt, the lame, and the blind" that would so sicken him that he would forever eschew the office of "dealer," and resort the aid and services of the regimental contractor. The scarcity of horses is so great and the prices so much increased that steeds suitable for cavalry purposes are worth much more, and command higher prices among jobmasters, dealers, and private buyers; and it is only at the end of a fair, when these men have secured them, that the farmers and breeders will treat with the regimental contractor and accept his price. The suggestion enunciated by "Emeritus" as to a Colonel fixing and advertising a rendezvous for the purchase of horses might be attended by success in Canada or the Western States of America, but neither in England nor Ireland would his efforts meet with success. For future troopers and cavalry remounts we must look to our Canadian dominions

"Sabreur" writes that the Eastern question has closed the export trade from Russia and Austria, and that at any hour Prince Bismarck may decree that no horse shall leave Germany. At the present moment France seeks 6,000 cavalry and artillery remounts, for which she is willing to pay from 900 to 1,500 francs. For the coming Exhibition the Paris omnibus and tramway companies require 2,000 fresh animals. Here, our Colonels of cavalry pay 42 guineas for three-year-olds, and shout wrath at the cry of what use would such immature colts be in a campaign? Our relief must come from Canada and America. The only remedy to this equine scarcity is to draw upon the unlimited sandflies which exist in the prairies. The last census there were nearly 9,500,000 horses in the States alone, against 2,762,000 in Great Britain. In the one State of Illinois the numbers are increasing at the rate of 50,000 per annum. Though not successful, the best-looking horse in the paddock at Paris was the strapping young Canadian horses, who looked quite up to grand Liverpool form or a "clinker" in the shires. We are at our wit's end for blood weight-carrying hunters, and this class of horse is to be had in the blue-grass region of Kentucky—par excellence the finest breeding country in the world. There are to be found the descendants of Messenger, Priam, Glencoe, Margrave, Tranby, and strains of the best blood in our Stud-book. The horses of Canada and the Western States are large, powerful, well-shaped, upstanding animals, possessing great bone and substance, with plenty of muscle below the knee, and with excellent feet. All are good trotters, and roaring, so common with us, is an almost unknown malady.

The author of "England's Horses for Peace and War" states that he is a practical man in horse-dealing both at home and abroad. "Emeritus" draws attention to the manner in which recruits are got, and suggests a parallel method for obtaining remounts. The obvious reply is that recruits are to be had, but not remounts. Referring further to the letter of "Emeritus," the writer asks, presuming the Colonel of a cavalry regiment were to discharge the contractor, how many breeders or farmers would give him the first refusal of their produce? It must be an unsound or comparatively inferior animal that during the prevailing dearth is not worth more than the regulation price, (£40.) And for such as would suit cavalry Colonels, and pass the lynx-eyed military professional, at his elbow there are eager buyers who will pay more than "Col. Fire-eater" can pay for the Government. The idea, too, of young colts for the severe work of carrying our soldiers and their heavy appliances in full marching order, or to stand the terrible ordeal of the riding-school drill, is all wrong. In Canada and America, where there are immense numbers of the horses required for our Army, the suggestions of "Emeritus" might be practicable, but in these islands they are preposterous and impossible.

FRIGHTFUL TRAGEDY IN BRITTANY.

A frightful tragedy has taken place in Saint Brieuc, a seaport town in Brittany. A journalist named M. Le Foll, connected with a local newspaper called Le Progrès, sent an invitation to Capt. Wurts, of the Seventy-first Regiment, to call at his office on urgent business. The Captain did so, and found himself in presence of M. Le Foll, who abruptly put to him this question, "Is it true that you visited my wife while I was absent from town?" The Captain replied "Yes." "You admit, then," continued the husband, "to have relations with her?" "Not at all," protested Capt. Wurts. "Will you promise me," then said M. Le Foll, "to fight with any one who says that you are the lover of my wife?" "Certainly not," responded the military man, "because in that case I should be obliged to deal with the blackguards you might choose to send me. But if you desire it I will fight with you." Then M. Le Foll followed with this strange question, "Will you sign a declaration stating on your honor that you have never had any improper intimacy with my wife?" "Certainly," replied Capt. Wurts, "as it is perfectly true." He sat down at a table and began to write the required document, when Le Foll drew a poignard and stabbed him twice in the back. Although Capt. Wurts was struck down by the second blow he found enough strength to disarm his assassin, and turning the dagger in his hand he said to his assassin, "Miserable wretch, go and save yourself! I could kill you like a dog." (Je pourrais vous tuer comme un chien.) But I want to come out of this affair with my honor unstained." Le Foll escaped from the office of his journal, and went to his own house carrying the dagger. Going up to his wife he said: "I have killed your lover; now die in your turn." With these words he stabbed her to the heart. Proceeding to the Hotel of the Croix Blanche he there rejoined a woman named Guinette, who had been his mistress for 18 months. They went out together, but what took place afterward is not known. A few hours later the bodies of the two couple were found at the gate of the public park of the town known as the Glais Bizoin. There is no doubt that Le Foll had first killed the woman, and then had taken his own life with a revolver which was found upon his corpse.

ENGLISH PAINTINGS AT THE CENTENNIAL.

"Atlas," in his contribution to the London World, says: "Doubts were naturally entertained whether the pictures sent to the International Exhibition at Philadelphia might not be injured by the double voyage across the Atlantic. The extreme heat of the weather in the United States might have affected them, and the variation of the manner in which they were transported might have had an equally bad effect. Fortunately, no appreciable damage has been done, and Mr. Jopling deserves no small credit for this. He succeeded better in taking good care of the pictures than in persuading the United States Commissioners to agree with him in all things. He was simply an accomplished artist, whereas they were merely Commissioners. Among those sent were the Royal Academy diploma pictures. These were shown at Philadelphia for the first time in public. They comprise such works as those by Constable, Turner, and Wilkie, and, as a whole, are the most representative and characteristic specimens of the English school. Perhaps the Council of the Royal Academy may think that the time has now come for these pictures being seen by the English public. If they can be exhibited in Philadelphia they may be exhibited in London.

VESSELS OF WAR OF ALL NATIONS BUT ONE.

The number of vessels of war of all the maritime nations amounted in 1876, according to some official statistics lately published in Germany, to 2,039, of which 209 were iron-clads. The armament comprised 280,000 men and 15,000 guns; 110 war vessels, including 56 iron-clads, were in course of construction. The share of Germany in the world's navy was 21 ships (11 being iron-clads)—two frigates, four corvettes, five gun-boats, 10 vessels fitted with screws (of which four are corvettes, three tenders, and three are vessels with torpedoes.) As regards the number of vessels which they possess, the different nations rank as follows: England, France, Russia, Turkey, Austria, Germany, Italy, Spain, Holland, Denmark, Sweden and Norway, Portugal. Italy and Germany rank together by reason of the great number of vessels they have lately constructed. The Gazette d'Augsbourg, commenting on these figures, expresses a hope that Germany, who finds herself at present sixth on the list, will occupy the fourth place as soon as the vessels she is building are completed, and will rank even third possibly in 1882, when the programme which she has drawn up for herself will be carried into execution. The United States Navy is ignored altogether.

Gov. GROVER telegraphs from Oregon to the World that he never sent a dispatch to Gov. TILDEN signed "Gabble" or "Governor," and that he never used a cipher or a fictitious signature in his life. There is pitiful evasion in this denial. GROVER says that he never used a cipher; that is to say, he could not have sent the deciphered dispatch to TILDEN, because he did not use a cipher. Nevertheless, he wrote, or caused to be written, a dispatch to TILDEN (which was signed "Gobble,") announcing the decision in the Electoral case, five days in advance of its being made. That dispatch might have been "sent" by another. It was not necessary for GROVER to send it. PATRICK controlled the cipher and sent the telegram. KELLY says that he indorsed one with his signature, though he did not know what was in it. It was in cipher. GROVER's dispatch to TILDEN was undoubtedly put into cipher and sent over the wires by PATRICK. GROVER's artful denial is only a juggle with words.

BOGY, Democratic Senator from Missouri, is the only human being, so far as we know, who has attempted a defense of the nefarious plot in Oregon. In a speech in the Senate, last Saturday, he said he was not willing that the Democratic Party should be the only one convicted of fraud. He tacitly admitted that the Oregon fraud was most flagrant and noxious. But, he argued, there were also frauds in Florida, and dispatches which contained inflammable instructions were sent to that State immediately after election. "The man in Oregon," he affirmed, "was new to the business." Therefore he was found out when the Florida conspirator was not. This is an amazing admission. It is well to let it stand as it is. It is merely the cry of "You're another." But BOGY had another arrow in his quiver. He let it fly against the Electoral Commission. In future ages, he said, men would remember the Republican Justice who changed his vote, [BRADLEY,] as they now remembered "those corrupt Judges, JEFFREYS and MARLBOROUGH." BOGY's history is as shaky as his logic. It is possible that there were corrupt judges of this name, and that they are known to modern times as venal. But BOGY has a monopoly of information on this point.

A lunatic person—PIATT by name—is securing some gratuitous advertising for his newspaper in Washington by advocating assassination as a means of preventing the inauguration of Gov. HAYES. This sanguinary individual has heretofore distinguished himself as a contractor for the extermination of moths. He has succeeded so well that he rises to larger game. It is premature. Let the young editor confine himself to the bloodless and perishable moth. There is money in the business. Twenty-thousand dollars is a neat thing to make in extermination. Assassination is not in Mr. PIATT's line; and, though he may act by proxy, as he sometimes has managed to receive the consequence of his libels, the slaughter of moths will be found more harmless and profitable.

That eminent Democratic reformer Mr. EPH HOLLAND, now under duress in Cincinnati for corrupting the ballot, is making a clean breast of it. He says that he was an operator in Indianapolis and Cincinnati during the late elections. He was in daily communication with MILTON SAYLER, Mr. BANNING, and other Democratic lights. His business, as he candidly acknowledges, was to stuff ballot-boxes and run in repeaters. For this purpose he had a gang from Baltimore, under the direction of one MCCOY, a prominent Democratic politician, who is said to be on TILDEN's slate for Collector of the Port or Naval Officer. New-York contributed GLEASON, familiarly known as "Mike the Biter," to Mr. HOLLAND's corps, and GLEASON's party voted in every precinct of three wards. The story of this man is most edifying; it is especially so when we remember that he is unwillingly giving the true inwardness of a party which has been bawling "fraud" in Louisiana and Florida so lustily that it has had no opportunity to publish a word about HOLLAND, GROVER, or Senator KELLY.

The attitude of the Southern Democrats on the Electoral Commission result seems to add to the rage and discomfiture of the party managers from the North and West. With scarcely one exception, the Democratic Congressmen from Southern States declare their intention to abide by the decision of the Commission unquestioningly and promptly. It ought not to be considered a virtue that men keep their promises and remain true to their often-expressed convictions. But it must be confessed that the consistency and decency of the Democratic Party in Congress are chiefly with the Southern members thereof, who say that they supported the Electoral bill and mean to abide by whatever it produces. It is clear that if such swashbucklers as THOMPSON, of Massachusetts, and FIELD, of New-York, propose to initiate any revolutionary measures, they cannot count on the support of Southern Representatives. The latter know something of the destructiveness of organized rebellion.

Without any new declaration on the part of either Russia or Turkey, it is daily becoming more evident that the two countries are drifting into a condition of war. At this moment, to be sure, peaceful negotiations between the Sublime Porte and its provinces appear most auspiciously in the news dispatches. But it is not likely that any treaty of peace which may be concluded with either of these provinces will be worth a rush when the inevitable conflict comes. Servia has already shown that no convention excluding Russian troops from Servian transits, in case of war, can be concluded. And nothing but the old jealousies which have so long divided the councils of the other Christian provinces from each other will prevent Montenegro and Herzegovina from silently consenting to an invasion whenever Turkey becomes the object of attack. When that attack will be made none can tell. But as the months wear on, the first blow may be momentarily expected.

THE OREGON CASE.

The next case to be submitted to the Electoral Commission is that of Oregon, and though it is generally conceded that the Democrats cannot present even a plausible argument in favor of counting one of the three votes of that State for TILDEN, it may be interesting to call attention to the facts as they will stand before the Commission. The Republican ticket in Oregon received a considerable and decisive majority of the popular vote. One of the Electors on that ticket, Mr. WATTS, was at the time of the election a Postmaster. Had the majority in the Electoral College for either Mr. TILDEN or Mr. HAYES been certain and large, this fact would probably have attracted no attention. As it was, however, Mr. TILDEN conceived the idea of getting in Oregon the one vote necessary to his election.

After the popular election, but before the meeting of the Electoral College, Mr. WATTS resigned his position as Postmaster, and thereupon became eligible for appointment to any vacancy which might exist in the Electoral College. Under the laws of Oregon, in case of a vacancy, the acting Electors have the power to fill it. Accordingly, when the College met, the two Electors whose election was undisputed met, and, Mr. WATTS not appearing, filled the vacancy by the appointment of Mr. WATTS, who then joined them, and the College cast three votes for Messrs. HAYES and WHEELER.

In the meantime the Governor, GROVER, whose duty it was under the statutes to issue certificates to the Electors, was advised from the East to take the position that WATTS' ineligibility gave the election to the candidate receiving the next highest number of votes. This he promised to do, and after going through the farce of hearing argument from the Democrats and a protest from the Republicans, he did issue a certificate to CRONIN, the Democratic candidate receiving the highest number of votes. CRONIN was put in possession of the certificate issued to him, with the others, and when the legal Electors met, he was present, and demanded that they should act with him, refusing to show the certificates, except on compliance with his demand. Failing to obtain this recognition, he assumed to be himself the only legal member of the College, assumed that the places of the other two Electors were vacant, appointed two of his fellow-Democrats, who were ready at hand, to fill the pretended vacancies, and with them proceeded to cast one vote for TILDEN and two for HAYES.

These are, in brief, the facts which will appear in the "certificates" that will be referred to the Electoral Commission. The vote of the legal College will be unaccompanied by the certified list of Electors which the Federal statute provides shall be issued by the executive authority of the State. The votes of the Cronin College will have a certificate in form such as the statute asks for. This state of things will require the Democratic counsel to execute another somersault, and probably a new set will be employed. It is difficult to see how any of those who made the argument in the Florida case or in that of Louisiana could have the courage to take the ground which must be taken as to Oregon. In the Florida case the Commission was a court with the power to take quo warranto proceedings; in the Louisiana case the Commission was Congress, with power to do a great deal that Congress has never before been even asked to do. But in the present instance the Democrats will ask the Commission to act in a strictly ministerial capacity, and to take the Governor's certificate as final.

The Republicans, on the other hand, will find themselves on ground different necessarily from that held in the previous cases, but not inconsistent with it. They will ask that the official records of the State as to the persons who received the majority of the votes cast for Presidential Electors in Oregon—a statement of which records accompanies the votes for HAYES—shall be accepted, and that the action of the majority of the Electors in filling the vacancy in their number shall also stand. They will hold that the Governor's certificate is false in fact and in law; that it does not certify that which it pretends to certify, and that the Governor's judgment on the legal question of the effect of WATTS' ineligibility is of no force, because he had no jurisdiction regarding it, and because he had no authority to certify to it under either the State or the Federal statute. It will be perceived that this does not require the Commission to go into an investigation of the popular election in Oregon, or to revise the action of the State authorities appointed by law to determine and declare the facts concerning that election. When the Republican counsel opened in the Florida case they laid down with great clearness and candor the principles which must guide the Commission regarding the force and value of a Governor's certificate. They pointed out that a ground on which that certificate could be assailed was that it was a false statement of the fact which it purported to establish, namely, the result of the State canvass; and they expressly disclaimed the doctrine that the certificate was conclusive, or its absence fatal, since the Federal statute which provided for it was not binding on the State Executive, and the vote of the State could not hinge on the fulfillment of a condition which the United States could not enforce.

The Commission, then, will have before it the official determination of the facts in the popular election, showing the majority for the Republican ticket; the official proceedings of the College showing the appointment of WATTS to the vacant place; and, opposed to these, the opinion of Gov. GROVER on CRONIN's title, and the Governor's certificate as to CRONIN's action. This is all they will have, unless Democratic counsel induce them to go into the question whether Mr. TILDEN did not persuade GROVER and hire CRONIN to do what they did, and try to bribe a Republican Elector to join in the plot. But the Commission will hardly listen to such an appeal.

DIRECT TRADE AND IMMIGRATION FOR THE SOUTH.

A quasi-independence in commercial matters has for many years been one of the dreams of the South. There was no immediate connection between the advocacy of direct trade and the movement for establishing a Southern Confederacy, but the same men were conspicuous in both, and their most effective arguments were derived from the same sources. The general idea was that the planters and merchants of the Cotton States paid undue tribute to New-York and the North, and that the sovereign remedy was the cultivation of direct commercial intercourse between Liverpool and Savannah and other Southern ports. It was argued that the effect would be to rid the planter of dependence upon Northern middlemen and to secure him better prices for his crop, besides building up home interests that would be advantageous to the entire interests of the South. New-York was always content to leave these movements to their obvious fate. They were renewed again and again. Conventions were held to ascertain the available elements of strength. Steam-ship lines were projected. Agents were sent to Europe to obtain the requisite business support. Newspapers were started to prove that the South held the key to better fortunes than it had ever realized. Those were the days when it was heresy to demur to the maxim "Cotton is King." From all these efforts nothing practical ever came. Commerce could not be diverted from established channels at the bidding of a few enthusiasts. The monetary centre of the Continent being fixed at New-York, there could be no escape from the conditions which the fact implies. And the South, in its pursuit of illusory benefits, neglected the substantial means of improvement which were within its reach.

Since the war the old idea has reappeared in various shapes. The Georgians have been especially active in their endeavors to promote it. Taking advantage of the Grangers' movement, they formed a Direct Trade Company in 1874, its head-quarters being at Savannah, with an agency under competent direction in Liverpool. An adequate working capital was provided, and all the machinery of the Grangers' organization was brought into play, with the help of experienced business men in Savannah and Charleston. Very little time was required to prove the hopelessness of the plan. It was a failure from the beginning. The trade which was supposed to be waiting only for the opportunity to pour its wealth into the Southern lap did not yield enough to pay expenses. The agent was recalled from Liverpool. The Savannah office was closed. The money embarked in the enterprise was lost. Recent and disastrous as this experience has been—in complete accord as it is with previous ventures of the same general character—it has not prevented the introduction into the Georgia Legislature of a scheme for trying once more the chances of direct trade. This time it assumes the form of a subsidy to a monthly line of steam-ships between Savannah and Liverpool, and the discussion it has provoked shows that the fallacious calculations on which it proceeds do not deceive everybody even in Georgia. Mr. NELSON TIFT, formerly one of the Democratic Representatives in Congress, has published a letter in which he proves clearly enough that the purpose of the project is to supply a want which does not exist. Savannah has undoubtedly a considerable export trade, but its import trade is virtually nil. As Mr. TIFT shows, the importation of foreign goods into Georgia is so insignificant that the vessels engaged in the foreign trade with Savannah depend wholly on the outgoing cotton cargoes for profit, and frequently arrive laden only with ballast. To subsidize steam-ships in circumstances like these would be to throw away money which the people of Georgia can ill afford to spare.

New-Orleans is interested in a less pretentious scheme for cultivating direct trade between the Southern States of the Mississippi Valley and Europe. Three or four years ago committees were formed in St. Louis, New-Orleans, and elsewhere; an agency was opened in London and, perhaps, also in Liverpool, and systematic efforts were begun for building up a reciprocal trade direct between the Mississippi Valley and the British markets. The results, so far, have amounted to little or nothing. Grandiloquent reports appear now and then, but the languid interest they excite is confined to the narrow localities in which they appear. The currents of trade are not to be diverted from established channels by the rhetoric of an organization whose origin may be traced to the speculative activity of a few individuals rather than to the business wants of the Southern States.

Trade considerations, however, are not the only ones of which these Southern movements take cognizance. A prime object is the promotion of immigration. The pending Georgia bill is upheld on this among other grounds—that direct communication with Europe is necessary to attract to the South a larger share of the population which in ordinary times flows steadily hither. The Mississippi Valley States hold a similar view. Their convention at New-Orleans last Spring was barren of results, if measured by its effect on the emigrating classes of the Old World; but the organization from which the convention derived whatever importance it possessed still has some vitality. JEFF. DAVIS' recent visit to England was understood to have a certain connection with this scheme. He is about the last man whom shrewd managers would select for a mission of this character; and the fact that he was selected shows how utterly the Southerners who clamor for direct trade, and build great expectations on the possibilities of immigration, fail to realize the practical aspects of either question.

A very large proportion of all immigration is made up of the wage-earning classes. For these there is no inducement now in any part of the country. With the return of better times will come a renewal of immigration of this character. But the South offers no field to labor. Georgia is, perhaps, the most prosperous of the Southern States, yet we have the assurance of one of its own citizens that poor white men can obtain no employment there, and that negro laborers, who would gladly work for ten dollars a month and rations, wander away from the State in search of what it does not supply. Nor can it be said that this is an incident of the hard times. It is, as Mr. TIFT points out, a consequence of the slovenly agriculture which prevails throughout the South, aggravated by the general lack of thrifty industry and enterprise among its people. A section thus situated cannot address itself to the working men of the old countries, or if it succeed in tempting them it can only be to bring upon itself their bitter curses. Are its chances any better with regard to immigrants who bring money sufficient to buy and cultivate land or to embark in business enterprises? We think not. These people, it must be remembered, look at things with exclusive reference to their own interests. They are not likely long to hesitate between the South, with its caste, its intolerance, its ignorance, its backwardness, its low standard of comfort, and the West, with its buoyant energy, its genuine freedom, its ceaseless growth, its churches and schools. The South must undergo a second reconstruction before it can wisely challenge comparison as an emigration field.

A FINANCIAL RETROSPECT.

Now that renewed attention is being directed toward the financial question and the measures requisite to insure the success of resumption at the appointed time, it is opportune to review the results of the operation of the financial measures of the last three years. The most important of these are the act of June 20, 1874, and the act of Jan. 14, 1875, providing for the resumption of specie payments. The main objects of the former act were to furnish a system of bank-note redemption, and to provide for what was considered to be a more equitable distribution of the bank currency. The former object has been successfully accomplished, but it is not our purpose to dwell upon it here; our present inquiry being limited to the effect of the act on the volume of the circulation. The redistribution of the bank currency, so as to give the West and South their due share of the circulation, was the chief aim of the bill, and to this end the Controller of the Currency was peremptorily directed to forthwith withdraw $55,000,000 of bank notes from banks organized in States having more than their proportion, and to issue it to such banks in the less favored sections as might apply for it. There had been a great clamor raised in certain quarters about the injustice of the then existing distribution of the franchise of issuing circulating notes, and the expectatation of the advocates of this feature of the bill was that the bank capitalists of the East would be compelled to disgorge a large share of their circulation, and turn it over to the needy communities of the West and South. Doubtless, such a result would have ensued to some extent, though not to the degree that the champions of the bill anticipated, had not a modest provision of the act, whose results no one foresaw, given an entirely different direction to its operations. The fourth section provided that any bank desiring to withdraw its circulation, in whole or in part, might deposit in the Treasury legal-tenders equal in amount to the circulation surrendered, and take up a proportionate amount of its bonds. There at once began a surrender of bank circulation under this provision which is still going on to some extent, and which effectually relieved the Controller of the necessity of compelling any of the banks to part with their circulation. Strange to say, the surrender was most general, and largest in proportion to their issues, among the banks of the West and South, the sections which were represented to be most in need of more circulation.

The causes of this action of the banks have been very generally misunderstood. It has been assumed that they surrendered their currency because they could not employ it profitably. But, as a matter of fact, each bank had more money to lend after the surrender than before, as a very simple calculation demonstrates. A bank retiring $90,000 in circulation, and taking up $100,000 in bonds, and selling them at a premium of 15 per cent., had $25,000 more cash to lend than before the transaction, although the aggregate amount of currency in circulation was decreased by the process. The true cause of the surrender of circulation was, in most cases, a desire of the banks to realize the premium on their bonds while the high prices ruled, and before the return of specie payments should wipe out the premium. By this means a bank which was carrying a load of bad debts was enabled to efface them from its books and to present a clean balance-sheet to its shareholders. The total amount of circulation surrendered from the date of the passage of this act to the close of January reached the immense aggregate of $63,948,604.

In deference to the very general demand for free banking, a provision was inserted in the Resumption act removing the limitation which had previously existed on the total amount of the bank circulation, and permitting as much bank currency to be issued to any section as might be applied for under the National Bank act. Coupled with this enactment, however, was the provision that the Secretary of the Treasury should retire legal tenders equal in amount to 80 per centum of the bank circulation thereafter issued, until the amount of greenbacks outstanding should be reduced to $300,000,000. Since the passage of this act $21,268,935 in bank notes have been issued, and $17,015,188 in greenbacks retired. Besides this, $7,361,456 in their own notes have been returned by the banks for destruction since the 20th of June, 1874. Between June 20, 1874, and Jan. 14, 1875, $4,734,500 in bank notes were issued for which no greenbacks were retired. Summarizing these figures, we reach the following results, showing the issue and retirement of circulation from June 20, 1874, to Feb. 1, 1877:

Greenbacks retired		17,015,188
Total		$88,325,248
Net reduction of circulation		$62,321,763

If this process were certain to continue at the same rate, we might feel the assurance that the circulation of the country would be brought within proper limits by the opening of the year 1879 without further legislation. But this is not likely to be the case. The surrender of circulation is not taking place on any such scale as formerly, and there is no reason to suppose that it will increase, since the price of Government bonds is reduced to such a point that the operation does not offer any special advantage. On the other hand, many banks are depositing the new 4½ per cents. and taking out additional circulation, indicating that the price of bonds and not the demand for currency controls the surrender and increase of the bank circulation. Such being the case, some positive action on the part of the Government is required to bring the circulation of the country within such limits that specie payments may safely be resumed at the appointed time. In our opinion, the safest, cheapest, and easiest way to secure this end is to gradually retire the greenbacks by funding them into bonds, as recommended by both the President and the Secretary of the Treasury.

THE STATE CAPITOL BUILDING.

Some years ago it was proposed to erect a new State Capitol building which, in its size, durability, and architectural beauty, should be worthy of the resources of the Empire State. The old Capitol building at Albany, at no time either beautiful or convenient, had become considerably the worse for wear, and was and is totally inadequate for the uses for which it was originally erected. Designs for the new building were called for, but the selection of the one to be adopted was left to a legislative committee of which no member had any knowledge of architecture, or pretended to have. It was not likely under these circumstances that the choice would be a very happy one; and it was not. The building which the favored architect proposed to efect was in shape an immense cube from which a smaller cube had been taken out, leaving a central court. An enormous tower surmounted the whole structure. The cost of the building was not to exceed $4,000,000. An area of ground three acres in extent was acquired, situated immediately behind the old Capitol building, and on the face of the hill. This was the second mistake, as the building should have been placed further back, on the summit of the slope.

Work was begun and continued until the opening of the Legislative session of 1875, when the constant complaints which had been made in respect to the architectural defects of the rising building, the uncertainty about its ultimate cost, and the alleged extravagance and waste in the building department, caused the Legislature to institute an inquiry. It was found that more than $5,000,000 had been expended, while the construction of the shell of the building had barely reached the bottom of the main story; and that a further sum of $7,000,000 would be needed to carry the structure to completion. The glaring defects of the interior arrangements were made more apparent as the building advanced. It was further discovered that fully detailed plans and specifications of what remained to be done had not been prepared, and that it had been customary to mature drawings no faster than they were required by the progress of the work. This unsatisfactory state of things induced the Legislature to refuse any more appropriations until all the drawings and plans should be completed, and to require that these should be indorsed as satisfactory by the Commission then created, before the work should proceed. The complete plans were not ready until the following December. Early in the succeeding month they were submitted to a board of architects, composed of Messrs. EIDLITZ, OLMSTED and RICHARDSON. The Commission suggested certain modifications tending to improve, simplify, and reduce the cost of the building; and the architects prepared a plan of modifications, with careful estimates of cost, and submitted their report to the Commissioners, who presented it to the Legislature of 1876; and the completion of the building was finally authorized on these modified terms.

This proceeding appears to have given mortal offense to a small circle of people, mainly residents of Albany, who had been turning the building to uses not connected with architecture—in short, had been using it as a political machine. It also offended the local pride of Albany. That a Commission of outsiders, eminent though its members might be in their profession, should presume to interfere in an enterprise which had long been regarded as strictly local property, was something not to be borne. As a consequence, there has been an unrelenting warfare waged against the present Capitol Commission, and all the arts of political intrigue have been exhausted in efforts to induce the present Legislature to set aside the Commission, undo the work of the past year, readopt the old plans, (with some modifications,) and reinstate the former governing body. Wisely, however, those who attack the designs of the Board of Architects say very little against the plans which these gentlemen presented for the interior arrangement of the building. The defects of the old designs were too obvious for defense. They confine themselves to the design for the exterior and upper story, and the cry is repeated, parrot-like, by persons who could not tell Greek from Gothic architecture that if the new plans are carried out, the lower stories of the building will be in one style and the upper in another—a proposition which is monstrous and not to be endured. The local idea seems to be that if the building were completed in this way, it would be something different to any other existing structure the world over. It surely can scarcely be necessary to explain here that some of the most celebrated architectural monuments extant display two different styles in their construction, or that to impose one style on another in the same building is not necessarily a violation of the canons of art. It is only requisite that the two styles shall be harmonious.

Now, it happens that the exterior of the new Capitol building, up to the upper story, is Renaissance architecture. Renaissance, as most students of architecture know, is not, strictly speaking, a distinctive style, but simply a method of ornamenting forms which may be either Greek, Roman, or Gothic in their character. The Renaissance of the new Capitol is Roman in its character, and the style of the upper and concluding story which the new architects proposed to impose upon it is the allied and harmonious form of Romanesque. The original architect of the building has used both styles, since the architectural forms of the interior of the building are almost pure Romanesque. If it be inquired why the change from the original plans of the exterior was made, the answer is easy. The upper story of the building as first proposed was the worst part of it. Without going into technicalities, it may be sufficient to say that it presented a long line of small square windows, like a warehouse, while the roof above was overloaded with such a mass of meretricious ornament that the eye sought in vain for some spot on which to rest. Cast-iron, galvanized iron, zinc, copper, and stone were all to be used in the building up of this exaggerated mass of top-hamper, and to complete the whole it was designed to rest on the parapet, the drainage-water being conveyed through pipes carried into the interior of the building. The new architects proposed to sweep away all this unnecessary stuff, to rest the roof where it should rest, and to reduce it to simple, symmetrical, and necessary forms. They present estimates for the whole building on the new plans, which show a large reduction from the amount estimated to be necessary to complete it on the old ones, and they assert that they have already in hand the secured bids of responsible contractors to do the work on these estimates. This may or may not be correct, but one thing is certain, that if the new plans are now discarded and the work begun anew, the hundreds of thousands of dollars expended during the past year will be all lost, and a like outlay be required to bring the building up to the present stage of progress. Whatever determination the Legislature may arrive at in the matter, it is to be hoped that at least it will not be led astray by the loud and ignorant outcry about the two styles of architecture.

TONIC.

No intelligent man denies that the unrestricted sale of ardent spirits as a beverage is an evil. There is but one opinion as to the wrong and shame of drunkenness, though good men may differ as to the best way in which to oppose it. Nevertheless, great as the evil of free rum-selling unquestionably is, it is not the only evil which philanthropists and reformers should strive to abolish. The alcoholic poisons of the rum-seller are daily slaying their thousands, but the "tonic" of the barber is accomplishing results that are hardly less appalling. And yet there is not an anti-tonic society in existence, and we have yet to hear of the first reformed barber who is willing to lecture, for a fair compensation, upon the frightful evils that result from the unrestricted trade in tonic.

It is not many years since the perverted ingenuity of some unprincipled barber led him to manufacture "tonic," and to use the advantages which his access to the hair and throats of his customers gave him to force them to purchase the fatal compound. When a man is stretched on the tonsorial chair, with his nose in the firm grasp of a determined barber, and his throat in close proximity to a razor, he is completely helpless, and can be talked to the verge of insanity without being able to make the slightest effort in self-defense. If, in this helpless situation, he is informed by the barber that his hair needs a little tonic, and that he had better buy a bottle for one dollar and have it applied to his hair twice or three times a week, he perfectly well understands that he must accede to the barber's proposal or undergo an amount of conversation which few minds are strong enough to bear with impunity. The ease with which tonic could thus be forced upon the public was quickly perceived by the rivals of its first infamous manufacturer, and within an exceedingly brief time every barber in the country had manufactured his own private tonic, and converted his shop into a den for the sale of that pernicious liquid. Shaving and hair-cutting became mere pretexts for the concealment of the real nature of the barber's shameless trade, and at the present day the statistics of the sale of tonic are so frightful that few men would believe them were they to be published.

The effects of tonics are moral and mental, rather than physical. In fact, there is no evidence that it has any effect whatever upon the human body. Its use, however, leads directly to bankruptcy, domestic dissension, and a complete loss of faith in humanity. When an unhappy man purchases his first bottle, and has his hair liberally deluged with the perfumed contents, concealment of his weakness becomes impossible. His friends mock at him, and jeeringly assume that he is a vain person, who is ashamed of his baldness, and desires to renew his hair in order to delude the public as to his age. His wife upbraids him for wasting his money in an absurd attempt to beautify himself, and hints that there must be some young person of the gentler sex in the eyes of whom he is criminally anxious to present a false appearance of youth and gayety. Of course, he bitterly regrets having bought the tonic, but inasmuch as he has paid a dollar for it, he feels that he must continue to use it until the bottle is empty. In the course of the week he visits the barber's shop and reminds the proprietor of his offer to apply the tonic free of cost at least two or three times a week. He is shown to a vacant chair, and the barber, with a reproachful look which seems to say, "this is an exhibition of meanness for which I was really not prepared," calls loudly for the culprit's bottle. It is some time before the bottle is found, and in the meantime the unhappy owner is gazed at with undisguised contempt by all the barber's assistants. Finally the bottle is produced, and though it is half empty, its owner is ashamed to make any complaint. When he retires from the shop, it is with a determination not to enter it again except for the purpose of being shaved; in which case he imagines that he might call for his bottle without lacerating the barber's feelings.

Perhaps another week elapses before he again decides to use his hated tonic. In pursuance of his resolution he submits to being shaved, and then in a careless way suggests that he has a bottle of tonic which it might be well to use. As before, the bottle is sought with apparent earnestness, but the search results in the discovery that it is empty. The victim is informed that he has used all his tonic, and that he must have a fresh supply. Usually he tries to avoid the second purchase by feebly hinting that the first bottle has had no effect in stimulating the growth of his hair; but he is sternly told that it would be unreasonable to expect miracles from a single bottle of tonic, and that common decency demands that he should give it a fair trial before impugning the skill and honesty of the barber. Once more he yields, and buys an exemption from conversation by investing another dollar in tonic. This done, he shakes off the hair of that barber-shop from his feet, and solemnly vows never to enter it again.

But it is in vain that any man strives to escape from the purchase of tonics. No matter how many different barbers he may patronize, each one has his peculiar tonic, which he sells at the point of the scissors or the edge of the razor. Gradually the helpless buyer of tonic finds himself filled with bitterness and hatred. His wife regards him as a weak-minded spendthrift who wastes his substance in tonic, and strives to regain his hair in order to renew the presumed profligacy of his youth, while his friends cease to respect him, and decide that he is little better than an elderly coxcomb. Meanwhile, the barbers fatten on their ill-gotten gains, heedless of the misery that the forced sale of tonic inevitably produces.

Here is an evil which cries out for stern suppression. No half-way measures, no "local option," or license law will meet the case. The manufacture and sale of tonic must be absolutely prohibited, and for the further protection of the public it would be well to have a commission appointed to investigate the manner in which the barbers' trade is conducted, and to consider the advisability of converting our deaf and dumb hospitals into normal schools for the training of barbers who would shave in silence, and cut hair without making the remotest allusion to politics or the weather.

TILDEN'S ACCOUNTS.

PRESIDENT ELLIS PROPOSES TO PRODUCE THEM BECAUSE HE CAN'T AVOID IT.

The Associated Press report in the newspapers states that when I was before the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections, on Saturday, in Washington, I expressed my willingness to furnish a transcript of Mr Tilden's account with the Third National Bank. As you notice this editorially, and as I did not volunteer to furnish such statement, will you permit me to add to this report by saying that when called upon by the committee for the account, I stated in substance that I had taken counsel on the subject and had been advised that the proceeding was illegal, but that it was useless to resist the authority of the Senate, and I protested against exposing the business of any depositor, but that under such circumstances I could not see my way to refuse, and asked the privilege (which was given) of returning to New-York and putting the responsibility on the Board of Directors. Further refusal on my part would probably have resulted in the committee ordering the books of the bank to be taken to Washington. The result of the whole is that I am directed to return to Washington with the account, whether the Directors consent or not. My indisposition to produce this account arose solely from my position as a bank officer owing a duty to his depositors. JOHN W. ELLIS,
President pro tem. Third National Bank.

SIC SEMPER USURPORIBUS.—An Attempt to Assassinate Pack, the Pretended Governor of Louisiana—Struck in the Knee—A Narrow Escape—"Weldon," Good and Faithful Servant, Better Aim Next Time.

If the editor upholds the doctrine of assassination and the whole tenor of his paper clearly shows he does—where, in the name of all that is Christian, is "better aim next time" to begin and end? To Northern people residing South, and those thinking of coming here, the prospect of wholesale murder, being upheld by more than one of the papers, not only in this region, but in the enlightened and civilized City of Augusta, is anything but enticing or edifying to those whom chance, inclination, or necessity has placed within their boundaries. Shame on such papers, who are doing and will do all they can to keep alive the dead issues of the war.

THE INDIAN TROUBLES.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 18.—A Tucson, Arizona, dispatch says Gov. Safford is out in a three-column letter in the Citizen reviewing the Indian troubles since last April, and contending that the department commander has failed to do his duty.

SUDDEN DEATH OF A STRANGER.

WILMINGTON, Feb. 18.—A middle-aged man of respectable appearance, apparently a French Canadian, who stopped at the City Hotel last night, was found dead in his bed this morning. He did not register and there is no clue to his identity.

THE EASTERN QUESTION UNSOLVED.

DISCORD IN THE TURKISH CABINET—ANOTHER GRAND VIZIER DISMISSED—RUSSIA REPORTED TO HAVE EFFECTED AN AGREEMENT WITH GERMANY—THE CZAR'S TROOPS PREPARING TO CROSS THE BORDER.

PARIS, Feb. 18.—Le Temps confirms the statements which have been current that the Sultan is ill, and says it is feared that he is suffering from paralysis of the brain.

The Post says it can contradict, upon reliable authority, the rumors of the Sultan's illness.

LONDON, Feb. 19.—A special correspondent at Vienna says a dispatch has been received from Constantinople announcing that Edham Pasha has been requested by the Sultan to appoint another Grand Vizier. A Berlin special says the dismissal of Edhem Pasha seems to be a fact, and Mahmoud Damad, the brother-in-law of the Sultan, becomes Grand Vizier, with a policy aiming at the abrogation of the Constitution. Edhem Pasha will continue to assist him, as the new Vizier is ignorant of any foreign language. The same correspondent states that Russia, after fruitless efforts to arrive at an understanding with Austria, has relinquished the idea of obtaining her immediate co-operation. It is said, however, that Russia has arrived at an agreement with Germany, to which the adherence of Austria is expected.

A telegram from Pesth reports that 8,000 military engineers are changing the gauge of the Roumanian railways to that of the Russian roads. The work will be completed in 20 days. The Russian Army is making energetic preparations to cross the Pruth. The orders from St. Petersburg are that the march should be accomplished without needlessly incumbering the railways, which will transport the artillery and ambulances.

A correspondent at Vienna reviews the various rumors from Constantinople, and says the news thence foreshadows a serious crisis. A dispatch from Pera announces that M. Ristics, the Servian Envoy, has arrived and been honorably and courteously received by the Turks. He will have an audience with the Sultan on Monday. A Vienna special says the Montenegrin Envoys, Bozo Petrovics and Stanko Radonics, will embark on Wednesday for Constantinople.

A correspondent at Berlin says the Porte offered to prolong the armistice a month if the Montenegrins would negotiate in a Turkish town. The suppression of Edhem by Mahmoud Damad is considered imminent.

A Belgrade special says warlike rumors have reached there. It is believed in many circles that the passage of the Pruth will not be delayed much longer. The Servians are preparing for possible resumption of hostilities. But the principal subject of discussion is the meeting of the Great Skupochtjina. Both the Prince and Ministry feel that is a gigantic force of utterly unknown tendencies, and there is considerable uneasiness in all quarters with regard to its probable policy.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

EGYPT AND ABYSSINIA—A REPORTED MASSACRE—THE SPANISH GOVERNMENT AND THE PROVINCES—A SEARCH FOR MISSING FISHERMEN—THE FAMINE IN INDIA.

LONDON, Feb. 18.—A special dispatch from Cairo says Gen. Gordon was to leave there to-day for Massowah to negotiate with Abyssinia for peace and the opening of het country to trade.

LONDON, Feb. 19.—A special dispatch reports that Capt. Mitchell, an engineer in the Kédhive's service, and 50 soldiers, who were on an exploring expedition in Abyssinia, have been massacred by the natives.

A special from Calcutta says the Viceroy's official dispatch, dated Feb. 16, states that the famine in North Arcot is much worse than was at first supposed, and there is great distress in Mysore.

A dispatch from Vittoria says the Junta of the Province of Alava has been convoked for extraordinary session on Feb. 23 to discuss proposals for an arrangement with the Government relative to the Fueros law.

The man-of-war Valorous returned to Yarmouth on Sunday, after a week's search for the missing fishermen, which was totally unsuccessful. Twenty-five vessels and 150 hands are given up as lost.

The Times has advices from Cape Town, via Madeira, which represent that no war is likely to arise out of the Transvaal difficulty. Mr. Shepstone, the British envoy, has arrived at Pretoria. It is reported that the Burgers now favor annexation by England in consequence of the threatening attitude assumed toward the Transvaal Republic by the Lulu King, who, however, is thought to be amenable to British influence.

A Vienna dispatch to the Times says a conference was held on Saturday between the Austrian and Hungarian Ministers, on the vexed question as to the number of Directors which are to represent each country in the board of the proposed joint bank. Although no resolution was taken, the views of the two Ministries so for coincided that it is expected a compromise may be reached to-day.

THE SUCCESSION TO THE PAPACY.

LONDON, Feb. 19.—The Roman correspondent of a morning paper states that it has been resolved that any Cardinal may be elected Pope on the death of Pius IX., irrespective of nationality. This decision was not reached without considerable discussion between the Pope and some of the Sacred College. The decision will be communicated to all the Cardinals.

CENTRAL AND SOUTH AMERICA.

THE STRUGGLE IN COLOMBIA—AN EXPECTED ATTACK UPON CARTAGENA—THE DARIEN EXPEDITION—DISCOVERY OF GUANO.

PANAMA, Feb. 8.—Since the departure of the Colon on the 2d inst., no definite information has been received from the interior of Colombia in regard to the pending struggle between the Liberals, or Government party, and the Conservatives. The meagre advices that have reached us seem to indicate the growing strength of the latter, and the possibility of their final triumph. The latest advices from Cartagena are to Feb. 6. All the available forces were being hurried forward to Barranquilla, to assist in repelling an expected attack upon that city by the Conservative forces. It is reported that residents of Cartagena are not permitted to leave the place, and that everybody had to be in their houses at and after 7 o'clock P. M. Political arrests continued to be made. It is thought that the contest cannot last much longer.

The Isthmus continues quiet. Unless some new complication arises, there will probably be no fighting here. The continued presence of the men-of-war Pensacola and Omaha serves as a healthful tonic to prevent a breach of the peace. The British sloop-of-war Albatross arrived on the 4th to relieve the Daring. The latter vessel left Panama for Realejo, Nicaragua, at the request of the German Government, to investigate the alleged outrage perpetrated in the case of Mr. Eisenstuck. The Boston brig Richmond, Capt Bryant, Pensacola for Aspinwall, went ashore on Sennville Bank Jan. 24, and became a total loss.

From the Darien Expedition there has been little of public interest yet made known. The work is progressing and will be completed about the end of Feernary. Advices from Peru say fresh guano discoveries have been made in the South, which are said to be of immense proportions, but no definite idea can be formed of their size or value until regular surveys have been made. The revolution in Santa Cruz, Bolivia, is assuming proportions which threated to shorten the tenure of office of Gen. Daza. A smart shock of earthquake visited Valparaiso on Jan. 11, about 3:30 o'clock P. M., but was only productive of a little alarm.

THE FUTURE OF NEW-YORK.

LETTER III.

The transportation to the seaboard of the products of the West is the immediate and ostensible prize for which rival cities are contending. It is believed that the city which secures this, or much or most of it, will have various other things of vast commercial value added to it. The port must be frequented by vessels to convey these products abroad, capital must be lodged for purchases and expenses, supplies and repairs to shipping must be provided, labor to handle must be employed, towage and pilotage must be paid. To some extent imports will pursue the line of exports, and furnish new elements and sources of traffic and gain. Indeed, one New-York house extensively engaged in importing is arranging to receive a portion of its merchandize through a branch in Baltimore, and another is receiving a large portion of its foreign goods through Boston. Cargoes of coffee, when destined for the West, are landed at Baltimore almost exclusively. That port which can receive, deliver, and handle exports most rapidly and most cheaply will retain or obtain this prize. It is a question of dollars—no, not of dollars, but of cents and mills. Upon such small issues—small in detail—hangs the question of ultimate commercial prosperity, possibly commercial supremacy.

And here New-York is at a disadvantage. The cargo and the ship must be brought together with the least possible delay and at the least possible cost. At present the cost of handling the produce here is greater than elsewhere, and this City loses a portion of her trade. Some of our dealers have followed the trade to another city, while the others are waiting for a practical solution of the problem as to cargo and ship. There is need of wise counsel and early action. There is a leak, and it must be stopped. Bankers tell me that they find the current of certain lines of western financial accounts changing; they go West to find the cause, and are told the business is transferred to another city because of terminal expenses and delays here. So closely are business interests interlocked that no link in the chain can be snapped without a responsive shock to the whole. This blending of every interest in the common welfare renders it in the last degree unwise for any to assume that it is too remote to be injured by impeding effective measures for assuring facilities for transhipment of produce.

The subject of rapid transit within the City limits is one which cannot be passed by. It is hoped that the time is at hand when it will possess the qualities of a commanding interest. In 1866, as Chairman of a special commission to investigate the subject, I devoted several months to a careful examination, and the conclusion then arrived at—that underground railways passing under streets would best provide for the wants of the City in respect to the safe, rapid, and cheap transportation of persons and property—seems a sound one. The Fourth avenue subway has been a very long step in the direction indicated.

Elevated roads have their advocates, and undoubtedly their merits. Rapid transit roads need a population upon or near their lines. It is alleged with much force that the road must precede the inhabitants; that it must be built, in fact, to make remote property habitable. On the other hand, it is urged with equal force that such a road cannot be constructed without injury to valuable property in the improved portion of the City, and that the damage to improved property is immediate and absolute, while the advantage to distant property is remote and contingent.

Curiously enough, while this controversy is pending, a method of rapid transit has come into vogue which is of interest in this connection. Perpendicular rapid transit has an important bearing upon horizontal rapid transit. If the man who makes two blades of grass grow upon a spot of ground where only one grew before is a benefactor of his race, what shall be said of the man who, in effect, makes two houses stand were only one stood before? The elevator is the vehicle which effects this result. Until within two or three years the third story was as near the sky as it was possible to induce the better class of tenants to go, but the steam elevator makes the fifth and even the sixth accessible and habitable, and the difference in rents between the several floors where this vehicle is in use is surprisingly small. It has become possible, then, to accommodate within a given area a population much more dense than could be housed without this agency. Should the erection of lofty dwellings, flats as they are called, continue to meet with favor, the occupation of unimproved lots must proceed at a slower rate and the improvement of those more remotely situated be in some degree retarded. The influence of the steam elevator upon down-town property admits of no question. Certain callings which are especially gregarious find it possible to keep within the coveted area by occupying the now accessible lofty stories. Indeed, the upper stories of ordinary buildings down-town without elevators are not easily rented.

That rapid transit in some effective form will come is certain. It will be indispensable for a full development of the territorial resources of the City. The conformation of Manhattan Island in itself will impose the necessity of providing means of speedy transit. Yet it is possible, if New-York shall persist with Bourbon-like obstinacy in certain methods, and resist certain reforms, the urgent necessity for rapid transit will be postponed.

ANOTHER REVENUE AGENT KILLED.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 18.—Private dispatches from Warrenton, Mo., state that Col. Fred. Meyer, Revenue Agent for this district, was shot and seriously wounded at that place to-day by Nat. C. Dryden, a lawyer of that place. The cause of the shooting is unknown; but Col. Meyer seized some stills at Warrenton yesterday, and the supposition is that Dryden was attorney for the owners of the stills, and that some dispute growing out of the seizure led to the unfortunate result stated above. The ball from Dryden's pistol entered Col. Meyer's mouth and inflicted a serious wound, but at last accounts he was doing well. A surgeon will leave here to-night to attend him. Aside from the fact that Col. Meyer is an old citizen of St. Louis, and has been an active, efficient officer, Dryden is the son of Judge Dryden, a prominent lawyer of this city. The affair has created a great deal of interest here.

THE SAVAGES IN VICTORIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 18.—A dispatch from Victoria states that the Government have decided to send a gun-boat to the island where Indians report the crew of the George Slought were murdered. THE KINGDOM OF ITALY.

NOTES FROM THE ANCIENT CITY.

ARROGANCE OF THE PAPACY IN THE PAST—THE SPIRIT OF THE VATICAN NOT YET CHANGED—JOHN BULL'S INTERFERENCE WITH ITALIAN LAW—CAPT. BOYTON GETTING ON SWIMMINGLY—VICISSITUDES OF AN ANCIENT CITY—AN ORIGINAL PHASE OF ROMAN SOCIAL LIFE.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ROME, Wednesday, Jan. 30, 1877.

My letter of the 25th inst. bore a date somewhat memorable in the history of the acts of arrogance of the Papacy in the remote past; when to will, with the power to do, was more absolute than at present. It is now just 800 years since Pope Gregory VII. (Hildebrand) obliged the German Emperor Henry IV. to wait with bare feet three days in the Court of the Castle of Canossa, praying that the ban of excommunication might be taken off, which the Pontiff had imposed for acts of opposition to his good pleasure. From what has been said recently, we were in expectation that some notice would be taken of this eighth centenary of an alleged triumph of the Church, by the actual lords of the Vatican. But not a word of exultation has been uttered, nor a lamp lighted, nor any sign whatever given that the centenary has come round. Eight hundred years is a pretty long period in the history of human institutions, and even in the history of the world; and these past centuries have brought many changes to the State and to society, and have laid the foundation, without doubt, for greater changes yet to come. But with all this, it is as clear as anything can be, that the spirit of the Vatican, or of the Papal party, has not changed, and that the Church would be just as ready, had it the power, to impose humiliations and punishments upon the present German Emperor as upon the one who bore the same title long ago. So far as Gregory VII. is concerned in this remarkable fact of history, he did not come out much brighter than his antagonist. Henry forced his way into Italy, and shut Gregory up in the Castle of St. Angelo, while he was crowned in Rome by Clement II., the Anti-Pope whom he himself had appointed. Four years after (1085) Gregory VII. closed his stormy career of 12 years of Papal rule, at Salerno, to which place he had fled for safety. Henry IV., maltreated by his son, whom he had named as his successor to the Empire, died in exile and neglect, at Liege, in 1106, under a second ban of excommunication, which was not removed until five years after his burial.

The action proposed by certain interested parties in England to be taken for the removal of the evils which afflict society, and particularly the chronic evil of brigandage, to which your attention has already been called, has produced a burst of indignant protest from the Italian newspaper press. Some pretty hard words are hurled at the Britishers, and they are plainly told to mind their own business and not attempt to intermeddle in affairs here, for Italians are quite capable of initiating their own legislation and executing their own laws. John Bull is sothick-headed that he does not see that the drawing up a bill for the correction of abuses here is just as offensive to the Italians as would have been similar action by foreigners to find a cure for the woes of Ireland when that island was in a much worse condition than it is at present. The people of this country know that the time is past when a fleet before Napies was sufficient to intimidate the local authority and cause it to submit to arbitrary exactions; and they know also that one of the advantages of the present union of the provinces is that it gives confidence that the rights of the nation will be respected, as there is sufficient power behind to enforce such respect.

Capt. Boyton, with his life-saving invention, has given the Romans for a week past enough to talk about. When he came floating down the Tiber the banks of the river were thronged with thousands of the population, and within the limits of the city hardly a standing-place for others could be found anywhere along the brink of the stream. Some tumbled into the water, and the enterprising Captain came near having an opportunity of putting the utility of his apparatus to a practical test. He had given two or three exhibitions in an inclosed basin during the week, and the curiosity of the public has had full gratification. Such crowds of people on the banks of the Tiber reminded one that the so-much-needed improvement of the river-front of Rome is still unaccomplished. If all the words used, whether printed or spoken, about this great project could be turned into so many bricks and stones, material enough would be furnished to build, not only the quays of the Tiber, but the walls of a new Babylon. As Capt. Boyton, borne along by the current, waved the American flag in friendly greeting to the ancient city one almost wished that some magic influence might be shaken out of the folds of the banner to quicken with a little of our national energy those here who have constituted themselves the conductors of local enterprises. Rome is no longer the sty of filth that it was under the old Government, and, compared with Naples, it is already a model city for cleanliness. But a great part of the crowded districts in which the indigent masses burrow need to be reconstructed. Rome once had not less than 1,000,000 inhabitants within its walls, and several millions in its suburbs, which extended themselves for miles in every direction over the Campagna. As one of the most remarkable examples in history of the vicissitudes to which cities and nations are subjected, we have the fact that this capital of the Cæsars' Empire, at the moment of its lowest estate, was reduced to a population of 17,000. That, as we are informed by authority, was the extreme point it touched in the period of its desolation. Foxes and wolves came back to the caves from which they were driven when the spirit of colinization and of conquest led Romulus and his successors to fix here the seat of the nascent State. The half-brigand clans of warlike barons shared with the wolves and foxes the wild domain of ruin which foreign despoilers had left. Italians are now trying to build the Rome of the second kingly epoch, and the matter is reduced to a vulgar question of money. It is estimated that to carry out the improvements planned by Garibaldi, the municipality, and the State, the sum of not less than 130,000,000 of francs will be needed. Where is this to come from? is the inquiry made on all sides, and no definitive response is yet given. It has been noised about that the Government is ready to guarantee the interest on a loan to this amount, so that a burden greater than it can bear shall not be put upon Rome. Meanwhile, the Tiber rolls its muddy current undisturbed by man's devices, and with no obstacles to hinder it from smearing half the city with its slime when it suits its sweet will.

Before closing this letter, I will put on record a little incident, which, during the past week, has given some slight scandal to certain circles of the town. A Roman marquis, living not far from the Piazza Barbarini, has lately given away his daughter in marriage to one probably of equal social condition. A few days back a good many friends of both the parties in the matrimonial alliance were assembled at the house of the bride's father, or exchange felicitations and view the valuable presents that had been sent in, and which were laid out in the usual way for show and praise. Suddenly, to the consternation of the head of the house, it was discovered that a neck lace and ear-drops, set with brilliants, were missing. The father, without saying a word, sent for the police, and, to the surprise of everybody, the doors were closed and an order given for the whole company to be searched. The order was rigidly executed, but without finding the missing property. The incident is interesting as presenting, at least, an original phase of Roman social life.

GENERAL ASSEMBLY OF NEW-JERSEY

TRENTON, Sunday, Feb. 18, 1877.

The joint meeting of Monday and its probable result continue to be the engrossing topic in political circles here. There does not seem to be any particular change in the situation since last Monday. Mr. Kreuger, the disaffected Democrat, is as much as ever an object of solicitude to both sides. Last Tuesday he voted for Samael Morrow, the Republican candidate. Mr. Morrow is his legal adviser. He is also a resident of the same district with Morrow, and it is intimated that, the district being a Republican one, he owes to Morrow's efforts his election to the Assembly. He has therefore the strongest of reasons, both personal and political, for casting his vote at the approaching joint meeting as he did at the last. On the other hand, he has been persistently slighted by the Democratic members of the House. They promised to induce the appointment of his friend Lee to the lay judgeship of the Essex Common Pleas, but have failed to do anything in that direction. They promised to divide with his friends a share of the printing patronage, but the proposed division of the spoils leaves him entirely out in the cold. In the face of it all, some gentlemen who profess to be cognizant of his designs say that he has expressed a willingness to vote for McMichael. it Gen. Stockton be thrown overboard and the Burlington candidate be nominated in his stead by the Democratic caucus. Mr. Morrow is, however, confident that Kreuger will stick, and fully expects when Tuesday shall have come to be chosen Controller Runyon's successor. The question will be taken into the joint caucuses, which both parties will probably hold to-morrow evening after the adjournment of the houses.

Next to joint meeting and the Controllership, great interest has been shown in the effort to elevate the character of the courts for the trial of small causes in cities. The country Justices of the Peace are selected generally from the best classes of the country people. In the cities they are generally chosen from the rabble of pot-house politicians. Their verdicts are received with no degree of confidence, and costly appeals to the higher courts are the invariable results of the trials before them. Within three months three of the Justices have been on trial in the Hudson County Courts, and two or three others in other parts of the State, for malfeasances of one kind or another. One who had failed to appear for sentence before Judge Hoffman, was surrendered again into the custody of the court last Friday. Several bills looking to needed reform at the very fountain-heads of justice are now pending in the House. The District Court bill weeds the Justices out of the cities altogether, and, in cities of over 15,000 people, vests the civil power which they have hitherto exercised in one or two district courts, the Judge thereof to be a practicing counselor at law, to be chosen by the Governor and confirmed by the Senate. Another bill, introduced by Mr. Brigham, provides for the appointment by the Governor of two to six Justices in cities, according to their population, but enacts that they shall first have passed an examination as to their competency before a Supreme Court Judge.

A third bill, introduced probably for the purpose of heading the other two off, provides for the election by the people of as many Justices as now, but requires an examination first to be made by a Supreme Court Judge as to their competency before their certificates shall be granted them. The Justices are fighting all these bills vigorously. The District Court bill has already passed its second reading, and will probably pass the House this week.

Among the bills which ought to be on the calendar for final passage in the House to-morrow night is Mr. Abbott's bill abolishing Commissions in Jersey City. It passed its second reading without opposition last Thursday. The effort to pass it finally will, however, witness a warm struggle by the Republican Commissioners to retain their offices. The friends of the bill claim to have secured Republican votes enough to pass it; and its opponents do not feel confident of their ability to defeat it. An effort will probably be made to make opposition to the Republican caucus order. If that should be done the bill may be defeated. At the same time the maintenance of Commission rule has so much taxed the patience of the Republicans during the last five or six years that an undoubted sentiment in favor of letting them go by the board prevails. Mr. Brigham, by way of injecting a counter-irritant, last week introduced another bill providing for the election of Commissioners by Assembly Districts; but it provides also that those whose terms of office shall not have expired by June 1 shall hold over for another year. That bill was ordered printed before reference. It is now in the hands of the Municipal Corporations Committee, and it is doubtful if it will ever see daylight again.

AMUSEMENTS.

LOCAL AFFAIRS.

"Our Boys" will be acted this evening at the New Broadway Theatre.

Mr. Burbank will benefit by a reading to occur at Chickering Hall this evening.

A concert in aid of the Hospital for the Cure of Chronic Diseases will be given this evening at Steinway Hall.

Mr. and Mrs. Feininger are to give a recital of vocal and instrumental music at Chickering Hall on Wednesday night.

"Our Hash house" is the title of a new extravaganza which will be made known by the San Francisco Minstrels to-night.

FOREIGN AFFAIRS.

Mme. Marie-Roze Perkins is to return to the Paris Opera Comique to sing in "Mignon."

Mr. Irving's Richard III. continues to engross public and critical attention in London.

Mr. H. J. Byron's new burlesque at the Opera Comique, in London, has for subject and title "The Bohemian Girl."

M. Offenbach's new opera-bouffe called "Doctor Ox" has been successfully produced at the Variété Theatre, in Paris.

Mme. Nilsson has received at Vienna a magnificent bracelet from the Empress of Austria, and in addition has been named singer to the court.

M. Tomael, once a celebrated French baritone, and until recently one of the most valued singing-teachers of the Paris Conservatoire, has been dismissed from that institution. His petition for an inquiry into his case has remained unanswered, but the matter is not likely to rest there.

The Théâtre-Française is in full prosperity. The result of the year 1876 has been magnificent, and the share accruing to each associate exceeds 20,000 francs. The year 1877 commences just as brilliantly, and the "Ami Fritz" continues to make so much money that the revival of "Chatterton" will have to be postponed.

An interesting series of dramatic performances are about to be inaugurated by Mlle. Marie Dumas at the Porte-Saint-Martin, in Paris, the idea being to illustrate the various characteristics of high art in different countries as well as the merits of their respective authors. The representations will be given as matinées, beginning with the "Don Juan" of Pouchkine, translated into French.

A fortnight ago M. Bressant officially retired from the Parisian Comédie Française, after a brilliant career there extending over 23 years. For many of his parts, and notably those in "Hernani," "Le Lion Amoureux," and "Le Verre d'Eau," M. Bressant has left no successor, and, so far, his loss seems irreparable. He will now give himself up entirely to his course of dramatic instruction at the Conservatoire.

Richard Wagner announces to his "devoted admirers" his return from Italy in an epistle which is likely to become somewhat celebrated. He commences by declaring that there is but one real description of music—his own; but, foreseeing that he may find refractory spirits in this world, he proposes to chastise them; and for that purpose he has invented a means as cruel as it is ingenious; namely, to exclude from his future representations at Bayreuth all those who do not bear a badge with the inscription, "Wagnerian enthusiast." He will not, at any price, allow his enemies, whom he terms his "calumniators," to be present on those great occasions

REAR ADMIRAL CHARLES H. DAVIS.

Rear Admiral Charles Henry Davis, Superintendent of the Naval Observatory at Washington, died yesterday morning of disease of the heart. Admiral Davis was born in Boston on Jan. 16, 1807, and was appointed Midshipman from that State on Aug. 12, 1823. In 1827 and 1828 he served on board the frigate United States, in the Pacific Squadron. In 1829 he was promoted to Passed Midshipman, and was attached to the sloop of war Ontario, of the Mediterranean Squadron, from 1830 to 1833. He was ordered to the sloop-of-war Vincennes, of the Pacific Squadron, in 1834, and was commissioned as Lieutenant. During the years 1837 and 1838 he was on special duty, and in 1840 and 1841 he was attached to the razee Independence, of the Brazil Squadron. He was placed on ordnance duty in 1842, and from that time to 1849 was an assistant in the Coast Survey service. He was engaged in the survey of the waters about Nantucket from 1846 to 1849, in the course of which he discovered the "new south shoal" and several smaller shoals lying directly in the track of vessels sailing from New-York to Europe. These discoveries solved the mystery regarding several shipwrecks, and they called forth special acknowledgements from insurance corporations and merchants. During and after his connection with the Coast Survey he served on several commissions appointed to examine the harbors of Boston, New-York, Charleston, and other cities. In connection with these investigations he made a study of the laws of tidal action, the result of which is given in his Memoir upon the Geological Action of the Tidal and other Currents of the Ocean and the Law of Deposit of the Flood Tide. On June 12 1854, he was commissioned as Commander, and in 1857 was ordered to the command of the sloop of war St. Marys, of the Pacific Squadron, and was attached to that vessel until January, 1859, when he returned and was appointed Superintendent of the American Nautical Almanac, the foundation of which was directly owing to his efforts. He was commissioned as Captain in 1861, and was appointed a member of the board of officers convened for the purpose of making a thorough investigation of the Southern coast and harbors, their access and defenses. One of the immediate results of the investigations of this board was the organization of Dupont's expedition to Port Royal, S. C., in which Capt. Davis bore an important part. On May 9, 1862, he was appointed Flag Officer of the Mississippi Flotilla, relieving Flag Officer Foote. On the 11th of the same month an attack, for which the rebel fleet lying below Fort Pillow had been long preparing, was made on the flotilla, of which Davis was in command. The rebel fleet of eight iron-clad steamers, four of them fitted as rams, steamed up, fully prepared for an engagement, and the flotilla was quickly in motion to receive them. An action of an hour's duration at close quarters followed, at the end of which the enemy retreated under the guns of Fort Pillow, three of their gun-boats having been disabled. On June 5 Fort Pillow was abandoned by the rebels. The flotilla moved down the river, and on the morning of June 8 engaged the rebel fleet of eight gun-boats and rams, opposite the City of Memphis. A running fight followed, carrying the vessels several miles below the city, and resulting in the capture or destruction of the entire rebel fleet, except the Van Horn, which succeeded in escaping. At the close of the engagement Davis returned to Memphis and demanded the surrender of the city, and his demand was at once complied with. On June 29 he left Memphis with a part of his flotilla and six mortar-boats, and on July 2 joined Admiral Farragut above Vicksburg, that officer having arrived there a few days previous. Demonstrations were continued by the combined squadrons, at intervals, on the defenses of Vicksburg for some days, the mortar vessels of each squadron bombarding from both above and below. There not being a sufficient military force to co-operate in the reduction of Vicksburg, the scheme was for the time abandoned, and late in July Davis withdrew his command to the mouth of the Yazoo River. In August following, a joint expedition was planned by Davis and Gen. Curtis for operations up the Yazoo, which was entirely successful, resulting in the capture of a battery of heavy guns, field-pieces, munitions, and stores. On July 16, 1862, he was commissioned as Commodore, and in the Fall of the same year was ordered to duty in the Navy Department, at Washington, as Chief of the Bureau of Navigation. While filling this position he was commissioned as Rear Admiral, taking rank from Feb. 7, 1863. In 1865 he was appointed Superintendent of the Naval Observatory at Washington, and continued there until 1867, in which year he was ordered to the command of the South Atlantic squadron, coast of Brazil, for which point he sailed from Boston in the strem frigate Guerriere as his flag-ship, that vessel having been just finished. He remained in that position until the Summer of 1869, when he returned to Washington, and was made a member of the, Light-house Board, and was afteward placed in his old position as Superintendent of the Naval Observatory. At the time of his death he was second on the active list of Rear Admirals, Rear Admiral L. M. Goldsborough being first on the list. Admiral Davis, beside being the author of a number of able and valuable articles on astronomy and geodesy, published in Boston in 1858 a translation of Gauss's Theoria Motus Corporum Cœlestium.

HERR SOLOMON HERMANN MOSENTHAL.

This noted German dramatist, whose name has been made familiar to American audiences as the writer of some of the most powerful dramas of the present day, has just died in the City of Vienna. Herr Mosenthal was of Hebrew parentage, and a native of Cassel, in Germany. He was born Jan. 14, 1821, and received his primary education in his native city. He pursued a course in natural sciences in the Polytechnic School of Carlsruhe, and later studied at Marburg where he received the degree of Doctor of Philosophy. He removed to Vienna in 1842, and became preceptor in the family of a rich banker. Here he soon mingled in literary circles, and his poetical contributions to the Viennese journals attracted attention, and gave him a marked position among Austrian poets. Turning his mind to dramatic composition, however, he achieved in this branch of literature the distinguishing results of his life's labor. Three of his plays in particular have become the most popular works on the German stage—"Deborah," "Sonnenwendhof," and "Die Deutschen Komoedianten," (The German Comedians.) The first of these has been translated into English, Italian, Danish, Hungarian, and Bohemian, and formed no ineffective feature of the répertoire of Madame Ristori. Besides these he produced, later on in his career, "Ein Deutsches Dichterleben" (A German Poet's Life,) "Der Goldschmid von Ulm," (The Goldsmith of Ulm,) "Düweke," and the tragedy of "Pietra." Still more recently "Isabella Orsini" was produced simultaneously in Vienna and Hamburg, and was received with marked exhibitions of public favor. Herr Mosenthal's dramatic power has become more generally known to the American public, however, through Mr. Augustin Daly's presentation of a play of this distinguished author under the title of "Madeleine Morel," produced at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, on May 20, 1873. Among the more distinctly poetic productions of Herr Mosenthal are "Das Gefangen Bild," (The Imprisoned Image,) published in Stuttgardt in 1858, and a collection of poems, Gasammelte Gedichte, published in Vienna in 1866. In 1851 Herr Mosenthal was placed in charge of the archives of the Department of Public Instruction of Austria, in which position he continued up to the time of his death.

OBITUARY NOTES.

Ex-Alderman Charles B. Wylie, who, three years ago, was an Independent member of the Brooklyn Board of Aldermen, and for the last two years and a half has been Clerk of the Third District Court, in that city, under Justice Riley, died at 10 o'clock on Saturday night, at his residence, No. 417 Myrtle avenue, of consumption and kidney disease, from which complaints he had been suffering for several months past.

Guilford R. Wilson, a coal merchant and old citizen of Buffalo, died yesterday afternoon, after a short illness, aged 64 years. He was the pioneer shipper of anthracite coal on the lakes.

A SELF-POSSESSED WOMAN.

The Augusta (Me.) Journal says: "A lady was driving a spirited horse, on the other side of the river, near the Kennebec bridge, when the sleigh went down into one of the hollows of the road, by which means it was capsized and the lady thrown out. She still clung to the reins, and was dragged a distance of several rods before the horse was brought to. Several gentlemen rushed to her rescue, thinking she must be badly hurt; but the lady quietly gathered herself up, took her position in the righted sleigh, and with ribbons in hand, drove off, coolly remarking to the crowd, 'These pitches are awfully troublesome when a person is in a hurry!'"

LOSSES BY FIRE.

A dispatch from Medina, Ohio, says: "At 12:30 o'clock yesterday morning fire was discovered in the Empire block, occupied by E. J. Fenn, dry goods store, and the building was entirely consumed, as were three buildings adjoining, and occupied by E. Cohen, barber; F. W. Rheinhard, baker and confectioner, and M. Bach, boots and shoes. The loss on the buildings is $10,000; insured for $4,600 in the Lycoming, of Muncey, Penn. Mr. Fenn's loss is estimated at from $12,000 to $15,000; insured as follows: $4,000 in the Phenix, Brooklyn; $3,000, Niagara, New-York; $2,000 in the M. M. and M., Milwaukee; $2,000 in the Cooper, Dayton, Ohio; $1,150 in the Steubenville, Ohio. Mr. Reinhard's loss is $1,200; insured for $700 in the Steubenville, Ohio. Mr. Bach's loss is $2,000; insured for $800 in the Humboldt, New-Jersey. Mr. Cohen's loss is small; no insurance.

Guild's Block and Codding's Building in North Attleboro, Mass., were burned early yesterday morning. Loss, $25,000; insurance, $18,000. The fire commenced in Codding's Building, occupied by Jacob H. Peck as a market. The loss on Guild's Block is about $10,000, and on Codding's Building $1,000. Mr. Peck's loss is about $900. Guild's Block was occupied by six stores, to wit, James E. Polland, hardware, loss $2,000; Benjamin Dexter, pictures and frames, loss $500; Harrison Leland, furniture, &c., loss $5,000; D. B. Cornell, paints and paper hangings, loss $3,200; John Badz, tailor, loss, $1,500, and Sperry & Co., coffin warerooms, loss $2,000.

About midnight on Saturday a fire-board ignited in the two-story frame residence of Antony Figueira, No. 592 Court street, Brooklyn, resulting in damage to the building, and a similar one adjoining, (No. 594) owned by Richard Cronin, to the amount of $2,000 each, and causing the loss of about $1,000 worth of furniture and other personal property. The losses are nearly covered by insurance in the Phenix Company, of Brooklyn.

At 2:30 o'clock yesterday morning a fire occurred on the first floor of the frame building No. 124 Canal street, jointly occupied by Max Gruhn as a coffee and cake saloon and John Bade as a grocery store. The fire was caused by a defective gas-pipe. Damage, $300; insured.

Shortly after 4 o'clock yesterday morning a fire was discovered on the second floor of the armory building, No. 1,494 Broadway, occupied by G. J. B. Sammis & Co., manufacturers of wheels, spokes, and axles, and was promptly extinguished. Damage, $200.

Shortly after midnight a fire occurred on the first floor of the four-story brick building, No. 3 New-Chambers street, occupied as a clothing store by S. Franklin, caused by hot ashes thrown into a box. Damage to building and stock, $350; insured.

A fire Saturday in Middletown, 25 miles from Dayton, Ohio, destroyed the pork factory of Shafer & Kemp, and a quantity of stock. The loss is estimated at $25,000; insured for $21,000 on the building, stock, and machinery.

A fire broke out at 1 o'clock yesterday morning on the top floor of the residence of J. R. Francke, No. 2 West Fiftieth street, caused by carelessness on the part of the servants. Damage to building and furniture $300; fully insured.

At 12:30 o'clock yesterday a fire occurred in the dwelling of Mr. Thomas Lord, No. 35 West Seventeenth street, causing $150 damage to building and furniture; insured in the Royal Insurance Company.

A fire occurred at 11:30 o'clock yesterday morning in the room of Joseph Wolff on the second floor of No. 33 West street, caused by a defective flue. Damage, $10.

A GANG OF YOUNG THIEVES IN CUSTODY.

For several weeks past a number of small burglaries and robberies have occurred at stores along Third avenue, and from the investigations made by Detectives McGowan and Brennan, of the Nineteenth Precinct, the officers became convinced that the depredations were committed by a gang of young thieves who infest the neighborhood of Forty-third street. During last week the officers named arrested Stephen Kiernan, aged 19; Michael Collins, alias James Jinks, aged 22, who was convicted of burglary on Nov. 15, 1873, and sentenced to five years' imprisonment; Dennis Shay, alias George Williams, aged 24, who was convicted of highway robbery Jan. 30, 1873, and sentenced to five years' imprisonment, and William Dunn, aged 21, convicted of grand larceny Feb. 13, 1875, and sentenced to two and a half years' imprisonment. The evidence against these young thieves is believed to be sufficient to secure their conviction. The officers have

MONDAY, Feb. 19—A. M.

The statement of the associated banks issued from the Clearing-house on Saturday last shows a loss of $1,685,425 in surplus reserve, which reduces the excess above legal requirements held by the banks to $19,709,100. The changes in the statement are an increase of $2,237,300 in loans, $2,021,500 in legal tenders, and $623,700 in deposits, and a decrease of $3,551,000 in specie and $80,700 in circulation.

The following shows the condition of the banks on Saturday last, as compared with the previous statement and with the statement for the corresponding week last year:

	Feb. 10.	Feb. 17.	Feb. 19, 1876.
Loans	$256 814,100	$259,051,400	$269,781,400
Specie	35,616,600	32,065,600	32,041,300

Legal tenders	43,786,700	45,808,200	Inc. 2,021,500
Excess of res've above legal requirements	21,394,525	19,709,100	Dec. 1,685,425

The monetary situation continues to exhibit a state of great ease. The extreme rates for call loans throughout the week were 2½ and 4 ₱ cent., with the great bulk of the business at intermediate quotations. Discounts were unchanged at 4@5 ₱ cent. for prime mercantile paper.

The foreign advices were not specially important, and reported a firm market at London for British Consols and American securities. The Bank of England gained £61,000 in specie for the week ending Wednesday last. The rate of discount remains unchanged at 2 ₱ cent.

The foreign exchange market was steady, but scarcely any business was transacted, the demand for bills of any kind being exceedingly light. The nominal asking rates were $4 84½ for bankers' 60 day sterling, and $4 86 for demand bills.

The gold speculation was entirely devoid of animation. The highest and lowest prices were 105⅞ and 105½ respectively, and the closing quotation 105¾. The rates on gold loans ranged from 1 to 5 ₱ cent. for carrying, with the borrowing rate flat.

Government bonds were quiet and prices well maintained. The opinion prevails that when the Presidential question is finally settled a considerable amount of capital now lying idle is likely to be invested in this class of securities. Railroad bonds were generally lower, with the heaviest decline in the issues of the coal roads. Among State bonds, District of Columbia 3.65s were at intervals in active demand, and advanced to 73, with closing transactions at a fractional reaction.

The railway and miscellaneous share speculation was characterized by weakness, and the dealings in the active stocks were at times attended with considerable excitement. The coal shares were conspicuous in the downward movement. The influences adversely affecting these stocks were the appointment of a Receiver for New-Jersey Central, the revelations in regard to the previous mismanagement of the affairs of that company, and the systematic deception practiced by its officers in concealing from the stockholders all knowledge as to the actual condition of their property, together with reports that some of the other coal corporations were suffering from financial embarrassment. A prominent feature of the market was the depression in investment shares. New-York Central fell off from 101 to 97⅞, and Rock Island from 100⅝ to 97¾, with closing transactions at a merely fractional recovery. The general market in the final dealings was feverish and unsettled in tone.

THE STATEN ISLAND MYSTERY.

THE CHAIN OF CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE AGAINST GEORGE L. ERNST BROKEN—THE PRISONER TO BE RELEASED TO-DAY—PECULIAR DISCREPANCIES IN THE STATEMENTS OF HUSBAND AND WIFE.

In pursuing the investigation in relation to the guilt or innocence of George L. Ernst, whose arrest on suspicion of having been concerned in the death of the young woman whose corpse was found on the morning of the 11th inst. near the old Quarantine grounds on Staten Island, has been fully chronicled in THE TIMES. Sergt. Suttie and Detective George H. Dilks paid a visit yesterday to the Richmond County Poor-house, where the body of the unfortunate young woman is still kept awaiting positive identification. They were accompanied by a young son of Mrs. Henrietta Schaal, the proprietress of the boarding-house, No. 188 Franklin street, where Ernst boarded, and where, it is alleged, he was in the habit of receiving frequent visits from a young woman, answering in some respects the description of the deceased. Mrs. Schaal stated on Saturday that on the evening preceding the finding of the body this young woman called on Ernst, and appeared to be in great trouble, and that Ernst went with her to Staten Island. Ernst admitted that he went to Staten Island with a woman on the night in question, but said that this woman was his wife. Mrs. Ernst corroborated her husband's statement in the main, but there were a number of minor discrepancies in the two statements. The visit of the officers to Staten Island was for the purpose of ascertaining definitely whether the deceased was the woman who was in the habit of calling on Ernst at his lodgings, and young Schaal, who had seen this woman several times, was expected to identify her. On reaching the place where the remains are temporarily deposited, the youth was shown the corpse, and, after gazing steadily for several minutes at the remains, said emphatically that he had never seen that face before. He was next shown the clothing which the woman had worn, and he again reiterated the statement that the remains were not those of the woman who had called at his mother's house to see Ernst. He said that the deceased resembled this woman somewhat, but was not so tall. He is now firmly convinced that the woman who called on Ernst was his wife. The non-identification of the remains overthrows the fabric of circumstantial evidence which had been slowly accumulating against the prisoner, and he will be released to-day. He will be taken for that purpose before Justice Kilbreth, at the Tombs, this morning.

Mrs. Ernst called on Inspector Dilks, at the Police Central Office, yesterday, and told him that she wished to correct the statement made by her on Saturday to the effect that she had never called on her husband at his boarding-house. She says now that she did call there on the Wednesday or Thursday previous to the finding of the body, but not on Saturday evening, as stated by Mrs. Schaal. The latter is, however, positive that it was on Saturday evening that the fair-haired stranger, whom she now recognizes as Mrs. Ernst, called at her house, and it is impossible to reconcile these two statements, except on the hypothesis that Mrs. Schaal is mistaken as to the evening on which the woman called, or that there is still another woman, a blonde, with blue eyes, mixed up in the case, who has not appeared on the scene since the discovery of the murder or suicide. Mrs. Ernst obtained permission from the Inspector to visit her husband at the Leonard Street Police Station, where she had an interview with him in the presence of an officer, under the proviso that the matter for which he was under arrest should not be the subject of conversation between them. Ernst's brother, who is sexton of the church at the corner of Broome and Elizabeth streets, also called on Inspector Dilks, but was not allowed to visit his brother.

BURGLARS CLEVERLY CAPTURED.

At 9 o'clock on Saturday night Jacob Hellman called on Capt. Byrnes, at the Mercer Street Police Station, and reported that the apartments of his father, Mr. Emanuel Hellman, on the second floor of No. 5 Clinton street, had just been robbed of jewelry valued at $3,000 by two young men, who had made their escape in an express wagon. The wagon had been standing in front of the house while the thieves were in the apartments, and one of the neighbors had noticed that "Clinton Place" was painted on its side. Capt. Byrnes remembered that some time ago a wagon belonging to John W. Earl, who keeps a stable in Clinton place, between Macdougal street and Sixth avenue, had been captured in New-Jersey while conveying stolen goods to this City, and he at once sent Detectives Sievin and Dolan of his command to the stable. The officers learned that two men had hired a wagon there at about 7 o'clock and had not returned it. The detectives stationed themselves in the neighborhood of the stable to await their return with the wagon. They had not been waiting long when they saw the wagon coming down Clinton place from the direction of Broadway at a rapid pace. There were two men in it whom the officers at once recognized as expert burglars. One was Charles Purdy, alias "the Kid," whom Sievin had been instrumental in sending to Sing Sing several years ago for burglary, and his companion was Edward Farrell, who has also done the State service at the same penal establishment. As the wagon approached, Sievin jumped out into the street and seized the horse's head. Both the men leaped out and started off in opposite directions. Purdy ran to Sixth avenue, and turned up that thoroughfare. As he turned the corner he threw off his overcoat, and taking the middle of the street between the car tracks, ran like a deer up the avenue, closely followed by Sievin. The officer called on the fugitive to stop, but the flying burglar paid no attention to the summons, and Sievin fired a shot from his pistol in the air hoping thereby to cause the surrender of the fugitive, but without effect. Finding, however, that his pursuer was gaining on him, Purdy turned suddenly at bay, and slipping his hands into the pistol pocket of his pantaloons, was about to draw a revolver when Sievin, who had come up with him, divining his intention, by a well-directed blow under the ear sent him reeling into the gutter. Before he could recover himself the officer had disarmed and secured the desperate burglar. Meanwhile Dolan pursued Farrell, and after a sharp chase succeeded in arresting him. Both men were taken to the Mercer street Police station and searched. In the possession of Purdy were found six solitare unset diamonds half a dozen silver tablespoons, half a dozen silver teaspoons, a gold thimble, and a large bottle of chloroform. Farrel had in his pockets two gold watches, a heavy gold neck chain, an oval locket, and an empty watch-case. The prisoners were locked up, and Mr. Hellman, on being notified, identified the property found in their possession as having been stolen from him. A quantity of old gold and silver, several gold rings, and some valuable papers stolen at the same time are still missing, and it is supposed that the thieves threw these articles away in their flight. It was ascertained that the burglars had forced open the door leading to Mr. Hellman's apartments with a "jimmy" during the absence of the occupant, and had also forced open a box containing the property. The prisoners were arraigned at the Washington Place Police Court before Justice Flammer yesterday, and remanded until to-day, when a formal charge of burglary will be made against them.

"RETURN GRAIN MOVEMENT" RUMORS.

Foreign grain markets have been tame and spiritless for a long time past, especially for wheat, and our own markets have been, in the wheat connection, kept relatively higher as to prices, partly by speculative manipulation, based on the assumption of short supplies in the interior, thus seriously checking business. Export dealings in wheat at this point have been recently unimportant, shippers complaining of their inability to pay asking rates. Millers here and throughout the interior have been also very reserved in their operations, yet values have been maintained by holders with remarkable firmness. Through the past few weeks various rumors have been in circulation of return shipments of American wheat from Europe of more or less magnitude, these rumors, for the most part, being credited to "well-informed parties at Chicago," where, by the way, the speculative interest is reprenented as being in substantial control of the market. The rumors have had reference mostly to returning cargoes of California wheat, but at the close of the past week became more comprehensive, and hinted at "large quantities of wheat arriving at the port of New-York from England, Germany, and California, with further important amounts on the way." The rumors, as nearly as anything could be made out of them having a basis of probability, are spoken of here as having the foundation of a return shipment of very inferior Spring wheat from Glasgow, which inferior wheat is said to be in liberal supply and unmarketable there, and possibly one or two lots of California wheat, which have been involved in the return movement by the rumors which are so freely supplied from certain points at the West to the markets of the seaboard with the sufficiently obvious purpose of influencing values. Within a week or so West Canada millers have been purchasing wheat at Milwaukee quite freely to provide for their urgent wants, local supplies having been exhausted. Late cable advices are of stronger foreign markets for wheat, and export buyers are seemingly more disposed to operate here and at the outports, especially in view of the favorable circumstances of extraordinarily low rates of ocean freight both by sail and steam. Recent purchases of mixed Western corn on export account, for delivery here and at Philadelphia and Baltimore, have been extensive; and prime rye is again in comparatively active request for the German markets. The export call for flour at present comes mostly from the West Indies, South America, and the British American Provinces, the inquiry for Europe being extremely light. City millers supply the bulk of the West India trade requirements.

THE RESURRECTION OF MAN.

DR. CHAUNCEY GILES' LAST LECTURE ON THE SWEDENBORGIAN THEORY OF DEATH AND THE RESURRECTION—THE RESURRECTION OF THE MATERIAL BODY HELD TO BE AN IMPOSSIBILITY.

The Church of the New Jerusalem, in East Thirty-fifth street, between Park and Lexington avenues, was crowded last evening on the occasion of the delivery, by Rev. Dr. Chauncey Giles, of a lecture on "The Resurrection of Man," being the fourth and last of a series of lectures explanatory of the Swedenborgian theories of death and the resurrection.

After briefly alluding to the importance of the theme upon which he was about to speak, Dr. Giles proceeded to explain the meaning of the two words "man" and "resurrection," a distinct idea of the import of which was essential to a clear understanding of the subject. By "man" was meant a spiritual being in the human form, capable of love, thought, consciousness, and all the activities and functions of a man. By "resurrection" was meant the withdrawal of man from the material body, and not the collecting together, reorganization, and vivification of the elements which once composed that body. Having ascertained the meaning of the terms, the next point was to obtain evidence of the truth of this theory of resurrection. Evidence is furnished in the material world by an examination of the process by which plants and animals attain the highest state of their existence. In every case that state is reached by successive steps, each one of which is a resurrection of a form which lay unfolded in a lower one, and was clothed by it in the same way that man is invested with a material body. We find the same regular and universal method of the Divine wisdom in the creation of plants, insects, birds, animals, and man, so far as regards his life in this world. The creation is not effected directly and immediately, without any agency of intermediate steps, but is consummated by a series of resurrections of forms from other forms within which they were organized. If this, said Dr. Giles, is the universal method of creation, are we not justified in believing that if another distinct step in existence is to be taken by an animal or by man, it will be taken in the same way according to the same law. This law of creation is worthy of notice as bearing upon the commonly received doctrine that the resurrection of man is merely the reorganization of his material body and its revivification by the soul. It cannot be reconciled with such a theory, and, further, there is not a hint in the whole creation that any material body of any kind, when once cast off and disalpated, is ever reorganized and reinhabited. If man were thus to return to his material body he would be an anomaly and an exception to the universal teachings of the Lord in His works.

The Lord's testimony as contained in the Word also favors this theory that resurrection is a withdrawal from the material body. In nearly every instance where the subject is referred to there is something which renders it impossible to interpret the passages containing such references as teaching the resurrection of the material body. If, however, spiritual changes in the soul are meant by "death" and "resurrection," then the meaning of the passages become plain and accords with the whole Scriptures and all that we know of the Divine laws and methods. The testimony of the Apostles in their epistles is also to the same effect. Even Paul's argument in the fifteenth chapter of First Corinthians—which is relied upon as conclusive evidence of the resurrection of the material body—in which he bases the certainty of man's resurrection on the fact that the Lord rose from the dead, even this upon close analysis is found to contain no allusion to a resurrection of the material body. In it a clear distinction is drawn between the inward man, who was alive, and the outward man, who, though active, is dead in sin. To the objector, who asks, "How are the dead raised up, and with what bodies do they come," the Apostle replies by illustrating the resurrection by the simple principle evolved in the planting and growth of seed. A seed planted is never raised, but rather another body or form is raised out of it. This is precisely the doctrine of the new Church. It holds that the material body dies and turns to dust, in accordance with the universal law of growth, and that it is never again raised up, but another body is raised out of it. If these Scriptural passages leave any room for doubting this assumption, another kind of testimony, which ought to be conclusive, is obtainable. The Scriptures reveal the important fact that, although the resurrection of the material body has not taken place, human beings who once lived in this world are now living in the spiritual world. In one instance of this kind we find Moses and Elias, who had been dead, in the common meaning of the word, for hundreds of years, appearing before the Lord, still living, as human beings, in human forms, with their identity still preserved. In another instance, John testifies in Revelation that he "saw people of every kindred, tongue, and nation singing a new song to the Lord for their redemption;" and also that he "saw under the altar the souls of them that were slain for the Word of God, and for the testimony which they held." Afterward he saw multitudes, which no man could number, standing before the throne and before the Lamb, clothed with white robes and with palms in their hands, crying in a loud voice, "Salvation to our God who sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb." Here is the proof of our continued existence as human beings in the human form before the resurrection, which is so often demanded, and which, it is claimed, would dispel all doubt and carry with it conviction of the reality of a future existence. These people whom the Apostle John saw were not in their material bodies, for those had died and turned to dust. These bodies must then have been spiritual. Their identity was preserved; they were the same beings who had lived in this world. Thus, from whatever point of view we regard the subject, whether from reason or revelation, we are compelled to recognize the resurrection of man from his material body, never again to reanimate it, as a law of the Divine order, and a part of the plan of infinite love and wisdom for the perfection and happiness of all human beings. When man leaves the material body it returns to the dust whence it originated. Leaving the material body, he throws off all physical weakness and decay, and comes into full consciousness of the realities of the spiritual world. He comes into the full blessedness of a life whose mainspring is love of the Lord; into a life, the recipients of which will regain the freshness and vigor, zest and beauty of the prime of life, and will continue to advance forever into larger wisdom, nobler and lovelier form, and more exquisite happiness.

In conclusion, the speaker briefly reviewed the points brought out in his preceding lectures, and argued that they gave undoubted proof of the truth of the Swedenborgian theory that the dissolution of the material body is simply a provision of the infinite love and wisdom for the attainment of man's higher state; that man's resurrection is but an orderly step in his life by which he attains that state, and that, finally, having attained it, he begins to live as a human being in a spiritual body in the human form in some mansion in his Father's house, where he will find a home in which his soul shall enjoy peace and the faculties of his mind perfect freedom of action.

THE RUSSIAN GRAND DUKES.

HOW THE IMPERIAL PARTY SPENT SUNDAY.

The Grand Duke Alexis and his party spent yesterday very quietly, remaining in their hotel during the greater part of the day. After an early breakfast, the Grand Duke Constantine and Dr. Coudrine went to the Greek Chapel in Second avenue, near Fiftieth street, and heard mass, which was celebrated by Rev. Father Bjerring, the Pastor. The Gospel lesson for the day was taken from Matthew xxii., 15-22. Shortly after 10 o'clock the Grand Duke Alexis and Baron Schilling went out for a walk, taking the little white bull-terrier which they brought from Norfolk with them. They were dressed plainly, and very few of the persons whom they met knew who they were. Upon leaving the hotel they went through Eighteenth street to Broadway, and thence to Madison square and Fifth avenue, and walked rapidly up the latter until they reached Fiftieth street, at which point they turned and retraced their steps. At 6 o'clock the imperial party dined in the hotel, and then passed the evening smoking and chatting until about 10 o'clock, when they took another walk, this time going down Broadway as far as Bleecker street. Baron de Bodisco, the Russian Consul General, dined with the Grand Duke and was with him the greater part of the evening.

A DESPERATE WIFE.

Elizabeth Healy, aged 29, residing at No. 29 Sheriff street, had a quarrel with her husband yesterday, during which he struck her in the face. The woman seized her three-year-old child, and with the infant in her arms rushed out of the house. She made her way to Pier No. 57 East River, where her excited manner attracted the attention of the watchman on the pier. The woman attempted to throw her child into the river, but was prevented by the watchman, who held her until Patrolman Combes, of the Seventh Precinct, arrived, when she was taken into custody. Mrs. Healy said that she desired to end her existence, which had become unendurable owing to the brutality of her husband. She intended first to drown her child and then to jump overboard herself. The woman was detained at the station-house for the night.

LOWER RENTS IN BROOKLYN

REDUCTIONS TO BE MADE IN MAY.

THE MARKET NOT YET FULLY INDICATED—AN INEVITABLE REDUCTION—THE FAVORED LOCALITIES IN THE WESTERN DISTRICT—SHOP RENTS—THE OUTLOOK IN THE EASTERN DISTRICT.

"We had 3,000 vacant houses on our hands at the end of May last," said a Brooklyn real estate agent one day last week, "because in the early Spring house-owners made up their minds that they would have the prices they had fixed, and then adhered to them immovably. They would listen to no suggestions about shrinkage of values, the dullness of trade, reductions of salary, the precarious earnings of many men with families, and the inducements offered to men to leave the city altogether for situations certain but not lucrative; but they had their own way, and have lost money, and gained nothing but costly experience."

The condition of things in the City of Brooklyn, with regard to rents for the season beginning on the 1st of May next, was found, upon diligent inquiry by a reporter of THE TIMES, to be similar to that existing in New-York City. With tenants of both stores and houses there is a general feeling of inability to continue the payment of rents fixed a year ago. Many men who have hitherto found it comparatively easy to pay $3,000 or $4,000 a year for a house, through the dullness of trade are compelled either to obtain a reduction of their rental or to move to a cheaper building. The clerks of large establishments, who have been cramped by serious loppings off of their salaries, are also compelled to resort to economical arrangements, and are doing it without much regard to the feelings of landlords or agents who are interested in commissions. Shop-Keepers along the principal streets, who are selling less than they did in "easier" times, and making smaller profits, offer their landlords the option of lower rents or vacant shops, and they will shorten the already short salaries of their clerks and book-keepers. The clerks and book-keepers, and the great host of working people who labor in New-York and dwell in Brooklyn, many of them almost despairing of a better day, are positive in their demands for lower rents, as many of them have been unable to pay the already small prices charged for the rooms they have occupied for months past. With the worst condition of commercial depression known for years, bearing upon all classes of citizens, the tax-payers of Brooklyn are additionally burdened with taxes so enormous and difficult to pay, that their imposition is threatening the ruin of many holders of property. These taxes, going as they do in a large measure into the pockets of unnecessary office-holders, supporting a ring of politicians almost as powerful and conscienceless as was the Tammany Ring in its most vicious days, are felt and talked of day after day by those who bear them, but as time goes on nothing is done to break the power which imposes them. All over the city the Corporation is acquiring title to real estate upon which the taxes have accumulated until there is no choice left to the owner but to surrender his claim upon it. Many owners having struggled against their burdensome assessments until now, find themselves out of pocket, and on thousands of houses the announcement "For sale" is known to be but an expression of despair and desperation. Of course this overtaxation affects the rates of rentals. The landlord, in his desire to meet his current expenses, endeavors to keep his rents up to a figure that will pay his taxes, maintain the condition of his houses, and prevent his property from falling into the hands of the Sheriff. And in this effort, made alike all over the city, comes the explanation of the obstinacy which last year found 3,000 or more houses unoccupied, many of them going to rapid ruin, and not a few becoming the prey of the auctioneer's remorseless hammer.

As yet it is almost too soon to speak confidently or positively about rents in Brooklyn for the coming year. Real estate agents, like their brethren in this City, are anxious that the subject shall not be agitated too early, lest the host of house-hunters to secure places late in April shall be restrained, and they advise that "nothing should be said about the prospect just yet." Their caution is natural. "Business is business" with them, and it is their concern to put off the day of reduction as long as possible. They feel and acknowledge, when pressed to express an opinion, that rents must come down. Houses of all sorts are to be let at lower rates, if they are to be let at all, and the highest priced houses in the best localities are to feel the pressure most seriously. Only in a few instances will stores be rented at rates which were obtained last Spring, while there is abundant evidence that there will be hundreds of shops in good streets that will remain empty, while their owners would be glad to rent them at any price.

THE WESTERN DISTRICT.

Among the Brooklyn real estate agents, in the neighborhood of Montague street, which is the real estate centre, the common answer to the question: "What about May rents," was: "Can't say; no market yet; tenants anxious for reductions; landlords silent, but convinced that concessions must be made, and both waiting for something to turn up." The inquiry as yet has been small. A few persons, desirous of obtaining houses on the Heights, have made application, but there are as few houses available in that favorite district as in former years. Agents say that there are always plenty of people ready to move into a house on the Heights as soon as it is given up, and that the steady demand always keeps prices pretty well up. Still there has been a decline in prices even in the most favored streets. Houses that rented three years ago for $4,000, declined last Spring to less than $3,000, and it, is deemed wise by landlords to keep good tenants for even less than this figure now, so that the same premises will probably not bring more than $2,800 or $2,500. The request for houses at from $800 to $1,200 is very good, the smallest price being obtained for frame buildings, small but new and in quiet neighborhoods. The complaint is general of the dilapidated condition of a large number of houses, this applying true not only in the best parts of the City, but lamentably so in the indifferent sections. In connection with this part of the subject, agents say that tenants are requiring a great deal more of landlords than formerly. Rents are collected with great difficulty, and where the tenants have been compelled to make repairs for their own comfort, after having in vain requested the landlords to make them, they have insisted upon deducting the expense from their bills at the end of the quarter or month. Houses that rented two years ago for $1,000 are now bringing $750, but it is possible a slight reduction even upon this inside price will be made to old tenants. Where two years ago $1,200 was obtained, the price is reduced to $1,000, these figures obtaining for three-story brown stone houses. Away from the Heights the changes in prices are greater, but medium-priced houses near the City Hall are "holding their own" better than dwelling property an hour's ride away. "Everybody wants to live ten minutes away from the City Hall," said an agent, "and nobody wants to pay more than $800 for a house." The limit of Atlantic avenue on the south, Cumberland street on the east, and Hamilton avenue on the north, about describes the "ten minute" district, but it is only the well-kept houses that will not feel a reduction of from 15 to 20 per cent., and on the best of houses it will be as much as 10 per cent. In Livingston street, where the surroundings are fair, one agent said he had difficulty in letting for $900 a house which last year rented for $1,300, while one that until now has brought $1,800, would have to be rented for $1,500 or even less. A house of 21 rooms, that in ordinary times would rent easily for $2,500, would not now bring $2,000. Landlords charge, say $1,000 for a house, which they think is worth that rent, but they will "snap up" a good tenant at $800. The inquiry is for houses from $700 to $1,000—and nothing higher is asked for. Below Atlantic avenue, toward and in South Brooklyn, the state of uncertainty is very great. Landlords fear to lose their tenants, as they are hard to get, even with low rents, and the inducements offered to present occupants to remain will be as powerful as the tax-list will permit. The district about Prospect Park, where brown-stone houses sprang up like mushrooms a few years ago, is well marked already with bills of "To Let," as well as "For Sale," and the impression among agents is that there will be reductions, varying according to location and the condition of houses.

Store property along Fulton street is of course the best in the city, but Fulton street is not equally good for business in all parts of it, and prices vary on different sides just as they do on Broadway. Beginning at the Ferry, rents are low as far up the hill as Sands street, but they "will have to come down," if the prophecies of the occupants are true. Above Sands street, on the left hand side going up the hill, the shops in some instances bring rents of $5,000, $8,000, and even $10,000, and there is little proobability that there will be any great reduction in these prices. The sales are in the best quarter, and some one is always ready to take them. There are many vacant at rest on the right hand side, some of them having been so for months, and they cannot be rented at any but the lowest prices. When these stores can be rented for $2,000 the building on the opposite side of the street will bring $4,000 much more readily. West to Fulton street in importance, and feeling the dulness of business as keenly, is Myrtle avenue. Along its length one may see hundreds of good stores vacant, and the cry of the tenants of occupied stores is loud for reductions. From 15 to 25 per cent. was estimated by one agent to be the probable reduction in rents along Myrtle avenue, depending upon the outlying neighborhood, the side of the street—for Myrtle avenue has its best side, too—and the style of the building. On Court street numerous placards are exhibited on business property. These placards increase in number as the distance from the City Hall becomes greater, and notably multiply beyond Atlantic avenue. On Atlantic avenue, below Court street, there will be some reduction made, it is thought, even in the best class of store property in that section, but above Court street there is the cry, "No market." Smith street, which may be compared with the Third avenue in this City in the character of its business, and which is ordinarily a good street for business, feels the depression, and the universal dropping tendency is to be followed.

In connection with the statement that there were large numbers last year of vacant dwellings in Brooklyn, it was said by a prominent agent that the disposition to "double up" was so great that it could not fail to have its effect in increasing the number of vacancies. Persons are coming to the agencies with half a house to let who have always occupied a dwelling exclusively, and they find it easy to rent such apartments at good prices. The impression prevails among many of the Brooklyn agents, as it has prevailed in previous years, that the extravagant prices in New-York will drive over the river an immense throng of eager house-hunters, who will be ready to pay good prices, and that the agents can make about their own terms with these strangers. To be mistaken in this direction will be to invite an increase in the number of vacancies, and it is probable that the disposition to accommodate tenants in New-York will tend to check any speculative prices established on the assumption that new comers will consider Brooklyn cheap at any price. The newer cottages of brick and brown stone that are scattered about the city, at distances of from a mile to two miles from the City Hall, renting at from $350 to $500, are about the best class of property just now for owners who are anxious to make sure of tenants. These houses, containing from 7 to 10 rooms, fitted up to accommodate small families, are more frequently inquired for than houses of larger capacity held at higher rents.

THE EASTERN DISTRICT.

The real estate agents in the Eastern District of Brooklyn look back with sinking hearts to the records of real estate operations in that quarter a decade ago, and wonder if the prosperity that blessed them then will ever again return. While there has been some building there during the past year, there does not appear to be a good reason why money should be invested in that way when there is already an abundance of surplus space all over the city both for dwelling and business purposes. But comparatively few vacancies are foreshadowed in the principal thoroughfares, the time being almost too early to know what tenants will do. The outlook for stores along Broadway is poor, after one has passed Fourth street, and even below that point the keepers of shops all talk as if they were poor and did not consider it worth while to continue in business if they could not reduce expenses. Fonadh street, one of the best streets, with many flourishing shops between Grand street and the fountain on Bedford avenue, and a street upon which high rents have always been obtained, feels the pressure of the hard times, and landlords in many instances have signified their intention of conceding something to all tenants, although they made important concessions last year—Spring and Fall in some cases—and had yielded something the year before that. On Grand street, the Bowery of Williamsburg, the best rents scarcely going above $2,000, are likely to be less, and lesser rents will be reduced in a proper proportion. Dwellings near the ferry, for there is the same anxiety to be near the ferry in the Eastern District that is met with in the Western District, hold to prices stoutly. On Bedford avenue, in the neighborhood of Clymer, Wilson, and South Tenth streets, houses are inquired for at a rent of $800, and this is far above the limit which the large majority choose to name. As in Brooklyn proper, so in the Eastern District, families are finding out that they can get along with half a house rather than occupy an entire house, and are offering the lower or upper parts of hitherto private residences for rents as low as can be expected, with the gentility of appearance secured, although the houses rented in this way are often without the conveniences for housekeeping found in many flats. Tenements of good class, where the rents range from $18 to $25 per month, may, in a few instances, have their rates reduced; but when the buildings are well kept they can easily be filled, if present occupants are obstinate or poor, and landlords are inclined to think well of their own in this line. All sorts of property generally will obey the general tendency, and yield to the demand for lower rents, and the percentage will vary according to the distance from the ferries. In the more favorable business centres the reduction will probably not be greater than 10 per cent. on store property, and 15 per cent. on house rents. But away from the neighborhood of the ferries, toward the north side and out in the direction of East New-York, there may possibly be a decline of even 20 per cent. In the lowest class of tenements there are great numbers of tenants from whom owners and agents complain that they have been unable to collect rents regularly for months. Lack of employment has made it impossible for them to keep up their payments, and many landlords have been content with accepting all they could get whenever they could get anything. To say what reductions will take place in such rents would signify little. It will be considered a sign of improvement when even the lowest rents can be obtained for cheap tenements with regularity.

THE AMERICAN TEMPERANCE UNION

The American Temperance Union held their regular weekly meeting at the Cooper Union yesterday afternoon. The President of the Union, J. B. Gibbs, occupied the chair. Rev. Dr. Corey, of Brooklyn, read a passage from the Scriptures—fourteenth chapter of St. Paul's Epistle to the Romans, and a part of the twenty-eighth chapter of Isaiah, beginning at the twenty-first verse—after which Rev. Dr. Olmstead offered prayer. The President read a communication signed "Temperance," taking the advocates of total abstinence to task for condemning the moderate use of spirituous liquors, as the Bible approves of the use of stimulants. The President opposed such an interpretation of the Scriptures. He would not deny that wine was allowed under certain restrictions; but that was only one side of the argument, as the Bible, from Genesis to Revelation, condemned the wine-bibber and the glutton.

Hon. John Moffatt, of Tennessee, was then introduced. He said that he felt very much obliged to "Temperance" for sending such a communication. It gave evidence of the fact that there is need for the discussion of the subject announced. He referred to the twenty-eighth chapter of Isaiah, which painted the evils that existed in Israel from indulgence in the wine cup, and then drew a picture of the scourge which fell on the chosen children of the Lord from being addicted to this degrading habit, which, he declared, had affected not alone the common people, but the priests and prophets, as well. The prophetic description of Israel of that day would apply to the present state of society. It was no figure of speech to say that the land is filled with blood; there is a crimson glare all around. The lecturer denounced the State laws which legalized the sale of intoxicating liquors. It was a traffic which only led to moral ruin and political degradation; and when the State licensed such a scourge, the moral sentiment of the community was paralyzed. Christians, he said, should exercise the same common sense and discretion in doing the Lord's work as they would in doing their own, and Christian people should be active in destroying a practice fraught with so much danger to the social, physical, moral, and political life. The word of God could not countenance a violation of the laws of nature. If wine was spoken of in the Scriptures as an emblem of God's mercy, so was it designated as an emblem of God's wrath. This was only a seeming contradiction, which a little reflection would harmonize. The Bible is a practical book which aims at supplying and providing for the wants and imperfections of human nature. God has written his disapprobation or all that can intoxicate in letters of living light. The total abstinence ultimatum is, "taste not, touch not, handle not;" but the Scriptures go further and declare that we must not look upon wine when it is red. God proclaims against intemperance in the book of nature, as written in the physical laws. God does not commend in His revelations what he condemns in His nature. The speaker drew a vivid picture of the effects that intoxicating beverages had on the human system, and asked, Is this human wreck obeying the behests of God when he sinks to the level of a drunkard? In the incipient longing for stimulants was found the strongest argument that it is opposed to the laws of human nature. At the conclusion of Mr. Moffatt's address it was announced that the meeting next Sunday would be held at Science Hall.

THE LEON ASSAULT CASE.

Friends of Antonio Leon, who feloniously assaulted his daughter, Rose Massimino, in Brooklyn, have informed Capt. Leavey, of the Third Precinct there, that they believe Massimino, the husband of Rose, extorted a statement from his wife of an act that her father was never guilty of, she making the accusation in order to save her life, which had been threatened by her husband. Capt. Leavey ascertained that Leon bore an excellent reputation in the neighborhood in which he lived, and that after he heard of his daughter's charge he shed tears, appeared almost crazy with grief, and said he could never bear the awful disgrace of such horrible imputation. The pistol which he fired at his daughter is at the Third Precinct Station-house. It is stained with blood, three of the barrels are discharged, and the stock is broken. His overcoat, stained with spots of blood, and with some of the hair of his daughter clinging to it, is also at the station-house. The daughter, who is lying at the Long Island College Hospital, was in a favorable condition last evening, the physicians reporting that unless inflammation set in, of which there was no present indication, she would soon be in a fair way to recovery.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

A meeting of the Board of Education will be held at the hall, corner of Grand and Elm streets, next Wednesday at 4 P. M.

The Veterans of the War of 1812, Gen. Henry Raymond commanding, will hold their annual dinner at the Sturtevant House next Thursday at 1 P. M.

Frederick Luhrs, aged 5 years, died yesterday at his parents' residence, No. 102 Broome street, from scalds received on Saturday by falling into a wash-boiler filled with hot water.

A concert will be given at the Germania Assembly Rooms, No. 291 Bowery, on Sunday, March 4, at 8 P. M., for the benefit of a fund for the support of the Soldiers' Home of this State.

Elizabeth Hays, aged 42, of No. 86 Charlton street, while intoxicated yesterday, was seriously burned on the body by her clothing taking fire from the stove in her apartments. She was attended at the Chambers Street Hospital.

BROOKLYN.

In a recent issue the name of Mr. Samuel Snee was printed among the names of the gentlemen who had been admitted to the Bar at the General Term in Brooklyn. The name should have been Samuel Slee.

This evening the fourth Sunday-school Convocation of the season will be held in the Chapel of St. Peter's P. E. Church, on State street, to discuss the question of "Our Sunday-schools in their relations to the Missions and Charities of the Church."

The seventh anniversary of the Sheltering Arms Nursery, was held yesterday afternoon, at Christ's Church, Clinton and Harrison streets, Bishop Littlejohn presiding. Addresses were delivered by Rev. Drs. L. W. Bancroft, J. G. Bacchus, and others.

Cornelius Torpey, aged 19, of No. 21 President street, was arrested yesterday, and identified by Mr. John W. Engelke, of No. 143 Tenth street, as the person who recently assaulted him on Hamilton avenue, near President street, and robbed him of a gold watch and chain valued at $250.

LONG ISLAND.

The adjourned term of the Queens County Court of Oyer and Terminer, held specially for the trial of the two alleged murderers, Frank McConnachie and Dennis Ryer, will commence at the old Court-house, North Hempstead, this morning. Judge Pratt will preside, with County Judge Armstrong and Justices Baxter and Clapp. Ex-Judge Richard Busteed, assisted by Theodore J. Armstrong, will defend McConnachie by assignment of the court.

For the past week mounted policemen have been scouring Queens County in search of William Abernerthy, the man who caused the death of Fred. Hertfelder in Brooklyn, E. D., on Saturday night, the 12th inst. Abernerthy had a brother employed as a brakeman on the Southern Railroad, and was familiar with the stations on the route. The officers allege that they got on his track on Friday last at Rockaway, but failed to overtake him. Early yesterday morning a young man answering the description of Abernerthy was arrested at Foster's Meadow by Constable Felton, and taken to Jamaica, where he was locked up to await identification.

NEW-JERSEY.

The woods just north of Princeton were set on fire Saturday afternoon by a spark from a locomotive.

At the Central Market Relief Association, Newark, on Saturday 3,335 persons were supplied with food.

The sentence of James S. Blanchard, the convicted burglar, who was the principal witness against Ryan and Oschwald, the Newark murderers, has been deferred till Saturday next.

Ex-Justice of the Peace Thomas Nugent, of Newark, was sentenced to 18 months' imprisonment on Saturday by Judge Titsworth for having embezzled $6,000 from the Citizens' Loan Association, of which he was Treasurer.

The trial of Mrs. Hausen, the Philadelphia adventuress, which was to have been commenced in the Hudson County Sessions, before Judge Hoffman, to-day, has been postponed on account of the absence of Senator Winfield, Mrs. Hausen's counsel.

The proposed chemical analysis of the stomach of Thomas Ryan, the Newark murderer, has not yet been begun. It will cost between $300 and $500, and Justice Depue is to be consulted as to the propriety of expending that amount of money for the purpose.

THE BALL SEASON.

There are several prominent entertainments yet to be given, although the ball season is practically over for this Winter. The principal events are as follows:

The Martha Washington reception and garden party will take place at the Academy of Music and Nilson Hall next Thursday evening. This entertainment will be given under the auspices of St. John's Guild, for the benefit of the poor of the City.

A complimentary ball will be given in honor of ex-Chief George Mitchell, of the Caledonian Club, at Irving Hall, next Wednesday evening.

The second dramatic and social reception of the Fifth Universalist Society will take place at the Lexington Avenue Opera-house on Wednesday evening, Feb. 28.

Noah Porter, D. D., will deliver a lecture entitled "Miracles and Prophecies which Show the Bible Divine," at Association Hall, this evening, at 7:30 o'clock.

A lecture entitled "The Cuneiform Alphabet," was delivered under the auspices of the Maimonides Library Association, by Mr. Moritz Ellinger, at Teutonia Assembly Rooms, last evening.

Mr. A. P. Burbank will give a reading at an entertainment to be given for his benefit at Chickering Hall, with the assistance of Mr. Walter R. Johnson and Mrs. Gordon Steele, this evening.

A LOVE-SICK LAWYER.

Eli Hoch, who said he was a lawyer, was arraigned before Justice Flammer, at the Washington Place Police Court, yesterday, on a charge growing out of his affection for a young lady who did not encourage his wooing. The young lady lives on the west side with her parents, and is the daughter of a prosperous down-town merchant. Complaint was made on the sworn testimony of her brother, who lives in Brooklyn, that she has suffered in body and mind from the assiduous attentions of her would-be suitor, and that he has shadowed her movements since the 8th of March, 1876, dogging her footsteps whenever she went abroad, and writing letters avowing his affection for her. He has called at the residence of the young lady, rung the bell, and requested admission, but his reception would have dampened the ardor of a less persistent lover, the door being invariably slammed in his face. Justice Flammer questioned him at great length on his object in pursuing such an unmanly course in tormenting his attentions on a young lady and thereby making her life miserable. The court next proceeded to ascertain if he had received any encouragement. The prisoner maintained that he had, and gave his reasons for so believing with great emphasis. The lady had spoken to him once; she said, "How do you do?" one day in the street, and on another occasion she nodded to him from a Broadway stage. This was sufficient encouragement, in his opinion, to warrant him in arriving at the conclusion that he was an accepted suitor. Every Sunday he occupied a pew in the church where he had a full view of her countenance, which he studied with marked attention. Not content with these methods of demonstrating his attachment, he sent her his photograph, inclosed in an amatory epistle, requesting her pic

TILDEN MANIPULATING THE HOUSE.

SUCCESS OF HIS ATTORNEYS IN SECURING A RECESS WITHOUT ACTION ON THE ELECTORAL VOTES—THE PRETEXT FOR THE DELAY TO DECEIVE THE CONSISTENT DEMOCRATS WHO WISH TO KEEP FAITH—DEBATE IN THE SENATE ON THE QUESTION OF CONCURRING IN THE ACTION OF THE TRIBUNAL.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—Contrary to general expectation, but in accordance with what was noted last night as possible, the count of the Electoral votes was not resumed to-day by the joint convention. The action of the Democratic caucus on Saturday night in agreeing to proceed with the count without resorting to dilatory motions, and the assurances given by leading Democrats yesterday that the count would proceed to-day, unattended by any delays other than those created by the Electoral act, induced the general belief that, beyond pouring out vials of Democratic wrath and indignation for two hours, nothing would be interposed to hinder the progress of the count, and that, in the language of the caucus resolution, "it should proceed without dilatory opposition to the orderly execution of the act creating the Electoral Commission, whose decisions shall be received and acted upon in accordance with the provisions of said law." A few of the more sagacious observers, noting the fact that a large number of the Democratic members were not present at the caucus, and that those who advocated obstructive measures numbered nearly 50, placed no confidence in the professions of Saturday night, and expressed the conviction than an effort would be made to-day to set aside the action of the caucus.

The joint convention reassembled at 11 o'clock. Long before that hour the floor and galleries were crowded by anxious spectators, who occupied the time in discussing the probability of the Democrats keeping the faith expressed in the caucus. The decision of the Commission, awarding Louisiana to Hayes and Wheeler, having been read, all eyes were turned to David Dudley Field, expecting to see him rise when the presiding officer asked for objections to the decision. That eminent man sat grandly morose, with folded arms, and just as every one not acquainted with the Democratic programme was wondering if David Dudley had forgot his cunning or deserted his master, Representative Gibson, of Louisiana, arose and presented formal objections to the decision. Incorporated with the objections was a pamphlet brief of evidence which the Democratic counsel had prepared for presentation to the Commission in the Louisiana case, but which the Commission declined to receive. The reading of the objections consumed an hour and a quarter, and another half hour was consumed in giving the Democratic members an opportunity to append their signatures. A large number of Democrats who had not before had an opportunity of signing came forward and affixed their names to the document. Further objections were filed by Senator Wallace, and Representative Cochrane, of Pennsylvania. The Senate then, at 1 o'clock, withdrew.

As soon as the procession of retiring Senators had disappeared, Fernando Wood moved a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow. This was regarded as a dilatory movement. Great interest was manifested in the progress of the roll-call, which was demanded on the motion. As the call proceeded, it was difficult to predict what the result would be, and when the call was finished it was doubtful whether Wood's motion had received a majority. A large number of Democrats, mostly from the West and the South, failed to respond to their names on the call. These arose when the regular call was completed and recorded themselves for recess, thus carrying Wood's motion by 10 majority, the vote standing 140 to 130. Twenty-six Democrats voted against recess. Of these 26, only seven are from the South. John H. Bagley and Mr. Willis are the only two New-York Democrats who voted in the negative. Cutler, of New-Jersey, voted "nay," as did Hardenberg, from the same State, but the latter changed his vote before the result was announced. As soon as the recess was declared notice was given the Democratic members from the Clerk's desk to immediately assemble in caucus, which was, however, adjourned without action to 7:30 in the evening.

When the two houses separated the Senate returned to its own chamber, headed by the Sergeant at Arms and a number of special policemen. Mr. Ferry, the President of the Senate, came after the Sergeant at Arms, and beside him was an attendant who carried two mahogany boxes containing the returns. These Mr. Ferry keeps continually in sight, and it may be well that he does so, for some of the disappointed Democrats are desperate enough for any lawless or violent act which promises to aid their cause. When the Senate had reached its own chamber the galleries began to fill up rapidly, and in a few moments it was impossible to find standing room in them. After the Chair had stated the business before the Senate and the character of the objections which had been read in the House, Senator Sherman obtained the floor, and offered a resolution to the effect that notwithstanding these objections the decision of the Electoral Commission be sustained by the Senate. At this point Senator Davis said that he would like to have the objections read. This proposition gave rise to considerable debate, and finally Mr. Bogy insisted that the objections be repeated, and a great deal of valuable time was so wasted. Then Senator Kernan obtained the floor and moved as a substitute for Mr. Sherman's motion a resolution which provided that the decision of the tribunal be dissented from. Upon this question the debate commenced and continued for two hours, the time allowed under the Electoral bill. Each speaker was permitted by the law to occupy the floor for ten minutes. Mr. Maxey, of Texas, was the first to get a hearing. He read a carefully written address protesting against the action of the Commission and praying heaven to aid the defeated Democracy. Mr. Kernan, who next obtained the floor, was in very good voice, and delivered one of his old-time "Agricultural fair" speeches with an energy and dramatic ability which seemed to be highly appreciated by the galleries. Mr. Thurman, who, as a member of the Commission, should have kept silent, followed the Senator from New-York. He made an exceedingly inflammatory and injudicious speech, denounced the Louisiana Returning Board, and declared that the will of the people of the State had been overturned by a few unscrupulous men. Mr. Sherman followed in a very forcible address, in which he referred particularly to the charges of fraud which had been brought against the Republicans of Louisiana, and declared that, even if these charges were true, they were offset, counterbalanced, and hidden out of sight by the terrible crimes of outrage, intimidation, violence, and murder which had been proved against the White League Democracy of the South. Mr. Sherman also mentioned the fact that the bill creating the tribunal had been passed by Democratic votes, and he claimed that now the members of the party named were bound in honor to sustain the decision of the tribunal which had been called into existence by their influence. Senator Morton, who had not intended to speak upon the action of the tribunal, was forced to take the floor to answer the address of his fellow Commissioner, Mr. Thurman. He made a quiet and dignified judicial argument, showing that the constitution of the Returning Board was perfectly legal, and that the decision of the Commission was strictly in accordance with both the letter and the spirit of the Constitution and the law. Mr. Bayard, also a member of the Commission, after an earnest consultation with his friend Watterson, of Kentucky, next spoke. He made a short, and, much to the surprise of those who know him best and have admired him for his usual independence and fairness, a most violent and indecently partisan address, bitterly denouncing the action of the Commission. Senator Logan followed in a short speech, and then Mr. Sargent, in his quick, nervous way made a number of good points in favor of sustaining the action of the Commission. He was particularly happy in his reference to the seven Democrats who sat upon the tribunal, and who, with a partisanship and want of patriotism which no fair-minded citizen could understand or excuse, voted obstinately with their party and refused to join the ranks of those who considered the Presidential contest upon its merits and in a strictly judicial spirit. In finishing his address Mr. Sargent made a passing allusion to the attempted assassination of Gov. Packard in New-Orleans. At this, Senator Withers, with great rudeness and lack of dignity, laughed outright. Mr. Sargent turned upon him quickly and asked, "Does the gentleman laugh at my allusion to the attempted assassination of Gov. Packard?" "Yes," said Withers, "that was what I was laughing at." "Well, then," continued Mr. Sargent, "perhaps you will also laugh at the article which yesterday appeared in a Democratic paper of this city, and which advised the Democratic White League to kill President Hayes on his way to the Capitol! Perhaps you also laugh at the murder of the Republican President Lincoln, assassinated by one of your Democrats! or at the bloody civil war which was brought on by your party?" To these pointed remarks Mr. Withers attempted to reply, but did not succeed. After further speeches on both sides, the question was put on Mr. Kernan's substitute, and it was lost by a vote of 28 to 41. Then the question recurred upon the original resolution of Senator Sherman sustaining the action of the Commission, and it was adopted by a vote of 41 to 28. It was noticed that Senator Conkling was not in the chamber during the day, and, of course, he did not vote on the resolution.

The action of the House to-day in declining to continue the count till to-morrow has produced a feeling of uncertainty as to the good faith of the caucus action of Saturday night. Half of the number of those who voted in caucus against the proposition to defeat the counting of the Electoral vote by dilatory motions voted to take a recess till to-morrow. It is particularly noticeable that the Southern men who were so strongly against delay in the caucus, almost to a man, voted for the recess. The proceeding needs explanation, and the Democratic account of it is to the effect that Mr. Hurd, of Ohio, who had been selected to act as manager of the Oregon case before the Commission had become sick and unable to go on with it; that Mr. Jenks, of Pennsylvania, would have to take Hurd's place, and he needed till to-morrow for preparation. They say the Oregon case cannot take more than two days, and South Carolina will be only referred to the Commission as a matter of form, and that the entire count will be concluded this week. This is a plausible reason for the action, which, however, has a deeper meaning. The recess is a part of an insidious and shrewdly devised system of delay which has been so quietly operated as to deceive many Democrats. The revolutionary Democrats are great blusterers, but they are under the leadership of two or three consummate plotters. Field, Fernando Wood, and Thompson, being defeated in caucus, have, without appearing themselves, fixed up pretenses of delay, like that above noted, so plausible, and presented with such a semblance of candor and honesty as to win the votes of those who have determined not to support the policy of filibustering, but who do not feel like breaking away from their party when they are asked only to vote for time for preparation. In this manner the filibustering party succeeded to-day. They will be ready with some excuse for another recess on the first occasion. There was this time the particular motive for a recess in the call for another caucus, which is held at the Capitol to-night. The revolutionists have put forth every possible effort to secure a reversal of the action of Saturday night, and the secret motive of postponing the count till to-morrow was in the hope that to-night's caucus would change the party position.

Considering all that has been done in the last three days, it looks as though David Dudley Field, Fernando Wood, and a few of their fellows were trying to outwit the whole Democratic Party and cheat them into doing that which they voted not to do. The sickness of Hurd, if real, was no valid excuse for delay; for in any event Jenks would have 24 for preparation, which ought to be sufficient. It was said of Hurd by some Democrats that he had withdrawn from defending the Oregon fraud; but the story of his being sick is more probable, for the privilege of making an argument before the Commission would compensate him for suppressing any scruples he might have.

THE DEMOCRATS IN CAUCUS.

A SNUB TO THE EXTREMISTS—INDISPOSITION OF THE MAIN PORTION OF THE MEMBERS TO AID THE PLOTTERS — FERNANDO WOOD'S FARCE ENDS IN DESPONDENCY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—Upon the reassembling of the caucus at 7:30 this evening, the extremists were discouraged by the large number of members absent. The adjournment had been carried in the afternoon because of the small attendance, and the indifference conspicuously manifested by so many in staying away, convinced those who honed to reconsider the action of Saturday night that they were not to have sufficient support to carry out their purposes. Vance, of Ohio, was the first to take the floor. He presented substantially the same resolution which Cochrane, of Pennsylvania offered on Saturday. This was discussed briefly, but no effort was made to obtain a vote upon it Mills, of Texas, succeeded in distinguishing himself by presenting a resolution declaring that as neither Presidential candidate had obtained a majority of the Electoral votes the House at 1 o'clock to-morrow proceed to elect a President for the term commencing March 4. No notice was taken of this resolution, which, considering the fact that Springer was present, may be regarded as somewhat remarkable. The sequel shows, however, that Springer was simply reserving himself for a proposition of as much originality as that made by Mills. Springer desired to save something from the general wreck, and with that view proposed that to each of the regular appropriation bills yet to be acted upon by the House, a clause should be appended requiring the President to recognize Nichols as Governor of Louisiana, an Wade Hampton as Governor of South Carolina. He proposed to make this more binding on the Army Appropriation bill by withholding it to the last, and, should recognition of Nicholls and Hampton not be forced prior to that bill being reached, then the Army Appropriation bill should provide only for the maintenance of forts and other military works, and it should be made unlawful to employ Federal troops anywhere but upon the frontier. Messrs. Hunton, Harris, of Virginia; Buckner, and Durham spoke against Springer's folly, while Messrs. Hooker, Knott, and Mills spoke mildly in favor of something of the kind being done. Those who desired to carry out in good faith the action of Saturday night finally became tired of this nonsense, and John Young Brown cut them off by offering the same resolution that was passed at the last meeting, and under which the count should have proceeded to-day. Some discussion ensued upon this, the general sentiment being that a reaffirmation of Saturday's action was unnecessary. McMahon, of Ohio, moved that the caucus adjourn until the State of Oregon shall be called in joint convention, which was adopted.

Thus ended the farce rung on to-day by Stage Manager Wood. It is known that the recess could not have been carried to-day had it not been for the efforts of Springer, Sayler, and a few others, who went about during the roll-call importuning their colleagues to grant the recess as being necessary to prepare the Oregon case, and declaring they only wished for this one day.

INDIGNATION AMONG DEMOCRATS.

THE COURSE OF PETTIFOGGING CONGRESSMEN SEVERELY DENOUNCED—THE HAND OF TILDEN RECOGNIZED IN THE DELAY—THE OPINION OF AN EMINENT OHIO LAWYER.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

COLUMBUS, Feb. 19.—The Democrats of the General Assembly, in joint caucus to-night, adopted a resolution favring a filibustering policy to prevent the consummation of the Electoral count at Washington. This action is supposed to have been inspired from Gramercy Park, New-York, and is known to be in direct antagonism to the views of many prominent Democrats, and, indeed, of nearly all except the place-hunting crowd. One leading Democrat lately expressed a very prevalent feeling of his party in saying that if a new election should be forced, there would be a lively time before Tilden should again be chosen as the leader of his party. Another remarked that he had much rather that Hayes had been nominated by the Democrats than Tilden, and intimated that nothing but the chagrin of being beaten prevented ready acknowledgment of Tilden's defeat. The popular feeling in favor of a prompt settlement of the Presidential controversy is growing stronger every hour in Ohio, and is not limited by party lines. Deep indignation is expressed at the factious course of the House of Representatives in its needless waste of time in prosecuting the count, and a storm of popular execration is evidently gathering for the pettifoggers at Washington, who attempt to prolong the public agitation and anxiety. One of the most eminent lawyers in Ohio, while in this city to-day, remarked that in case the House of Representatives shall persist in a filibustering policy it was the plain duty of the Senate to proceed as best it could and count the vote, and declare the result. He thought both public opinion and the law would justify this course.

SYNOPSIS AND INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20—1 A. M.—The area of lowest temperature has moved north-eastward to the North Carolina coast, and the barometer has very generally risen west of the Alleghanies. Cold northerly winds prevail, with clear weather, over the lake region, Ohio Valley, the North-west, and South-west, but have backed to warmer south-east in Dakota and Manitoba. South-west winds continue on the immediate Gulf coast and in the South Atlantic States, with occasional light rain. Clear weather prevails in the Middle and Eastern States but on the North Carolina coast cloud and rain, and in Nova Scotia snow continues.

INDICATIONS.

For Tuesday in the South Atlantic and Gulf States, rising barometer, colder north-east to north-west winds and clear, or clearing weather.

For Tennessee and the Ohio Valley and the lower lakes, north to west winds, rising barometer, and cooler, clear, or partly cloudy weather.

For the upper lakes and North-west, cooler northerly, shifting to warmer southerly winds, rising followed by falling barometer, and generally clear weather.

For the Middle and Eastern States, rising barometer, cooler north and west winds, increasing to brisk or high for a short time, and clear or partly cloudy weather.

Cautionary signals continue on the Texas and South Carolina coasts.

The rivers will continue to fall slowly.

THE WORK IN THE LEGISLATURE.

EVENING SESSIONS LAST NIGHT—THE PROPOSED CONSTITUTIONAL AMENDMENTS TO CONSOLIDATE NEW-YORK COURTS—POWER OF INSURANCE COMPANIES TO REINSURE THEIR RISKS—CONDITION OF STATE INSURANCE COMPANIES—THE SUPERINTENDENT—TRADING IN OFFICES—AN IMPORTANT CITY BILL.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Feb. 19.—Senator Gerard's resolution for an amendment to the Constitution consolidating the Superior and Common Pleas Courts of the City of New-York with the Supreme Court, was ordered to a third reading, with an amendment giving to the Legislature power to equalize the salaries of all the Supreme Court Judges in the City of New-York during their present terms of office.

The bill reported by the Senate Insurance Committee, authorizing insurance companies to reinsure their risks, was ordered to a third reading after striking out the third section. As it now stands, individual risks can be reinsured by consent of the policy-holder, but the entire risks of a company can only be reinsured after the company has gone into the hands of a Receiver, and then only by the written consent of the Superintendent of Insurance, the Attorney General, and the Judge appointing the Receiver.

The House debated over three hours on Mr. Purdy's resolutions for the appointment of a special committee to inquire into the condition of the State insurance companies. The chief and only point of dispute was whether the inquiry should be conducted by the Standing Committee on Insurance or by a special committee, and in the end Mr. Gilbert offered, and the House adopted, by a vote of 60 to 43 a substitute to referring the subject to the standing Committee on Insurance, with power to send for persons and papers, the committee to employ counsel and experts and to report in 30 days.

There is very little prospect of a reconsideration, at the executive session of the Senate on Wednesday, of the vote confirming John F. Smythe for Superintendent of Insurance. It is said that only three Democratic Senators can be relied on to vote for reconsideration, while eight or more Republican Senators will vote against it. Much curiosity is expressed to know whether the "bargain" between the Conkling Republicans and the Democrats for a division of offices is to extend to all the Republican officials now holding over. It is rumored that the next man on the list is Dr. Jones, a Homeopathic physician of Albany, who is to supersede Dr. Vanderpoel as Health Officer. Albany physicians claim a prescriptive right to this office, having held it most of the time for the last 20 years. Senator Harris is said to take the place of leading negotiator on the Republican side in trading offices.

Mr. Husted introduced a most important bill this evening, just as the House was on the point of adjourning. It is similar in nearly all its provisions with the famous "Miller-Husted" bill, which made such a flutter in the Democratic House of 1875, when it was introduced. The bill as it now stands legislates out of office every head of a department in the New-York City Government, except the President of the Fire Department and the Commissioner of Public Works. It makes all commissions single-headed, except the Police, which commission is to have two members. It reduces the Mayor's salary from $12,000 to $10,000; the Controller's to $8,000; the Commissioner of Public Works to $10,000; and makes the salary of all other Commissioners $5,000. The bill also consolidates the Dock Department with the Department of Public Works, and the Department of Buildings with that of the Fire Department. This radical and thorough-going measure was sent to the Committee on Cities, and will be one of the bills considered at the joint meeting on New-York affairs to-morrow.

In the House Mr. Cozans, from the minority of the Committee on Privileges and Elections, presented a report giving the seat for the Fourth Albany District to Mr. Curran, [Democrat,] the sitting member, which was laid on the table with the majority report in favor of Mr. Brannan, the contestant.

The Auditor of the Canal Department, in answer to a resolution of the House calling for information as to the employment of laborers on the canals during the months of October and November last, just before the election, submitted a statement of the expenditures on the canals during the entire season. This statement shows that during the months of August and September the expenditures amounted to $100,538 69. During the months of October and November they were $139,314 77. The day labor charged was as follows: August, $11,876; September, $10,854; October, $18,931; November, $24,085. The check rolls for the various sections of the canals show the expenditures in the months of October and November as compared with those for the months of August and September, and were as follows: On section one, about double; on section two, about treble; on section three, more than double; on section four, five times as great; on section six, a decrease of one-third, while the expenditures on the remainder of the sections were about the same. The communication was laid on the table and ordered to be printed.

The Governor sent in a communication from the Governor of Michigan asking the co-operation of the State in behalf of a light-house on Stannard Island, Lake Superior. The communication was referred to the Committee on Federal Relations.

By Mr. Prince—To authorize the appointment of policemen for district telegraph companies in the State.

By Mr. Carpenter—Amending the charter of the city of Poughkeepsie. Also to authorize the construction of an armory in the city of Poughkeepsie.

Mr. Mr. Bradley—To amend the act relative to the Code of Procedure.

By Mr. Morrissey—In relation to the estimates and apportionment of the Board of Education in the City of New-York, which authorizes the Board of Estimates and Apportionment, on the application of the Board of Education, to transfer any sum appropriated for any district purpose from one or said purpose into another.

By Mr. Robertson—Legalising the proceedings of the annual town meeting of the town of Westchester in relation to the purchase of fire apparatus.

By Mr. Bradley—Amending the act relating to crimes and their punishment, which provides that a reasonable sum shall be paid to the Treasurer of the county where conviction was had for the expense of making a copy of the statement of the conviction and sentence to be transmitted to the Governor.

Mr. Prince's bill relating to policemen for district telegraph companies provides that the Board of Police in any city may appoint, in addition to the regular force, special patrolmen, not exceeding 200 in numoer, to be designated by the district telegraph company. The patrolmen shall wear the same uniform as the regular Police force, and be under general control of the Board of Police, but be paid by the telegraph company.

The Senate in Committee of the Whole, considered the following bills:

To facilitate the dissolution of manufacturing corporations in the County of Herkimer. Ordered to a third reading.

Amending the act establishing the compensation of County Judges and Surrogates. Progressed.

Authorizing the New-York Society for the Relief of the Ruptured and Crippled to hold real and personal estate. Third reading.

Providing for the payment of bonds issued by municipal corporations. Progressed.

Amending the act to revise the charter of Oswego. Third reading.

Amending the act for the benefit of married women insuring the lives of their husbands. Third reading.

Removing business disabilities from married women. Progressed.

The act increasing the powers and duties of the Police Commissioners of the City of Troy. Third reading.

STATE PRISON REFORM.

ALBANY, Feb. 19.—Louis D. Pillsbury, the new Superintendent of State Prisons, left for Sing Sing Prison to-day to commence the work of reformation in that institution at once. A new Warden will probably be appointed in place of the present incumbent in a few days. Such other changes as may be necessary to a thorough reconstruction of management of the institution will also be made.

THE MERCHANTS' BANK OF CANADA.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

MONTREAL, Feb. 19.—An informal meeting of several of the leading shareholders of the Merchants' Bank of Canada was held to-day at the bank, at the request of the Directors, for the purpose of discussing the reports circulated respecting the bank, and the efforts made to depreciate its stock. Some of the shareholders were invited by the board, and others voluntarily attended. Statements respecting the position of the bank generally, and showing the special points inquired into, were laid before the meeting, and inquiries were made of the President and General Manager upon numerous points interesting to shareholders. After a full discussion Mr. W. Darling moved a resolution expressing satisfaction with the result of the statement, and recommending that the shareholders do not permit temporary depreciation of the stock to lead them to sacrifice interest in the bank. A statement of figures submitted showed that there would be a probable loss of $400,000 since the last annual meeting. To this sum was added $100,000 to meet all contingencies. In addition to these sums, it was resolved to wipe out Milwaukee Railway bonds amounting to $210,000, thus making a total loss of $710,000. The rest and contingent fund to credit at the last annual meeting was $1,108,000. After deducting $710,000, this would leave nearly $400,000 to the good over and above the capital of the bank. It is thought that the resignation of Jackson Rae, the General Manager, will not be accepted. Strong efforts are being made to strengthen the Grand Trunk and Great Western Railways at Canada by means of coalition of English shareholders.

LAW-MAKERS OF NEW-JERSEY.

THEY REASSEMBLED LAST EVENING AT THE STATE CAPITOL—SIXTEEN BILLS ARE INTRODUCED — THE PAY OF COUNTY CLERKS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

TRENTON, Feb. 19.—Both houses reassembled this evening in the lower house. Sixteen bills were introduced. The most important one was one introduced by Mr. Harris reducing the ferriage for passengers on all the ferries between New-Jersey and New-York City to two cents per capita. Mr. Egan introduced a general Horse Railroad bill empowering the companies to charge four cents for the first two miles and one cent for each additional mile, children to be provided with seats for half-fare. The general Local Option bill was called up on its second reading. Several amendments were proposed by Mr. Nichols, but the House refused to agree to them. Mr. Egan finally moved that the further consideration of the bill be indefinitely postponed, which is an easy way of killing it. The motion was agreed to by a vote of 39 to 15.

Senator Abbett's City bill was not reached in the Speaker's calendar, Mr. Brigham moving an adjournment to allow the committee to hear arguments. The bill authorizing the Jersey City Board of Education to pay the teachers for the half month of service which they rendered gratuitously after the appropriation had been exhausted, was passed, and goes to the Senate for concurrence. In the Senate, Mr. Hill introduced a concurrent resolution declaring it to be inexpedient to impose a one and a half mill State tax, and declaring it to be the sense of the House that the State expenditures should be confined to the revenues of the State. He followed it in a long speech, in which he showed that a reduction in all the departments was practicable. The resolution was referred to the Committee on Finance. Mr. Pidcock introduced a bill requiring County Clerks to pay their fees into the County Treasury, and allowing them in the largest counties $4,000 per year, and in others $3,000 to $2,000, according to the size of the county.

It is pretty generally believed here to-night that Krueger, the disaffected Democrat, will vote for no one else than Morrow in joint meeting for Controller. The Democrats will caucus in the morning to agree on some plan of action. The joint meeting will be held at noon to-morrow.

DEATH OF A NONOGENARIAN.

DEATH OF REV. FATHER KEENAN, OF LANCASTER, PENN.—HE WAS SAID TO BE THE OLDEST PRIEST IN THIS COUNTRY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

LANCASTER, Feb. 19.—Rev. Father Bernard Keenan, V. G., said to be the oldest Catholic priest in the United States, died in this city, about 2 o'clock this morning, at the advanced age of 98 years. Father Keenan was born in the County Tyrone, Ireland, in the year 1779. He was educated for the clerical profession by entering the seminaries of his native county, and afterward at the Protestant College of Dungannon. After studying in that institution for four years he was employed as a teacher, and was the first Catholic that was employed in that capacity in Dungannon College. In company with Right Rev. Bishop Conwell (who was at that time consecrated Bishop of Philadelphia) he came to the United States, landing at Baltimore Nov. 21, 1820. They proceeded to Philadelphia, and at that place he was ordained a priest, the first priest ever ordained in the Philadelphia Conference. After he was ordained he proceeded to Mount St. Mary's College, near Emmettsburg, Md., and continued there until the death of Rev. J. J. Holland, of St. Mary's Church, Lancaster, and came to this city in the Fall of 1823, and has been in this position to the present time. Before he came to this city his physicians told him he was in the last stages of consumption, pronouncing the left lobe of his lungs as entirely gone with that disease. The old stone church still stands where he commenced his labors. It was erected in 1762, 115 years ago, but in front of it he had erected one of the finest churches in the State. He was master of Hebrew, Greek, Latin, and French. His death was only from extreme old age. His funeral will take place on Thursday morning, at 10 o'clock, at St. Mary's Church, this city.

SUNDRY CIVIL APPROPRIATIONS.

THE TOTAL AMOUNT ABOUT $14,000,000—THE BILL READY TO BE REPORTED IN THE HOUSE.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 19.—The House Committee on Appropriations to-day completed the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill, and authorized their Chairman to report it to the House at the earliest opportunity. Its principal items are the following: For expenses of United States courts, including Marshals, attorneys, witnesses, &c., $2,500,000; for support of homes for disabled volunteer soldiers, $880,000; for the Signal Service, $300,000; for the Coast Survey about, $400,000; for surveys of northern and north-western lakes and the Mississippi River, $100,000; for the maintenance of lights on the Mississippi, Missouri, and Ohio Rivers, and such buoys as may be necessary, $125,000; for surveying public lands and private land claims, $50,000; for the repair and preservation of the public buildings throughout the country, $100,000; for the purchase of additional land for the Boston Post Office and Sub-Treasury, $181,554; for the erection of pier headlights on the northern and north-western lakes, $10,000; for establishing day beacons on the coasts of Maine, New-Hampshire, and Massachusetts, $10,000; for the establishment of light-houses as follows: Cormorant, R. I., $5,000; Mussel Bed Shoal, R. I., $5,000; Egg Island, N. J., $5,000; Absecom, N. J., $5,000; Grasse Point, near Chicago, Ill., $5,000; Tybee Island, Ga., $3,000; Cape Canaveral, Fla., $4,000, and Cape Saint Blas, Fla., $3,000. For payment of claims of Southern mail contractors for services rendered before the war, $360,000. For the Hayden explorations west of the 100th meridian, $50,000. For the Wheeler explorations west of the 100th meridian, $20,000. For the Powell explorations west of the 100th meridian, $20,000, and for continuing work on public buildings, as follows: At Chicago and St. Louis, $400,000 each; at Philadelphia and Cincinnati, $325,000 each; Hartford, Conn., $50,000; Fall River, Mass., Grand Rapids, Mich., and Evansville, Ind., $20,000 each; Trenton, N. J., $14,000; Nashville, Tenn., $13,000; Raleigh, N. C., $5,300; Parkersburg, West Va., $5,000; Port Huron, Mich., $10,000; Atlanta, Ga., $15,000, and San Francisco, Cal., $70,000. The total of the bill is about $14,000,000.

THE VANDERBILT WILL.

A REPORT THAT IT IS TO BE CONTESTED BY CORNELIUS J. VANDERBILT—COUNSEL SAID TO HAVE BEEN EMPLOYED FOR THE PURPOSE—THE WILL TO BE PRODUCED IN COURT ON TUESDAY, THE 27TH.

Soon after the death of Commodore Vanderbilt, and the reading and publication of his will, numerous rumors were circulated to the effect that dissatisfaction existed in the family in consequence of the disposition which he had seen fit to make of his property, and it was very positively announced in certain quarters that this dissatisfaction would find expression in the Surrogate's Court at the time the will came up for probate. At the time these reports were circulated inquiry was made about them, but nothing more definite could be learned than that there was a disposition to resist its provisions. Since that time, however, the rumors to the same effect have been repeated, and within a day or two have become common report at one of the leading hotels. It is said that Cornelius J. Vanderbilt, the brother of William H. Vanderbilt, upon the advice of an intimate friend and companion, a man named Terry, who lives in Toledo, but spends much of his time in this City, has employed counsel and has taken steps to legally oppose the settlement of the Vanderbilt property as directed by the will. A number of reasons are given for the proceeding, but the principal one appears to be that Cornelius J. Vanderbilt is a debtor to a considerable amount to Mr. Ferry, and sees in the possibility of a new settlement the prospect of an easy composition of his difficulties. Whether this is actually true or not could not yesterday, in the absence from the City of some of the principal persons concerned, be ascertained. Mr. C. J. Vanderbilt, of a restless disposition, seldom long in one place, has not been at home for several days, and it is reported that in a conversation three days ago in Washington with his brother he did not allude to the subject, and his silence has been construed by that part of the family which is content with the Commodore's bestowal of his riches, into submission. Persons who assume to speak with authority say that, notwithstanding this apparent acquiescence, the dissatisfied brother has continued his preparations, and that on Tuesday next, when the case is called in the Surrogate's Court, Cornelius J. Vanderbilt and his counsel will be there to demand that a more equitable distribution of the Vanderbilt estate among the children shall be ordered. That the application to have the will set aside is not altogether an unlikely proceeding has been inferred from extreme anxiety of Mr. William H. Vanderbilt to be apprised at the earliest possible moment of the appearance of any contestants in the Surrogate's Court, although he has assured inquirers that he is not aware that any proceedings have been taken. The dissatisfaction is said not to be confined exclusively to Mr. C. J. Vanderbilt, but a be shared by a number of the family. Surrogate Calvin yesterday said that while he had received no notice of the intention of any parties to contest the will of Commodore Vanderbilt, the rumors had reached his ear that a contest would be made. No application of attorneys in the matter had been as yet filed.

LOSSES BY FIRE.

The losses by the fire at Sag Harbor, Long Island, on Sunday morning, as far as ascertained up to yesterday afternoon, are as follows: M. H. Gregory, $3,000; S. S. Crowell, $1,000; B. F. Hunting, $30,000; J. Fordam, $2,000; Nickerson & Val, $1,500; H. & S. French, $40,000; W. & G. H. Cooper, $3,000; C. S. Stillwell, $1,100; Nassau House, $10,000; G. B. Brown, $3,000; Mrs. Kelly, $1,200; Mrs. Graham, $1,500; Peter Hughes, $300; N. Matthews, $1,500; Frank Corcoran, $1,000; S. E. Rogers, $4,500; Jed Conklin, $900; Conkling, machinist, $1,100; J. Decastro, $3,000; and a number of smaller losses, making an aggregate of over $150,000.

At 2 o'clock yesterday morning a fire was discovered in J. H. Klausing's grocery store, corner of Fifth street and Park avenue, Hoboken, N. J., and before it could be extinguished the entire contents of the store were destroyed. The circumstances surrounding the fire were so suspicious that the Chief Engineer of the Fire Department ordered Klausing's arrest on a charge of arson. He subsequently had an examination before the Recorder, and was discharged for want of proof. The store was burned last Summer under similar circumstances. The loss amounts to $1,000, on which there is an insurance of $1,500.

A fire at Cedar Grove, East Providence, on Saturday night destroyed a building owned by Levi S. Winchester, and occupied by the Post Office, meat market of Monroe Brothers, and as a residence of Thomas Monroe. The loss is $6,000; insured for $2,000 in the City Office of Providence and $2,500 in the Hartford Office of Hartford.

The Presbyterian church on West Third street, Jamestown, N. Y., built in 1835, was burned at midnight Sunday night. The flames were first seen in the steeple. The loss is $10,000; insured in the Lycoming Company for $2,000, and in the Ætna Company for $3,000. There was also an insurance of $2,000 on the organ in the Ætna Company.

The store of Loomis Bros., and the Hillyer Hotel, in Granby, Conn., were destroyed by fire early on Sunday morning. The fire started in the Masonic Lodge-room in the third floor of the Loomis building. The loss of Loomis Bros. will reach $10,000; insured in local companies. The loss on the hotel will reach $45,000; no insurance.

The Manila Paper Mill at North Providence, R. I., was destroyed by fire Sunday. The loss is from $15,000 to $20,000; insured in Boston companies. The property was in the hands of Joseph F. Dean, the Boston Trustee, but was owned by George Campbell, of Norlolk, Mass.

LAWLESSNESS IN MISSOURI.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 19.—Col. Frederick Meyer, who was shot by young Dryder yesterday at Warrenton, was brought home this morning, and his condition is such that visitors are not allowed to see him. The ball is not extracted yet. It entered the mouth a little to the right of the centre, and is supposed to be lodged against the vertebræ. The wound is quite serious and may result fatally. The cause of the shooting is not yet explained. One account says Dryder insulted Meyer on the street, which led to an altercation, while another story says Meyer provoked the quarrel. Dryder was attorney for parties whose stills were seized. He was arrested by the Sheriff and gave bonds.

FOUR MEN ARRESTED FOR MURDER.

NASHVILLE, Feb. 19.—Four persons named Holt were arrested here to-day, by United States Marshal Wheat, on the strength of dispatches received from Chattanooga and Atlanta, charging them with having participated in the murder of Lieut. McIntyre, in Northern Georgia, while the latter was in command of a force of revenue officials engaged in breaking up illicit distilleries recently.

A NEW RAILROAD IN TEXAS.

GALVESTON, Feb. 19.—The Galveston, Harrisburg and San Antonio Railroad is now completed, and the first train left Galveston for San Antonio to-day with an excursion party, including the Governor and other State officials. The completion of this road opens up a large portion of the finest territory in Western Texas, which has heretofore been without railroad communication.

ATTEMPTED SUICIDE OF A FIREMAN.

BOSTON, Feb. 19.—Phineas D. Allen, foreman of Hook and Ladder Company No. 4, of Boston Highlands, in an attempt to commit suicide to-day blew off the lower portion of his face with a shotgun.

DEATH FROM HYDROPHOBIA.

PROVIDENCE, Feb. 19.—Thomas Lockwood, of Burrillville, R. I., died at the State Alms-house on Saturday last of hydrophobia. He was bitten in the thumb by his dog about five weeks ago.

CHARGED WITH FORGERY.

BOSTON, Feb. 19.—A detective to-day arrested William E. Morrison, who is wanted in Troy, N. Y., for a $500 forgery, committed several months since.

WASHINGTON,

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

SENATE.

The Senate resumed its session at 10 o'clock A. M., with but few Senators present. In reply to a question of Mr. Withers, of Virginia, the President pro tem. said: "The House will be ready to receive the Senate for the purpose of resuming the count of the Electoral vote at 11 o'clock."

Mr. WITHERS inquired if it would be in order to move a further recess until that hour.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. replied that it would not. The Senate having already taken a recess from Saturday until this morning, could not take a second one until another question was raised in the joint meeting. At 10:56 A. M. the President pro tem. announced that the Senate would now repair to the House of Representatives, and the Senate, headed by its officers, left the chamber.

Upon returning at 12:55 P. M., the PRESIDENT pro tem. announced that the Senate having met the House of Representatives for the purpose of receiving the decision of the Electoral Commission in regard to the vote of Louisiana, and an objection having been made thereto, the two houses separated for the purpose of deliberating in regard to that decision. Unless some Senator asked it, he would not direct that the decision and objection thereto be read again.

Mr. DAVIS, of West Virginia, said the papers should be read.

Mr. SARGENT, of California, said if all the papers were to be read the two hours allowed for discussion would be consumed, and there would be no time left for debate.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. decided that the time occupied by the reading of the papers would not be taken out of the two hours allowed for debate. The two hours would run from the time the debate actually commenced.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, submitted a resolution that the decision of the Commission upon the Electoral vote of Louisiana stand as the judgment of the Senate, the objections made thereto to the contrary notwithstanding.

The decision of the Commission was then read by Secretary Gorham. The PRESIDENT pro tem. inquired if the objections thereto submitted in the House of Representatives should be read.

Messrs. BOGY and DAVIS demanded the reading thereof.

Mr. SHERMAN said the papers had been read in the House, and it was of no use to have them read again to cumber the record.

Mr. WITHERS—We want as many records of them as possible.

Mr. BOGY said this was the most important business which the Senate had ever been called upon to perform, and the reading of the objections should not be omitted to save a few minutes of time.

The objections were then read.

Mr. KERNAN, of New-York, submitted a substitute for the resolution of Mr. Sherman, as follows:

Ordered, That votes purporting to be Electoral votes for President and Vice President, and which were given by Mr. William P. Kellogg, J. H. Burch, Peter Joseph, L. A. Sheldon, Morris Marks, A. B. Levisee, O. M. Brewster, and Oscar Joffroin, claiming to be Electors for the State of Louisiana, be not counted, the decision of the Commission to the contrary notwithstanding.

The question being on the substitute of Mr. Kernan, Mr. MAXEY, of Texas, spoke of the Electoral Commission being invested with the same power as the two houses of Congress in canvassing the Electoral vote, and said it was intrusted with the duty of deciding who were the true Electors, but this duty had not been performed. The Commission was directed to ascertain the true vote of the State, but instead of that they had brought forth a certificate reeking with fraud and offensive in the nostrils of all honest people. The judgment of the Commission had been weighed in the balance and found wanting.

Mr. KERNAN, of New-York, said the Senate should not and he trusted it would not affirm the decision which had been made by the Commission. By the law recently passed Congress conferred upon the Electoral Commission all the power and authority which both houses, acting together or separate, had to investigate and decide upon what was the true vote. He then spoke of the offer of the Democratic counsel before the Commission to prove that fraud existed in Louisiana and that certain Electors in that State were ineligible, and commenting on the decision of the Commission, said if a file of soldiers should threaten to murder the Governor of a State unless he signed the certificate of certain Electors, and the Governor yielded, under this decision there was no power in the two houses of Congress to go behind into the alleged duress. The decision was to the effect that there was no power in Congress to obtain the truth and smite down fraud. He entered his solemn protest against it.

Mr. THURMAN, of Ohio, said the statute of Louisiana created a Returning Board consisting of five persons, who were to hold office indefinitely, and with power to fill all vacancies that occurred. It devolved upon these five men to say who should hold office in the State. The question of who should hold office depended not upon the will of the people, but upon the will of the Returning Board. He believed that such a board was utterly destructive of a republican form of government. The State of Louisiana, unfortunately, originally had no power to create such a board. The acts of that board were unconstitutional, null and void. Even if its acts were not unconstitutional, they were not legal in canvassing the vote of the 7th of November last, because the statute required that the board should be composed of five persons of different political parties, but in fact it was composed of but four persons, all of the same party, and they steadily refused to fill the vacancy. The duty of that board was to canvass and compile the returns of the Commissioners of election, but the testimony showed they did not do so. The proof which counsel offered before the Commission should have been received, and in that opinion he was fortified by the action of both houses of Congress four years ago in rejecting the vote of Louisiana. He then referred to the ineligibility of certain Electors in that State, and said he could not regard that otner than as a nullification of the constitutional provision on that subject.

Mr. SHERMAN, of Ohio, said he was surprised at the objections to the decision of the Electoral Tribunal. It was the constitutional duty of the very gentlemen who now objected to its finding. The Senators objecting knew when they voted for the bill organizing the Commission that these very questions of taking evidence were to be submitted to it, and they were in honor bound by its decision. Although he voted against the bill, and fought it step by step, after it passed he made up his mind to abide by the decisions of the tribunal. These objections now from the other side of the chamber were insulting to the tribunal and insulting to those who sustained its decision. The Democrats had chosen an arbitration. The decision was against them, and there should be no unseemly wrangling. He further declared that the decision of the tribunal was right, and as a question of law no man would have held two months ago that Congress had the right to overhaul the returns by which Electors were chosen. If there was any right of a State, it was the right to choose its own Electors. This right was carefully guarded by the Constitution, and Congress had no more power to overrule the decision of a State than any man in Great Britain or France had to do so. A good deal had been said about fraud, fraud, fraud and perjury, and Republicans were looked upon and pointed out as upholders of fraud. Suppose that Congress could go behind these returns. Is would find murder, violence and fraud on the part of the Democrats. The State of Louisiana had the right to provide by law for overruling this fraud, and it did so by its Returning Board. For Democrats to talk about fraud, when it was the violence and fraud of the Democratic Party which brought this danger to the country, was the extreme of wrong. The Louisiana Returning Board might be imprisoned, the members might be arrested, they might be driven to their graves, but they had simply obeyed the law, and Congress had no power, thank God, to reverse the decision of that board. The Democrats could come forward now and say that they proposed to prove, what they did not offer their proof before the Investigating Committee? He argued that it would have been impossible for the Commission to have examined all the evidence before the 4th of March, and this attempt to have them take evidence looked as if it was contemplated to have a new election for President. He defended the decision of the Commission, and asked if these pure and honorable men were to be assailed throughout the land by libellers and assassins. When all the testimony taken by both houses of Congress in the Louisiana case shall have been read by the people, they would see that the decision of the Commission was right and just.

Mr. MORTON, of Indiana, said the statute of Louisiana creating the Returning Board provided in express terms that a majority of the number should constitute a quorum to do business and make the returns. The board was to consist of five persons, to be elected by the Senate. Three of that number, by the express terms of the act, were a quorum to do business. There were four in number upon the board, one more than a majority. The Electoral Commission had decided that the board was properly constituted. On the other hand it was argued that the existence of a single vacancy destroyed the board. The Commission said not, upon the very best settled principles of law. The Constitution provides that the Senate shall consist of two Senators from each State, yet vacancies from half a dozen States will not destroy the legal character of this Senate. The law provides that the Supreme Court shall consist of a certain number of Judges; two, three vacancies will not destroy the legal character of the Supreme Court; so he could run through the law in regard to corporation and special tribunals. There were certain commissions created for specific ministerial purposes. Sometimes the law required that the Commission should be full to enable it to perform an act; but here, the law creating this tribunal guards against that by specially providing that a majority of the members shall constitute a quorum, and if there be such a majority present, it makes no difference from what cause there are vacancies or absentees—whether there are vacancies or whether members are willfully absent. If there be a majority present, the law is complied with. Now, in regard to the eligibility of Electors, the Commission decided that it was not competent to prove that certain Electors were ineligible on the 7th of November, the day of the election. They decided that upon two grounds: first, because in spirit and meaning of it is that the Electors shall be eligible when they come to act, when they come to vote, and not at the time when they are elected. Certain persons are ineligible to be members of this Senate. A Senator must have certain qualifications. If he has them when the time comes to be sworn in, that is enough. It is immaterial whether he has them on the day of his election. That is well settled. But the Commission decided that the proof was immaterial upon other ground; if it were conceded that an Elector was ineligible upon the day he voted, can that fact be proven to strike out his vote? If it can, it is overturning the very best settled principles of law. A man may be ineligible to a seat in this body; he may not be 30 years old, he may be under the disabilities of the Fourteenth Amendment; but if he comes here and is sworn in and takes his seat, he may afterward be turned out upon proof of the fact, but every vote that he casts has the same validity with the vote of every other Senator. A man may be ineligible to be appointed a Judge under the fourteenth amendment, or for want of age, or from any cause provided by the law of the State in which he lives; yet, if he is appointed, notwithstanding his ineligibility, every act of his as Judge is just as valid as if he had been eligible. He may be turned out upon a quo warranto, but until that is done his act is valid. Can there be an exception to this rule? He knew of none. In applying it to Electors, we apply a simple well-settled rule of law, and how absurd it would be to overturn that rule in a case where a discovery is made after the vote is cast, when it is past recall, that the person chosen was ineligible, and strike out his vote. If the Commission had decided that, it would have overruled a well settled principle of law. Who, six months ago, contended for any such principle as that? This tribunal decided that you could not enter into proof to contradict the returns made by the proper Returning Officers of the State, but was confined by the State to decide and declare who had been elected. It seemed to him that, if any provision of constitutional law was plain that must be. The Constitution gives to each house the right to judge of the elections, returns, and qualifications of its members. But if it were not for that provision of the Constitution, each house could not do that, and if a Senatorial election were contested it would have to be by the Legislature of the State that sends the Senator here. But that, however, has been given to each house, and it was not given in regard to Electors. It is claimed that the two houses have the same power in regard to Electors that the houses have in regard to their members. Well, the answer is, the power was not given. If the framers of the Constitution had intended to give that power, they would have said so. To infer the existence of so great a power is to override every principle of construction in regard to the Constitution that was adopted in the very beginning. To give to Congress the power to judge of the election returns and qualifications of Electors, is for the legislative to absorb the executive, and to place the control of an election of President absolutely in the power of the two houses. We know that was not intended. We know if anything is clear it was intended to make the election of a President independent of Congress. The Constitution says the certificates shall be opened by the President of the Senate, in the presence of the two houses. Whether he is to count the votes or whether the two houses are to count the votes, and I assume under this law the two houses are to do it, or, in certain cases, this Electoral Commission, and what can they do? They have but one duty to perform, and that is to ascertain that these certificates came from the Electors of the State; when that is done, "the vote shall then be counted." They must ascertain the fact whether they come from the Electors of the State, and when they have ascertained that their duty is at an end; there is no time, there is no place to try any question of ineligibility. And how are we to know that the certificates came from the Electors of the State? In the first place, the act of Congress provides that prima facie evidence is the Governor's certificate, but that is not conclusive. That is the result of an act of Congress; Congress may repeal that act, or it may provide by another to go behind it; but when you go behind that and inquire into the action of the officers of the State, there your inquiry is at an end. Whenever the officers appointed by a State to declare who have been chosen Eelectors, have acted and made that declaration, it is final so far as Congress is concerned. The action of the State officers is the act of the State.

Mr. BAYARD, of Delaware, said, as a member of the Electoral Commission, he had given all that he could give of earnest study, patient labor, and devotion to secure a just execution of the law under which he was appointed. His labors and his efforts had been crowned by failure. Deep was his sorrow and poignant was his disappointment. He mourned his failure for his country's sake, for it seemed to him that not only did this decision of the eight members of the Commission level in the dust all the essential safeguards thrown around the election of a chief magistrate, but it announced to the people of this land that truth and justice, honesty and morality were no longer the central basis of their political power.

Mr. LOGAN, of Illinois, said he was not here when the bill creating the Electoral Commission passed. Had he been here he would have voted against it. It seemed to him that there was an amount of irritation on the part of the disappointed portion of Congress which was rather extraordinary. He denied that Congress had a right to go behind the returns of the Louisiana Returning Board, and claimed that Electors were State officers. They stood in the same relation to Congress that the Governor of a State did, and he presumed no man would claim that Congress had a right to investigate the election of a Governor of a State. Two days after Elector was contested in the State prior to the time it is cast, and unless so contested it is good.

Mr. WALLACE said: The Senator from Ohio [Mr. Sherman,] says that no lawyer asserted the right to go behind the returns, but the record shows that this had been the right when he resisted it passed, and two of the Commission, Messrs. Morton and Garfield, in the debate opposed the bill because it gave that right. The rejection of the proof of fraud by the Commission admitted its truth. This is sound law, and the Republican Party cannot now say the facts are not as we state them. And this was the attack on the action of the members of the Returning Board, and on Gov. Packard, and continuing said: The laws of the people whom I represent are based on common right, common justice and common sense, and they believe that the end of legal proceedings is the attainment of justice. They will not respect a decision that refuses to hear the truth, that indorses falsehood, sustains forgery, and places the Federal Government at the mercy of the base. They will, and they should, agitate for its reversal. The result before us is fully reached. It is the decree of party, wrung by party fealty from a judicial tribunal upon a purely legal question. May we never look upon its like again.

Mr. SARGENT, of California, said his judgment was deliberately made up and expressed against the passage of the bill creating the Electoral Commission. At that time every Democat on the floor, except one, insisted that the bill should pass. It was passed, and by Democratic votes. During the debate upon that bill, he stated that it would be said the decision of the Commission was partisan, no matter which way they decided; but not a Democratic Senators scouted such an idea. Not a Democratic member of the tribunal had risen in the slightest degree above partisanship. Every vote they had given was saturated with partisanship. Because in the selection of the fifth Judge there happened to be one more Republican on the Commission than Democrat, and because those Republicans carried out the principles of their party, the Democratic Senators found fault, when their own members on the Commission were just as partisan. It was very easy to talk about fraud, fraud, fraud. The Democratic counsel went before the Commission and offered to prove a long list of things which they knew time would not allow. He argued that the decision of the Commission only sustained the right of the State in selecting its Electors. He did not concede for a moment that frauds were perpetrated by the Republicans of Louisiana. Thousands of Republicans in that State were taken by the throat and strangled, and thus prevented from voting. That by means of such persons so obtained an apparent majority. The policy of the law in Louisiana was, that such fraudulent majorities should be cast out, and the Returning Board did right in throwing them out. He defended the decision of the Commission at length, and said the condemnation of the American people would be written upon the Democratic Party. Murder was not a fair mode of electioneering. All the Republican Party wanted was a fair voice of the people, fearless on their part, and it would be heeded. Fraud had been committed in Louisiana by the Democrats, and it was by such means that they expected to seize the Presidency. It was by such means that a few days ago an assassin attempted, in the State-house of Louisiana, to take the life of a man whom more than one-half of the people of the State had elected Governor. [Laughter on the Democratic side.] Mr. SARGENT (looking toward Mr. Withers, of Virginia,) said the Senator might laugh at that fact, but did the Senator laugh at the fact that one of the party papers in this city yesterday counseled the assassination of Gov. Hayes?

Mr. SARGENT—Does the Senator laugh at the fact that his party is responsible for the assassination of Abraham Lincoln? Does the Senator deny that?

Mr. WITHERS—Yes, Sir; I deny it fairly and squarely.

Mr. SARGENT (resuming) said the Democratic Party was stained all over with the crime of assassination. It had assassinated from the best man God ever created, Abraham Lincoln—down to the poorest negro in Mississippi.

Mr. WITHERS, of Virginia, said he supported the bill for the creation of the Electoral Commission in the hope that the members drawn from the judicial department of the Government would give the subject a fair judicial consideration. But he was mistaken. This decision had demonstrated the fact that the members of the Supreme Court, the highest tribunal in the land, could not rise above party any more than pronounced politicians. He then denied that the Democratic Party was responsible for all wrongs committed, and said three-fourths of the violence in the South had been instigated and brought about by the Republican Party.

Mr. BOUTWELL, of Massachusetts, said in these moments when disapointment waited upon so many of his friends on the other side of the chamber, he desired to say that he was disappointed in two particulars. He never had any doubt as to the election of Gov. Hayes, but he know that a large number of people in this country did not so believe, and in the interest of public peace, and believing all would acquiesce in the decision of the Electoral Commission, he voted for the bill creating that Commission. He was disappointed that any gentleman in this Senate who had endeavored to lead those on the Republican side to support the bill should come here now to condemn the judgment of the Commission. He was disappointed that the judgment of eight men had not been taken as a better evidence of the justice of the conclusion reached than the dissenting opinions of seven other men. He believed the people of this country would accept the judgment of the Commission, and that the Supreme Court would lose no prestige by the action of its members.

Mr. STEVENSON, of Kentucky, said the proceedings of the American Senate to-day would live as long as constitutional government lasted, or the principles of liberty had a votary. He voted for the bill creating the Electoral Commission, and did so in the interest of peace. It had been said there was but one Democrat who voted against it; thank God there was but one, because the Democratic party met this matter upon the broad basis of fair investigation. When this bill was passed, it was expected that there would be a free, full, and fair investigation, and that judgment would be rendered in accordance with the proofs.

Mr. HOWE, of Wisconsin, said the Senator from Kentucky [Mr. Stevenson] had admonished the Senator that the proceedings of this day would live. That was true, and in his judgment [Mr. Howe's] it was a pity that it was true. He thought it would be better for the fame of the Republic if these proceedings could be buried out of sight as soon as they should be finished. For days the waves of vituperation had broken at the feet of the Electoral Commission in order to coerce that Commission into the crucifixion of the rights of a State, and to-day these same foamy surges beat upon the heads of the members of the Commission to crucify them because they would not consent to crucify a state. The Commission and its judgment would survive, because they were just. That Commission was vested only with such prerogatives as the two houses of Congress had; would it be said that Congress could tell a State when she had violated her own Constitution in selecting Electors? Congress could tell Louisiana that; it could tell New-York also, but New-York would correct that style of reasoning very soon. Mr. Howe then defended the action of the Louisiana Returning Board.

At the expiration of the two hours, the question being on the resolution of Mr. Kernan as a substitute for that of Mr. Sherman, it was rejected—yeas 28, nays 41, as follows:

Mr. Edmunds, who would have voted in the negative, but who was detained at home by sickness, was paired with Mr. Thurman, who would have voted in the affirmative. Mr. Blaine, who would have voted in the negative, was also detained at home by sickness.

The question then being on the resolution of Mr. Sherman, it was agreed to—yeas 41, nays 28—a strict party vote. Those voting in favor of the substitute as above recorded voted against the resolution, and those who voted against the substitute voted for the resolution.

Mr. HAMLIN said the Senate having concluded its action on the vote of Louisiana, he moved that the Secretary be instructed to notify the House of Representatives that the Senate was ready to meet that body and proceed with the count of the Electoral vote. Agreed to.

Mr. SARGENT suggested if it was not necessary to inform the House that the Senate had arrived at a conclusion in regard to the decision of the Commission.

The PRESIDENT pro tem. replied that that would be included in the notification.

The Senate then, at 3:35 P. M., took a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House, at 10 o'clock A. M., took a further recess until 10:50 A. M. On reassembling at 10:50, the time till 11 o'clock was occupied in preparing the hall for the reception of the Senate. The galleries were crowded as usual on the days when the count is to proceed. Precisely at 11 o'clock the arrival of the Senate was announced, and the Senators entered the hall, the members of the House standing to receive them.

The Presiding Officer then said: The joint meeting of Congress resumes its session. The objections presented to the certificates from the State of Louisiana having been submitted to the Commission, the two houses have reconvened to receive and consider the decision of that tribunal in writing, by a majority of the Commissioners, and signed by a majority of the Commissioners agreeing thereto. Is will now be read by the Secretary of the Senate.

The decision was then read, as follows:

ELECTORAL COMMISSION,
WASHINGTON, D. C., Feb. 16, A. D. 1877.

To the President of the Senate of the United States, presiding in the meeting of the two houses of Congress, under the act of Congress entitled "An act to provide for and regulate the counting of the votes for President and Vice President and the decision of questions arising thereon, for the term commencing March 4, A. D. 1877," approved Jan. 29, 1877:

The Electoral Commission mentioned in said act having received certain certificates and papers purporting to be certificates and papers accompanying the same of the Electoral vote from the State of Louisiana and the objections thereto submitted to it under said act, now report that it has duly considered the same, pursuant to said act, and has by a majority of votes decided and does hereby decide, that the votes of William P. Kellogg, J. Henry Burchs, Peter Joseph, L. A. Sheldon, Morris Marks, Aaron B. Levisee, Orlando M. Brewster, and Oscar Joffroin, marked in the certificate of William P. Kellogg, Governor of said State, which votes are certifiedby said persons, as appears by the certificate submitted to the Commission as aforesaid, and marked Nos. 1 and 3 by said Commission, and herewith returned, are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that the persons lawfully to be counted as therein certified, namely: Eight votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, for President, and eight votes for William A. Wheeler, of New-York, for Vice President.

The Commission has, by a majority of votes, decided, and does hereby decide and report, that the eight persons first before named were duly appointed Electors in and by the said State of Louisiana.

The brief ground of this decision is that it appears upon such evidence as by the Constitution, and the law named in said act of Congress is competent and pertinent to the consideration of the subject; that the before-mentioned Electors appear to have been lawfully appointed such Electors of President and Vice President of the United States, for the term beginning March 4, 1877, of the State of Louisiana, and that they voted as such at the time, and in the manner provided for by the Constitution of the United States and the law, and the Commission has, by a majority of votes, decided that it has not competent under the Constitution and the law as it existed at the date of the passage of said act, to go into evidence aliunde the papers opened by the President of the Senate in the presence of the two houses to prove that other persons than those regularly certified to by the Governor of the State, on and according to the determination of their appointment by the Returning Officers for elections in said State prior to the time required for the performance of their duties had been appointed Electors, or by counter proof to show that they had not, or that the determination of said Returning Officers was not in accordance with the truth and fact, the Commission by a majority vote being of opinion that it is not within the jurisdiction of the two houses of Congress assembled to count the votes for President and Vice President to enter upon a trial of such question. The Commission, by a majority of votes, is also of opinion that it is not competent to receive any evidence so appointed Electors aforesaid held an office of trust or profit under the United States at the time when they were appointed, or that they were ineligible under the laws of the State, or any other matter offered to be proved aliunde, said certificates and papers. The Commission is also of the opinion, by a majority of votes, that the Returning Officers of election were empowered to canvass the vote at the election for Eectors in Louisiana were a lawfully constituted body by virtue of a constitutional law, and that a vacancy in said body did not vitiate its proceedings. The Commission has also decided and does hereby decide by a majority of votes, and report as a consequence of the foregoing and upon the ground before stated, that the paper purporting to be a certificate of the Electoral votes of said State of Louisiana objected to by T. O. Howe and others, marked N. C. No. 2, by the Commission, and herewith returned, is not the certificate of the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and that they ought not to be counted as such.

The decision having been read, the PRESIDING OFFICER asked whether there were any objections to the decision.

Mr. GIBSON, of Louisiana, thereupon rose and presented objections to the decision on the ground that the Commission had refused to receive evidence which had been offered, and had decided that the votes mentioned in certificates Nos. 1 and 3 should be counted for Hayes and Wheeler, such evidence to the contrary notwithstanding. The paper recites at great length the proceedings of the Commission, but the point of it is the rejection of the evidence. It is signed by most of the Democrats in both houses.

The reading of the paper occupied just an hour. It was the driest of legal documents, merely consisting of repititions of the various forms in which evidence had been offered to and refused by the Commission. No one, after the first five minutes, made the slightest pretense of listening to it or making an effort to understand it. The hum of conversation prevailed on the floor and in the crowded galleries to such an extent that the Presiding Officer had several times to appeal for order and silence. Finally, when the reading was at last ended, (at 12:25,) an opportunity was given to members who had not yet signed the paper, to step up to the Clerk's desk and append their signatures, and this consumed still more time and added to the uproar.

At 12:40 the House and convention was again called to order, and the Presiding Officer asked whether there were any further objections to the decision.

Mr. WALLACE, of Pennsylvania, rose and presented objections, which were read. They are:

First, that the decision is in violation of the Electoral act, in this: That by the act the Commission is required to decide whether any and what votes from each State are the votes provided for by the Constitution, and what persons were duly appointed Electors; yet the Commission refused to examine and ascertain who were duly appointed Electors in and by the State of Louisiana, and what votes from that State are within the provisions of the Constitution of the United States; second, because the act creating the Commission was passed to the end that the Commission would hear and examine evidence, and honestly decide what Electors in any disputed State were fairly and legally chosen; whereas the Commission refused to hear and consider the evidence offered to show that the Electors whose votes the Commission had decided should be counted were not duly chosen, but that they had falsely and fraudulently acted as such Electors, and also refused offers to show that the pretended certificates of election were procured by corruption and wholly untrue; third, because the decision is in disregard of truth, justice, and law, and establishes the demoralizing and ominous doctrine that fraud, forgery, bribery, and perjury can lawfully be used as a means to make a President of the United States against the well-known or easily ascertained will of the people and of States.

This protest is signed by Senators Wallace, of Pennsylvania; Johnston, of Virginia; Bailey, of Tennessee; Kernan, of New-York; Kelly, of Oregon; Saulsbury, of Delaware, and other Senators and members.

The Presiding Officer having called for other objection to the decision, Mr. COCHRAN, of Pennsylvania, presented an objection and protest signed by himself and several Senators and Representatives, for the following reasons:

First, it was not denied before the Commission that the Tilden Electors in Louisiana had received a large majority of the votes cast; second, it was not denied before the Commission that Wells and his associates, styling themselves a Returning Board, were guilty of gross fraud; that their certificates given to the Hayes Electors were false and fraudulent, or that their action in canvassing the votes was in violation of the Constitution and laws of the State of Louisiana; third, the action of the eight members of the Commission in declining to hear evidence of those and other facts was a violation of the letter and spirit of the act under which the Commission was created and of the spirit of the Constitution of the United States.

No further objections being presented the Presiding Officer announced (at 1 o'clock) that the Senate would withdraw to its Chamber, so that the two houses might separately consider and decide the objections.

The Senate having accordingly withdrawn, Mr. WOOD, of New-York, rose to make a motion, but the Speaker interposed and ruled that a new legislative day was now commencing.

The proceedings were thereupon opened by the Chaplain with prayer, and then the Journal of Saturday last was read and approved.

Mr. WOOD, of New-York, then moved that the House take a recess till 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

Before putting the question the SPEAKER desired to present some enrolled bills, but Mr. CONGER, of Michigan, objected. The yeas and nays were called on Mr. Wood's motion and it was agreed to—yeas, 140; nays, 110.

The House thereupon, at 1:25 P. M., took a recess till 10 o'clock A. M. to-morrow, and the Democratic members remained in the hall for the purpose of holding a caucus.

DEATH OF A CELEBRATED TURFMAN.

From the Pall Mall Gazette, Feb. 7.

Mr. Merry, whose death was announced on Monday, had been in failing health for some time, and this was why he severed his connection with the turf soon after retiring from the House of Commons, in which he sat for many yeaas as member for Falkirk. His political career was an uneventful one; but, as an owner of race horses he achieved greate success than any other sportsman now alive. He did not, like the late Sir Joseph Hawley and Mr. Bowes, win the Derby four times, but his colors were victorious in every race of importance at least once, and a list of his principal winners would fill several pages of the Calendar. The great horse of sterling merit which he owned was Chanticleer, with whom he won the Northumberland Plate, the Goodwood Cup, and the Doncaster Cup in 1862, and who was the sire of that good mare Sunbeam. In 1855 he won the Two Thousand Guineas with Lord of the Isles; and three years later, by which time Mr. Merry had come into possession of the stables and training-ground at Russley, where his horses were under the charge of Matthew Dawson, Sunbeam and Blanche of Middlebie ran first and third for the St. Leger; while in 1860 Thormanby, ridden by Custance, won Mr. Merry his first Derby. The "Squire of Russley," as it was the fashion to call him, always let his two-year-olds have plenty of work, and this, in the opinion of many people, is why Dundee, Playstone, Scottish Chief, Liddington, Student, Marksman, Belladrum, and King of the Forest did not do all that was expected of them as three-year-olds. All of these horses were heavily backed for the Derby in their respective years, and it was quite an exciting thing for Mr. Merry not to have the "winter favorite" for the Epsom race. After sweeping the board as two-year-olds, most of the above-named animals developed some infirmity as they got older, and it is a well-known story how Dundee, breaking down at Tattenham-corner, "straggled home on three legs" for the Derby and was only beaten half a length by Kettledrum. Liddington and Belladrum, though they were both "roarers" distinguished themselves by obtaining a "place," in the Two Thousand Guineas, while Buckstone and Scottish Chief did the same in the Derby. The two latter were less affected by their two-year-old infirmity, and Buckstone, after running first for Buckstone ran third, and is a head for the St. Leger, and as a four-year-old won the Ascot Cup after a dead heat with the redoubtable Tim Whiffler. Thormanby had already secured this trophy two years before, and Mr. Merry won it for the third time in four years with Scottish Chief. Soon afterward, Matthew Dawson, who had trained all these horses for Mr. Merry, left his service, and the Russley horses were placed under the charge of Waugh, who trained Macgregor when that luckless animal won the 2,000 guineas, and ultimately of Robert Peck, who revived the fading fortunes of the stable. It was during his period of service that Mr. Merry believed he had found a first-class triple triumph, winning the Derby in 1873 with Doncaster, while in the same year Marieshtaurt secured the Oaks and the St. Leger, beating her stable companion by a head only for the latter race. As four-year-olds they did not distinguish themselves as was expected, both being beaten by Boiard in the Ascot Cup, though Doncaster afterward secured the Goodwood Cup. But in the following season they achieved a triple victory at Ascot, for, while Marie Stuart won the Queen's Vase, Doncaster secured the Gold Cup and the Alexandra Plate, and was sold for the enormous and unprecedented sum of 14,000 guineas. Soon afterward Marie Stuart was sold for a large sum to Mr. Stirling Crawford, and in the course of another six weeks Mr. Merry's connection with the turf was terminated by the sale at Tattersall's of all his horses in training. His breeding stud had been disposed of two years before; and how choice it was may be inferred from the fact that most of the horses referred to were bred by Mr. Merry himself, Markenean and Doncaster being the most notable exceptions.

AN UNNATURAL MOTHER'S CRIME.

From the Liverpool Courier, Feb. 8.

The horrible suspicion that the woman Kirkbride had improperly disposed of the bodies of no less than eight children of which she was the mother, is now realised almost to the fullest extent, another child in addition to the six already traced having been added to those that can be clearly accounted for. Strange to say, the latest discovery is, as in the case of the original disclosure of one frightful story, due to the agency of one of the sons of the accused, who now resides at or near Penrith. The publication of the shocking discoveries of the doings of Mrs. Kirkbride that have from time to time been made, has led to gossip and conjecture and aroused recollections that still further add evidence of the fact that the inhuman creature has committed the full series of revolting crimes she is believed guilty of. Her son referred to now remembers, and has so stated to the authorities at Penrith, that some three or four years ago, while he and another brother were clearing out a lumber-room in the house in which they lived at Helton, they came across a parcel tied up in dirty cloth and rags. They shoved it down stairs along with other rubbish, but before putting it away they had the curiosity to open it. It contained, as may be surmised, the body of a child, which, however, without saying anything more about it, the boys threw into the midden. Whether the remains have been traced further we do not learn, but that it was the body of a child there does not appear the least doubt. The parcel was made up in exactly the same way as those inclosing all the bodies previously discovered, and the recollections of the boys as well as the circumstances point clearly to the conclusion named. It is not improbable that the eighth and last body may also be traced, and then it is hoped there will be an end to the sickening catalogue of horrors presented by this unparalleled case.

A FRENCH LADY LIBELLED.

The Paris correspondent of a London paper writes: "Mme. Jules Simon, wife of the Prime Minister, has commenced an action for defamation against the Suffrage Universel, the organ of M. Cuneo d'Ornano, the Bonapartist Deputy. The complaint is founded on an article entitled 'The National Decay,' published on the occasion of the presentation of Mme. Simon to Mme. MacMahon, wife of the President of the Republic. Asking how can the public allow such people to become the heroes of the hour, the newspaper in question gives a very unfavorable account of Mme. Simon. Among other things it recounts an incident which it declares to have taken place during the war:

'One day Mme. Jules Simon, leaning on the arm of Citizen Millière, her steward in hero of the Commune, entered one of the schools of the Sisters of Charity in the Eleventh Arrondissement. One of the Sisters approached her, and complained that the children were sufferiug dreadfully from cold, and that there was no wood left to burn. "No wood!" she exclaimed; pointing to a crucifix on the wall, "take that." So saying she tore down the image of Christ on the cross, which she thrust into the stove.'

The journalist concludes his article by asking whether this is a woman fit to be introduced to Mme. MacMahon. In the action, which is to be heard on Feb. 10 in the Court of Angoulême, Mme. Simon claims 50,000 francs damages."

—The author of Christian Schools and Scholars, London, 1867, a work which excited considerable interest at the time, and is still read eagerly by those who can get a chance at it, is said to be Mother Raphael Draine, Prioress of the Convent at Stone, Staffordshire, England.

D. Appleton & Co. have published a Hand Atlas of Ancient Geography in 98 maps, edited with an introduction by Rev. George Butler, and The Correct Card, a whist catechism, prepared by Capt. Arthur Campbell-Walker, and warranted to teach persons how to play at whist successfully.

—A number of very interesting old manuscripts, supposed to be written by some monk of the Soloveisk Monastery near Archangel, and said to throw new light upon the history of the religious sects of Russia, were recently found by ness not on trial, nor were their peculiarities or idiosyncrasies, nor those of Germans, nor those of other nationalities. The jury were to find simply on the facts, not on their favor or choice, but only on the facts as shown by the evidence. Continuing, Judge Brady said that the prosecution had properly withdrawn the charge of murder, as there was neither deliberation nor intent. The jury, if they found for the people, could find the prisoner guilty of manslaughter in the third degree. At 8:45 o'clock the jury, not having agreed, were locked up for the night.

COURT NOTES.

Judge Gildersleeve sat in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday, in the absence of Recorder Hackett.

The case of James Sutton, publisher of the Aldine, on trial for perjury in the Court of General Sessions, was yesterday adjourned, in consequence of the illness of Recorder Hackett.

In Part II. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday, Louisia McGomery and Lizzie Deignan, who attacked an Italian named Antonio Condino and robbed him of $1, pleaded guilty. They were each sent to the State Prison for one year.

The jury in Part III. of the Superior Court yesterday rendered a verdict of $1,000 in favor of the plaintiff in the suit of Edward Schenck against the Church of the Incarnation. Mr. Schenck sued to recover $3,000 on a contract for providing an organist and a quartet choir for the church for the year ending May 1, 1876.

The case of Walker against the New Central Coal Company came up for trial yesterday in Part I. of the Common Pleas. The action is brought to recover $15,000 for legal services rendered by the late firm of Strong & Shepard. The defendant not being ready to proceed, Judge Van Hoesen ordered a reference, and referred the case to ex-Judge Loew.

The case of Sergt. Theron T. Thompson, of the Fourth Precinct, indicted on complaint of Mr. Andrews for assaulting Michael Cannon on Park row, was upon the calendar of Part II. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday. Owing to the absence of Mr. A. Oakey Hall, counsel for the accused officer, the case went over until Wednesday.

Daniel Asher, aged 19, of No. 76 Orchard street, charged with stealing two boxes of lace goods valued at $75, the property of Lewis E. Smith, No. 42 Greene street, was convicted by Assistant District Attorney Rollins yesterday in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions. Judge Sutherland sentenced the thief to three years in the State Prison.

A few days ago, Assistant District Attorney Lyon prosecuted George Gordon, alias Sweeney, for stealing a case of tobacco. The jury found the thief guilty of petit larceny, which involved a penalty of only six months in the Penitentiary. Yesterday Mr. Lyon had Sweeney brought up for assaulting the officer who arrested him, and six months additional were added to his sentence.

The celebrated Boyd whisky case, in the trial of which it is claimed the operations of the Western whisky ring will be exposed, was called before Judge Blatchford in the United States Circuit Court, yesterday, but was postponed until Wednesday, in consequence of the death of the wife of Gen. Burnett, one of the counsel for the defendants. All the other whisky cases went over until next Monday.

The proceedings in the suit of Boody against William B. Ogden and others before Judge Sedgwick in the Superior Court, Special Term, were rather monotonous yesterday. The greater portion of the day was taken up with the reading of the deposition of Young, formerly Ogden's confidential clerk, who averred that the plaintiff's present claims were considered at the time of the accounting and final settlement of the Galena "pool."

The case of Kate Allen against John E. Allen was brought before Judge Sedgwick, in Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday. The plaintiff sues for a decree of absolute divorce on the ground of the defendant's adultery, and moved for a reference yesterday. Among the motion papers were affidavits of the publication of the summons, the defendant not being in this State. Judge Sedgwick denied the motion for a reference because the order of publication was not presented with the motion papers.

Ellen McGuire, a forlorn looking beggar, was arrested last Saturday night for attempting to pass what was alleged to be a counterfeit half dollar. She was locked up until yesterday morning, when she was taken before Commissioner Osborn. She stated that she had offered the money to a baker in payment for a loaf of bread, supposing the coin to be good. It being evident that there was no intention on the woman's part to pass counterfeit money, the Commissioner discharged her. Upon subsequent examination of the 50 cent piece it was found to be genuine, some one having covered it very neatly with tin foil, which gave it the appearance of being spurious.

Chief Justice Davis, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday granted an order of publication in the suit of Catharine Georgi against Adolph E. Georgi. The action is for an absolute divorce. The plaintiff alleges that her husband left her, suddenly and secretly, on Dec. 15, 1876, and went to California. After his departure she found that he had been on terms of improper intimacy with one Maggie Barrett, at Coney Island, and that the girl Barrett had had a child by him. Mrs. Georgi says her husband left the State to avoid a prosecution to compel him to take care of his illegitimate child. She says that Maggie Barrett told her of these facts.

In the suit of the Sixth Avenue Railroad Company against the Gilbert Elevated Railway Company, judgment was rendered for the plaintiff by Judge Sedgwick, in the Superior Court, recently. The defendant moved, yesterday, to have the findings of fact modified by inserting the following: "At the time the acts incorporating the defendant were passed the actual plan of Dr. Gilbert, as then known, had dispensed with tubes for passenger traffic, and moved by atmospheric pressure, and had substituted therefor the ordinary open railroad tracks, not to rest in a tube or its equivalent, and to be used by steam locomotives." Judge Sedgwick denied the application.

HOW MANY POUNDS TO THE TON!

The suit of Frederick Recht against the Phœnix Insurance Company was brought in the Supreme Court, recently, to recover on a policy of marine insurance. The policy contained the following clause concerning the vessel in which the insured goods were to be shipped: "Warranted not to carry more than her registered tonnage in marble, lead, coal, or iron." The vessel in which the goods were shipped was registered in this port at 916 tons. She carried a load of coal consisting of 902 tons, of 2,240 pounds each. This quantity would make over 1,000 tons of 2,000 pounds each. The vessel was lost at sea. The insurance company claimed that the warranty in the policy related to loading the vessel with tons of 2,000 pounds each, and the vessel being over-loaded when carrying more than 1,000 tons, they were discharged from liability on the policy. The case was tried before Judge Van Brunt yesterday, and the plaintiff asked leave to show a custom at this port of making the tons of coal, &c., each of 2,240 pounds. Judge Van Brunt, however, held that as the contract of insurance had been made in this State and was to be performed in this State, the laws of this State regulating the number of pounds to the ton should govern. The number of pounds here is 2,000. The vessel, therefore, was loaded to more than her registered tonnage, and the company is not liable. The complaint was, therefore, dismissed.

THE EMMA MINE SUIT.

Mr. Phelps having concluded his opening address in the famous "Emma Mine" suit, the defense yesterday began the examination of witnesses. Ex-Judge J. B. McKean, of Salt Lake City, and ex-Judge Amasai B. James, of Ogdensburg, testified that they would not believe J. B. Lyon under oath unless his testimony was corroborated. His reputation for veracity was exceedingly bad. Similar testimony was given by Isaac B. Newcomb, C. J. Turner, Benjamin F. Kendall, J. C. Houghton, Henry Hooker, of St. Lawrence County, and Spofford C. Field. The defense had a score of other witnesses to testify in relation to Mr. Lyon's veracity, but the Judge decided to limit them to the parties already mentioned.

THE MAXWELL FORGERY CASE.

The examination in the case of George L. Maxwell, charged with negotiating a forged check for $64,252, purporting to have been drawn by the New-York Life Insurance Company on the Union Trust Company, was resumed yesterday in the Tombs Police Court. Some additional testimony was taken on both sides, when counsel rested the case without argument. Justice Duffy, after briefly reviewing the testimony in the case, held the prisoner for trial, fixing bail at $10,000, which was furnished by one of Maxwell's brothers.

COURT OF APPEALS.

ALBANY, Feb. 19.—In the Court of Appeals to-day the following business was transacted: No. 163—Gosman vs. Cruger; argument resumed and concluded. No. 201—Durant vs. Abendroth; argued by S. Hand and William H. Arnoux for appellant, and C. Norwood for respondent. No. 205—Whitehead vs. Kennedy; argued by T. W. Dwight and S. J. Glassey for appellant, and S. Hand for respondent.

☞ Advertisements for THE WEEKLY TIMES must be handed in before 6 o'clock this evening.

For a party which has so much to say about decency and propriety in connection with the Commission, the Democrats ought to be ashamed of the way in which their leaders in Congress behave. Entirely apart from the merits of the Presidential question, the public may justly require of Representatives and Senators an observance of decorum and courtesy. The other day the leader (after DAVID DUDLEY FIELD and FERNANDO WOOD) of the Democrats in the House indulged in a profane and vulgar demonstration toward one of his associates which was worthy of a Tammany loafer. Yesterday, Senator WITHERS, of Virginia, interrupted Mr. SARGENT with a loud laugh when the latter alluded to the attempted killing of Gov. PACKARD, in New-Orleans—a piece of bad manners, which drew upon him a severe and deserved rebuke. This sort of thing was common in the days when the slaveholders brought the insulting arrogance of the plantation into the Senate chamber, but it has not been known there in many years, and it will not add to popular fondness for the Democracy if it is now renewed.

Last night's proceedings at the Democratic caucus will certainly not inspire fresh confidence either in the good sense or the good faith of the active members of that party. The resolution of Mr. MILLS, of Texas, declaring that as neither Presidential candidate had secured a majority of Electoral votes, the House should proceed to-day to elect a President for the term beginning March 4, was only a trifle more absurd than the proposal of the irrepressible SPRINGER, of Illinois, that a requirement for the recognition of NICHOLS in Louisiana and HAMPTON in South Carolina should be tacked on to each of the regular appropriation bills yet to be acted on. The preposterous folly of convening a party caucus merely to afford an opportunity for ventilating crack-brained schemes like these is not more obvious than the thinly-veiled treachery and fraud which underlie all the Democratic attempts to disregard a bargain by which they hoped to circumvent their opponents. The caucus merely resolved that it was not necessary to reaffirm the action of Saturday; it might have added that no amount of affirmation could render it certain that the party would not eat its own words within a few hours after they had been deliberately formulated.

Congress has only eleven working days left, and debate on the Electoral question is likely to consume some time. But the House Committee has only just completed the bill to provide for sundry civil expenses of the Government; and other equally important bills are yet in an incomplete state. This particular appropriation, for example, includes a vast number of items, some of which ought to be carefully scanned. The bill is apt to be an omnibus in which objectionable jobs are concealed. The present House has shown great aptitude at packing undesirable passengers into the "omnibus" bill. But it would be a real calamity if the main appropriations of this bill should be lost. Provision is made, among other things in the bill, for the expenses of United States courts, the support of homes of disabled soldiers, the Signal Service, the maintenance of certain beacons and lights, and the prosecution of certain important surveys. A suggestion has been made that the pending and delayed appropriations be put through both houses without debate. This would be a desperate resort. Unless the committees are more than usually prudent, it would also be a very reckless one.

There will be a joint meeting of the two Committees on Cities at Albany to-day, and the chief office-holders of our local Government will be heard in regard to pending legislation. We fear that the proceedings of this Legislative conference will be more voluminous than valuable. The views of Controller KELLY, for example, in regard to the financial needs of the City can hardly be of much value, considering the level of his ability, and the limited opportunities he has had to familiarize himself with the details of his department. Mr. KELLY and the majority of his colleagues are much more likely to discuss proposed City legislation with reference to its influence on the prosperity of Tammany Hall and on their personal interests, than with any regard to the claims of the tax-payers. It is entirely proper that they should have an opportunity to enlighten the Legislature on questions with which it is their special business to be familiar, but the Committees on Cities must remember that in New-York the theory that public officers are the natural guardians of public interests has ceased to be anything more than a pleasant fiction.

It would be too much to expect that the public demand for strict economy in City administration should be recognized by the Democratic majority of the Board of Aldermen. These persons come from a class which has been accustomed to live on the spoils of the City, and which will resist every attempt to cut down the allowance of public plunder. The Republicans on the board have it in their power to defeat the raids of their Democratic associates on the Public Treasury, but we regret to see that four of their number have lately exhibited a disposition to evade that duty. Their names are Messrs. PINCKNEY, DE VRIES, SIMONSON, and EHRHART. These four voted on Thursday last with the Democrats to carry through a resolution awarding some $1,840 to twenty-two clerks and door-keepers who are alleged to have assisted the Aldermen in their work as County Canvassers. The resolution was clearly illegal, and its passage was a piece of shameless jobbery which the Republican members acting together could have defeated. The four Republicans who proved recreant to their public trust on that occasion would do well to reconsider their evident intention to assist the Democrats to rob the tax-payers.

THE DEMOCRATS AND THE LOUISIANA DECISION.

A long list of objections was filed by the Democrats yesterday to the decision of the Commission in the Louisiana case. The document, which was signed by nearly all the partisans of Mr. TILDEN in both houses, was reinforced by a batch of personal protests put in by that pure and eminent statesman, Mr. Senator WALLACE, of Pennsylvania, and which have the merit of brevity rather than originality. The burden of all the objections is that the Commission did not feel competent to receive evidence other than that contained in the papers referred to it. Of course, so long as the Commission could not go into the proofs, the Democrats feel themselves free to assert what they choose concerning the facts, knowing that no tribunal exists before which their assertions can be tested. Accordingly, the objections recite and amplify all the propositions contained in Mr. TRUMBULL'S offers of proof, and accompany these with the proper rhetorical manifestations of indignation and disgust.

The first impression which the public gets from all this furor over the decision of a tribunal which owes its existence to Democratic votes is that it is an evidence of weakness. When a man gets into an angry dispute, which, after much violent discussion, he contrives to refer to an arbitrator of his own choosing, and then, when the decision goes against him, flies into a passion and abuses the arbitrator, he gets laughed at. Every one sees that he submitted his case, not because he wanted a fair decision, and was ready to abide by it, but because he expected to win. If he cries out that he has been cheated, he only shows that he has been trying to cheat his opponent. Every word he says against the tribunal he had himself provided only makes him ridiculous and contemptible. And parties are judged in the same way. If there has been any unfair decision by the Commission, the rights of one of the parties have been denied them; but what right had either party to build confidently on the vote of the Commission? The Democrats did so, or, as they now confess, they would not have contrived it; but they have only overreached themselves; they have fallen into a snare which they set for the Republicans.

Every one of the more prominent objections made by the Democrats goes to show that the opposition to the Hayes Electors in Louisiana was not made in good faith, but was a technical and quibbling opposition, by which it was hoped either that one of the Republican Commissioners would be confused and entangled, or that the count would be thrown over the 4th of March. The proposition to open up the whole process of the popular election in Louisiana; to examine, a thousand miles away, the facts at every disputed poll; to test the observance of all the details of a set of complicated Election laws; to go into the validity of the testimony taken by the Returning Board; to take that testimony over again and confirm or overthrow it by additional proof—this proposition was never made by men who expected it to be carried out in a fortnight. What the Democrats really wished was that the Commission should admit such evidence as would sustain their case and then stop. They wished, for instance, that the Commission should admit the face of the returns made in Louisiana by the County Commissioners, but they would not have consented to evidence showing that those returns were erroneous. They asked that the act of the Returning Board in throwing out votes for intimidation and fraud should be reversed, not because there was no such intimidation and no such fraud, but because the affidavits proving them were not submitted, as was alleged, within twenty-four hours of the closing of the polls. They would have liked to prove the latter, but they would have objected stoutly to taking evidence as to the former.

Again, take the repeated assertion of the Democratic objectors, that "it was not denied before the Commission that the action of the Returning Board was in violation of the Constitution and laws of the State of Louisiana." Not only was this denied before the Commission, but every particular in which the action of the board was alleged to be in violation of the Constitution and the laws of Lousiana was carefully reviewed; the law bearing upon it was cited; and the Commission distinctly decided and reported against the allegation. The fact is, that every step the Democrats take toward impugning the fairness of the Commission only plunges them deeper into contradictions.

But if the objections to the action of the Commission are violent, ill-considered, and inconsistent with the truth, the course of the Democrats in arbitrarily delaying the count is wholly without excuse. The recesses taken on Saturday until yesterday, and yesterday till to-day, had no other purpose than to obstruct the election of the President. No other has, in reality, been seriously alleged. The pretense that time was needed to make up the objections in the Oregon case is absurd. The facts in that case were known a month ago as well as they are to-day, so far as the Democrats are likely to use them before the Commission. All the legal points in connection with it have been worked up and presented in the Senate over and over again by the Democratic Senators. There is only one point in the case, and that is the effect of WATTS' ineligibility at the time of the popular election. On that point lawyers as able and diligent and learned as are likely to appear for the Democrats before the Commission hunted up the precedents and cited them long ago. It is true that the precedents were few and weak, and that they were met by an overwhelming array of decisions in an opposite sense, but if the Democrats take a week to discover authorities that will reverse the current of American cases, they will be no better off than they now are. Equally wide of the fact is the pretense that the more conservative members of the party wish delay in order to control a factious and revolutionary minority. They made that excuse on Saturday, and they went through the form of a caucus, at which it was determined not to oppose the progress of the count by dilatory proceedings, and then yesterday the first thing done by the House was to take a recess on the motion of FERNANDO WOOD, one of the worst and most reckless of the faction that was declared to be under control. In one sense, Republicans have no interest in checking such proceedings. They will be fatal to the Democratic Party if they are carried any further. But the question is not one of partisan advantage; it is one of public welfare. The course of the Democrats is in the last degree hurtful to the country. It disturbs public confidence, encourages wicked and revolutionary passions, and discredits the nation. It is a pitiful blunder for the party guilty of it, but it is none the less disgraceful and monstrous.

EXTRADITION.

Lord Derby, it is now evident, has received more credit than he was entitled to in regard to the extradition treaty and the reported willingness of the British Government to amend and enforce it. He has not repented of the blunder which subordinated treaty obligations to the restrictions of a statute subsequently enacted, nor has he indicated any change of position which could justify the United States in reopening negotiations on the subject. The essential preliminary to any amendment of the treaty is a literal fulfillment of the covenants embodied in the treaty as it stands, and we now know that the praise accorded to the British Minister for an alleged compliance with the requests of the authorities at Washington was misplaced. He and his colleagues adhere to an interpretation of duty which this country cannot recognize, and there the matter rests, and will rest until Lord Derby changes his mind or makes room for a successor less fettered by the technicalities of a law which has no legitimate bearing upon the provisions of the treaty.

The dilemma thus produced assumes its worst form in the suspension of arrangements for the reciprocal surrender of criminals between this country and Canada. The obstacles and contingencies which minimize the mischief of the present state of things as between the United States and Britain are inoperative in the case of Canada. A few hours' start enables criminals to cross the line which separates the two countries across the continent, and once on the other side they are safe. The months which have elapsed since Lord Derby resolved to shelter WINSLOW and other runaway thieves have been prolific of incidents which are as injurious as they are discreditable. Numbers of criminals have found safety in Canada, while quite as many Canadian offenders have evaded punishment by crossing to the United States. Now and then there has been imminent risk of trouble in consequence of pursuit beyond the border and the seizure of a criminal without caring for formalities. If in these instances international entanglements have not arisen, it has been because the Canadian officials have deplored the inoperative condition of the treaty, and have been disposed to stretch authority in order that extradition might not wholly cease. They realize the evils involved in the lapse of a treaty which, in some shape, is essential to the maintenance of friendly relations between conterminous countries, and they have pressed upon the British Ministry the desirableness of some arrangement between the Dominion and the United States if a larger measure be not found practicable.

The performance of this task formed one of the objects of a mission to London undertaken some months ago by the Canadian Minister of Justice, whose report on the subject has just been laid before the Ottawa Legislature. It is impossible to go through this document and the correspondence accompanying it without a feeling of wonder at the timid, hesitating, half-apologetic way in which a very able man is constrained by his surroundings to plead the cause of the confederated provinces as against the overshadowing authority of the Crown. In connection with another subject—namely, the instructions and powers of the Governor General as the representative of the Queen—he seems to have chafed under the restraint imposed upon him. The force of some of his propositions is almost wasted by the diluted phrases in which they are stated. Thus, he reminds Lord Carnarvon, the Colonial Secretary, of the magnitude of the Dominion, the diversity of its interests, the freedom to which its people are accustomed, the powers with which representative institutions have invested them, and having in this manner laid the foundation of a really strong demand, he contents himself with suggesting that such a people, so situated, should be dealt with "in a manner very different from that which might be fitly adopted with reference to a single and comparatively small and young colony." The same characteristic is still more apparent in the memoranda and letters relating to extradition. One would have thought that a man like Mr. BLAKE—a lawyer of repute and the head of the department to which, so far as the Dominion is concerned, extradition cases must necessarily be referred—would be taken into the confidence of the British Government and allowed some voice in the discussion of its plans. Perhaps a remark which occurs parenthetically in his report, to the effect that he was "unable to adopt the conclusions of the British Government," may have cost him some official courtesies. At any rate, the fact is clear that he was kept in the dark as to the negotiations which he was led to believe were going on, and that the alternative he proposed in the interest of Canada was not accorded the consideration it deserved.

Mr. BLAKE'S statement of his views, brief and imperfect as it is, is conclusive as to the substantial agreement which exists between the Governments at Ottawa and Washington, both as to the pretensions which resulted in the suspension of the Ashburton treaty and the particulars in which the treaty itself should be amended. Not only does he sustain the interpretation upheld by Mr. FISH, but he assails on their merits "some of the stringent restrictions of the British Extradition act of 1870," and he argues that, taking the peculiar situation of Canada into account, many crimes should be embraced in the new arrangement which are not included in even recent treaties. He adds that the members of the Gladstone Administration whom he met acquiesced in his opinions upon these points—a proof, if any were needed, that the causes of the present suspension of the treaty will not outlast Lord Derby's possession of power.

The suggestion of the Canadian Minister to which we have referred is, that if a revival and amendment of the treaty be not at present possible, some temporary arrangement shall be entered into by which Canada may be left free to legislate for the evils which operate in common in the Dominion and the United States. The concession sought is so obviously reasonable that it should have been granted without hesitation, or, if not promptly granted, should be pressed upon the British Government with more positiveness than Mr. BLAKE appears to have displayed. It is, in truth, the proper solution of the extradition question, so far as it relates to this country and the Canadian Provinces. Our interests and theirs are in this matter identical, and there ought to be no difficulty in protecting them. Unlike reciprocity, the question is not incumbered by British home considerations. Lord Derby may deem it necessary to exact from Canada the sacrifice of an important trade for the benefit of Yorkshire manufacturers, but he cannot urge any objection to an arrangement enabling Americans and Canadians to provide for the mutual surrender of fugitive criminals. Of course, the initiative must be taken by Canada. Mr. BLAKE has the reputation of being a man of courage, as well as a man of ideas, and having realized the futility of dancing attendance in Downing street, he may usefully exemplify the folly and injustice of attempting to regulate the affairs of four millions of people in accordance with the traditions of the Colonial Office. Extradition is a good subject to begin with.

JOHN CHINAMAN AGAIN.

It is possible that the periodical cry of the Californian against John Chinaman may be renewed when there shall come a lull in national politics. But at present, for some reason, the so-called "anti-coolie" party in the Golden State is silent concerning the danger of an immediate and overwhelming invasion from Asia. Discussion of the main question, like the maltreatment of the mild-eyed Mongolian, is always in order. The publication of an uncommonly candid and well-written article on the subject in Scribner's Magazine for March will be sure to excite the combativeness of those who never speak of the Chinese immigrants in less portentous terms than "unclean hordes" and "servile barbarians." The writer in question, who appears to be thoroughly informed concerning his subject, does not readily accept the propositions advanced by those who urge that the exigency is so great that Congress must interpose to save the land from a ruinous influx of Asiatic immigrants. The complainants say that the emigration from China to California is enforced, and that the immigrants are practically slaves, that the labor of these people is brought into unfair competition with white labor, and that the Chinese are themselves so vile as to debase and corrupt society. In various modifications, these three objections are made to do duty in all arguments against Chinese immigration.

The reticence of the Chinese in America is probably the cause of the wide-spread misapprehension concerning their interior management and the motives of their migration. But, as the magazine writer above quoted points out, it is strange that, in all the agitation relating to their movement, not a single instance of enforced emigration from China to the United States has ever been exposed. United States Consuls and agents who have gone to China fully believing that the emigrants are bondmen or coolies, have failed to report any case in which their opinions have been justified. Nor does it seem likely that the Chinese officials, whose natural prejudices are against emigration of any kind, would sanction a wholesale deportation which would annually reduce thousands of Chinese to bondage. Minister SEWARD, after fourteen years' experience at the treaty ports and Pekin, declares: "This emigration has been entirely voluntary in its character." Mr. S. WELLS WILLIAMS, United States Secretary of Legation in Pekin, who is undoubtedly the best informed foreign observer of Chinese affairs now living, writes that it is well known "that emigrants go from Hong Kong, and coolies from Macao." There is a law of Congress forbidding the transport of coolies in American ships, under severe penalties; and their deportation is expressly contrary to the provisions of the Burlingame treaty, against which the "anti-coolie" demagogues of California continually declaim. It should be said that the coolie trade of Macao is, or was, in the hands of the Portuguese, and that it was carried on for the benefit of a few of the South American States and Cuba. Not one coolie was ever landed on the soil of the United States.

As for the "outnumbering of the white population," to which Pacific coast orators call attention in such distressful accents, facts and figures show its absurdity. The California address to Congress estimated the total population of the State at 800,000, and that of San Francisco at 250,000. The number of Chinese in the State was put at 200,000, and in San Francisco at 75,000. This gives a proportion of Chinese to white of about one-fourth of the whole population. It is not exactly "overwhelming." The records of the San Francisco Custom-house from 1848 to 1868 show a total Chinese immigration of 108,471. During the same period, according to these records, 45,887 Chinese returned to their native land, leaving an excess of about 64,000. According to the report of the Bureau of Statistics, the immigration from 1868 to 1873 was 43,715, giving a total of 107,715 Chinese remaining in the country July 1, 1873. These figures, the trustworthiness of which cannot be successfully assailed, show that the Californians grossly exaggerate the number of Chinese in their State when they put it at 200,000. No allowance is here made for a considerable migration to adjacent States and Territories, and none for the natural decrease by death. The birth-rate among the Chinese in America is practically nil. If the people are as loathsome as described, their death-rate must be enormous. No white man is ever adequately punished for killing a Chinaman.

It is childish to complain that any competing class in trade has such an advantage over another class that legislation must interfere to equalize matters. Yet this is precisely what is asked of Congress in the case of the Chinese. Because the Chinese immigrants carry on their simple mechanical labors at a less cost than another class, it is seriously proposed to drive them out of the country, and make their return impossible. But it should not be forgotten that these despised laborers do add something to the wealth of the country besides the products of their hands. In 1861, according to the report of a Legislative commission, the Chinese in California expended the following amounts: $500,000 in duties at the San Francisco Custom-house; $562,683 for freights and passages from China; $370,000 for rents and storage; $2,164,273 for State taxes and licenses; more than $5,000,000 for American products bought in California, and more than $5,000,000 for water-rates, mining-claims, and other items. This respectable total of nearly $14,000,000 should not be left out of sight when people discuss the proposition that "the Chinese send more money out of the country than they spend in it."

The complaint that the Chinese are a vicious and degrading class is even less worthy of serious consideration than any heretofore preferred. The memorial of the Six Companies very tersely put the case when it said that the Chinese neither desired nor attempted to change the existing order of things in politics or religion, opened no whisky-shops for the poisoning of their fellow-beings, and never evaded the payment of their taxes, duties, rents, or debts. The plea that the Chinese are breeders of disease, contagious or otherwise, is unfounded and unproved by any evidence whatever. When an attempt has been made to prevent the landing of Chinese women of the baser sort, San Francisco lawyers defeated the head men of the Six Companies and brought the women on shore in triumph. That Chinese immigration has objectionable features is undeniable. But it is clear that these objections have been enormously exaggerated, and that the whole question is popularly regarded through a false medium.

THE CITY'S TAX BURDEN.

RECEIPTS.

From taxes		$30,289,038
From revenue bonds of 1876	$17,012,718
From other revenue bonds	4,527,933
From other loans	14,468,596	36,009,207
Other sources		15,858,412

EXPENDITURES.

Debt redemption on account of sinking fund	5,437,389
Interest payments on account of sinking fund	2,064,095
Redemption of revenue bonds of 1875	21,146,600
Redemption of assessment bonds	3,897,800
Redemption of more permanent bonds	7,847,403	49,650,258
State taxes	*$7,750,000
Other expenditures		24,501,177
Total expenditures		$83,408,349

*Of this actual payment made within the year, $2,023,725 belonged to another year, leaving $5,726,275 as the City's share of State taxes for that year.

The following is a statement in still more condensed form, compared with items as nearly corresponding as we can make them, in the case of London, the figures for that city being from Mr. GOSCHEN'S report on local taxation:

Dues, fees, &c	1,564,193	1,940,510
Miscellaneous	14,294,219	6,368,945
Total	$82,156,657	$41,133,415
New works	$4,026,902	$13,159,005
Debt repayment	38,349,192	4,112,780
General purposes	29,731,189	21,096,475

It is proper to state that in the last item of London expenditures is included $277,230 on account of interest and debt reduction, and that the items other than taxes, loans, interest, and debt reduction, are separated somewhat vaguely in the New-York column, but correspond as nearly to the analogous (unseparated) items in the London accounts as we can make them. It should also be noted that the receipts from the sale of revenue bonds and the disbursements on account of their redemption swell the total of the annual account in a way that is apt to be misleading. Revenue bonds are issued year after year in anticipation of the tax payments in the Fall, and are paid off when these payments furnish the means to liquidate them. Were the taxes of a given year made payable when its expenditures begin, there would be no necessity for this perpetually recurring temporary debt. The debt of London appears from the interest payment to have been between forty and fifty millions—perhaps about the latter—in 1869; that of New-York was forty-eight millions at the same time. London has certainly not grown in any such ratio as New-York in eight years in respect to debt, revenue, and expenditures, and hence the difference between the two cities in these particulars cannot be considered largely covered by the difference in the dates of comparison; furthermore, London is now, and probably was in 1869, three times as large as New-York. The reader can therefore be left to draw his own inferences from the fact that New-York had in 1869 a debt about as large as that of London, and has now a debt more than double, and her expenditure apparently double, and certainly one-half greater than that of the larger city in 1869.

Every City official stands ready to prove that he already uses an economy amounting to parsimony, and that he has not an employe who can be spared without detriment to the service; the apparent uselessness of his work is due to the scantiness of his funds, and the economizer must attack the other places. But if retrenchment is to be made anywhere, it must be made somewhere, and inasmuch as every official cries out "anywhere but here," it must be made in spite of objections. Every City employe may be convinced that the debt and expenses are too high, but not the less will he cling to his place and all his salary. To call upon any official, subordinate or chief, for voluntary aid in retrenchment, or for any information as to where it can be made, is simply inviting self-sacrifice and wasting time. If any retrenchment is made, the tax-payers must themselves select places for it, and then drive it in, no matter how those who are touched resist it. And that they will resist it, unitedly, savagely, and indefatigably is so perfectly natural and certain that we again warn the public that the work of reform is no child's play, and is not to be done by passing resolutions or holding informal conferences.

As reported in the official journal, the employes on the City pay-roll are now, 2,611, just 11 less than a year ago; the number of policemen, exclusive of officers, 2,120, a decline of 18; firemen, 718, an increase of 68; total, 5,449, a net increase of 39. The unnamed laborers and others swell the total list of City employes to about 10,000. The following is a schedule of employes and aggregate salaries in the several departments, the former taken from the official lists, and the latter from the final estimate of expenditures for the present year.

Legislative Department, (Common Council)	36	$109,000
Executive Department, (Mayor, &c.)	22	49,000
Finance Department, (8 bureaus)	151	235,000
Law Department, (3 bureaus)	43	117,876
Department Public Works, (10 bureaus)	297	100,000
Department of Parks	148	135,000
Department of Buildings, (5 bureaus)	73	72,500
Health Department	89	128,072
Police Department	658	3,202,400
Fire Department, (7 bureaus)	128	1,041,670
Department Taxes and Assessment, (2 bureaus)	55	113,600
Board of Education	41	2,700,000
College of the City	..	140,000
Judiciary	377	1,011,800
Dock Department, (3 bureaus)	88	85,000
Board of Excise	27	42,000
County Clerk's office	24	40,725
Surrogate's office	36	49,000

TALMAGE AND MORRISSEY.

Mr. TALMAGE remarked a few weeks ago that his sermons are frequently reported with much inaccuracy, and that on one occasion a reporter deliberately invented an entire sermon, and procured its publication upon the pretext that it had been delivered by the eloquent arms and legs of the Tabernacle acrobat. Of course, Mr. TALMAGE did not point out where and when this false sermon was printed, and there are wicked persons who maintain that it would be impossible for him to do so for the reason that the alleged reporter and his forged sermon were the offspring of TALMAGE'S imagination. It is shocking to think that any man could be depraved enough to doubt Mr. TALMAGE'S word; but, alas, this is a wicked world, and there is more than one abandoned wretch who would prefer some one else's bond to Mr. TALMAGE'S word.

This ingenious method of avoiding responsibility for a peculiarly atrocious sermon by asserting that it was falsely reported will, perhaps, be used by Mr. TALMAGE when he is summoned before a jury to answer the charge of threatening the life of Hon. JOHN MORRISSEY. Last Sunday Mr. TALMAGE is reported to have said that he "wished to GOD Mr. MORRISSEY was dead." Of course, he may deny having said any such thing, and may assert that the reporters who furnished reports of his sermon for several of the newspapers of the following day were in a conspiracy to defame him. He will have to prove this, however, by unimpeachable testimony, and until he does prove it, the public is fully justified in believing that the reports of his sermon were disgustingly true.

There is no doubt that Mr. MORRISSEY has his faults, though he has never been charged with caricaturing religion and striving to bring the pulpit into contempt. Still, it does not follow that, because he is an objectionable person, he can be killed with impunity. He has a right to life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness until some competent court decides that he has forfeited these rights, and the public will not calmly stand aside and permit Mr. TALMAGE to kill him, in order to gratify a dislike of gamblers. There are thousands of persons who dislike vulgarity, ignorance, and profanity in the pulpit; but were any of their number to assassinate Mr. TALMAGE, the law would not hesitate to avenge the murdered acrobat.

When Mr. TALMAGE publicly wishes that Mr. MORRISSEY were dead, he is probably aware of the meaning of his words. To wish that MORRISSEY were dead with all that death in his case would—in the estimation of TALMAGE—imply, is a remarkably comprehensive curse, since it includes the joint and several destruction of the body and soul of that distinguished Democrat. It is not to be expected that TALMAGE should know that cursing is a habit of which no gentleman is guilty, but he surely ought to be aware that it is an offense against Christian morality. TALMAGE'S profanity, however, will probably be overlooked, in view of the graver nature of his threat against Mr. MORRISSEY'S life. When a man publicly proclaims that he wishes another man dead, the murderous nature of his avowal cannot be misunderstood. It is to be expected that he will seize the first opportunity to convert his wicked wish into a bloody reality. Thus, to openly wish that a particular man were dead is justly held to be equivalent to a threat to kill him, and were Mr. MORRISSEY to be found dead to-morrow, with an expression of acute suffering on his face, suspicion would at once point to TALMAGE, and he would have to answer the charge of having slain that stalwart statesman with one of his most deadly sermons.

It was undeniably weak in TALMAGE to invite the attention of the Police by proclaiming his criminal desires in connection with Mr. MORRISSEY. Perhaps a tight boot chafed his alleged mind, or perhaps he sprained his ankle while delivering one of his most eloquent passages. Either one of these causes may have irritated him to such a point that he temporarily lost his self-control, and used the wicked and indiscreet language for which he may yet be compelled to answer. It is a great pity that he did not confine himself to simple profanity. Many a man has sworn roundly when irritated by a tight boot, and though such a course cannot be approved, it nevertheless does not demand the attention of a Grand Jury. TALMAGE, however, complicated his profanity with an implied threat upon the life of Mr. MORRISSEY, which the latter cannot, in justice to himself and the community, permit to pass unnoticed. TALMAGE must be bound over to keep the peace, and if he is caught in the neighborhood of Mr. MORRISSEY'S house with a sermon concealed upon his person, he should be promptly indicted for an attempt to kill with force and legs.

No one will imagine that TALMAGE intends to waylay MORRISSEY with a pistol, knife, bludgeon, or other carnal weapon. He will use his favorite and cruel weapon, a sermon. If he can lure Mr. MORRISSEY into a room furnished with a large chandelier, from which he can swing by his hands, he will drive his unhappy victim into a corner with the sweep of his far-reaching legs, and preach him to death with remorseless energy. Humanity shudders at the thought of such a crime. Whatever Mr MORRISSEY may be, he has not deserved such a fate as this, and the community would be irretrievably disgraced were such a crime to be consummated. Every citizen is entitled to protection, and if the Police, after TALMAGE'S open avowal, fail to keep a close watch upon him, they will be grossly negligent, and will have to share the responsibility of whatever violent and lawless act he may venture to commit.

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR.

NEW-YORK'S WATER FRONT.

I see that some of the strong men of New-York are trying to see what is the proper width for West street to help the business of New-York and prevent Baltimore and other villages running away with it. The opinion seems to be divided between 200 and 250 feet. Now, it strikes me that they are both alike in one thing, that they go on the supposition that the furthest way around is the shortest way home. Why not save the expense of handling by putting the stores on the bulkhead and the street where the stores now are, so that goods could be received from vessel to store on the one side and discharged into carts or cars on the other without the loss of carting across a street of any width, the wider the more expensive? Other cities who study how to save expenses in handling, by bringing cars and carts to one side and vessels to the other side of their stores, will take the business away from New-York unless she uses the experience of 1877 instead of 1777, which is the risk she seems to prefer.

THE CENTRAL PARK PARADE GROUND.

Your issue of 13th inst. contained an article relating to the bill directing the Commissioners of Parks to allow the use of the ball grounds of the Central Park for a limited number of times each year to certain bodies of the National Guard. You speak of such a use as "incompatible with the plans of those who laid it [the Park] out." The original plan of the Park contained a parade ground, as the maps show. The Commissioners requested the National Guard not to claim their privileges for two or three years, in order that the sod might become strong. Their request was acceded to; but in 1865 a section was inserted in chapter 23 of the laws of that year which the Commissioners claim prevents their allowing any military body within the Park, although it is evident the intent was different.

The bill now proposed allows the First Division and each of the three brigades, when parading as such, to use what is commonly known as the ball ground once a year. The troops can be taken to the ground by the Seventh avenue entrance without using any of the drives. Mounted troops and artillery being excluded, the sod is not likely to be defaced as much as it is by the paths cut by one game of base-ball. It may be said that the most vehement opposition to the measure comes from those interested in the proposed parade ground on the Harlem River, and which would incur an expenditure of $4,000,000 at the outset, and at least $500,000 annually for maintenance.

THE QUARANTINE MYSTERY

THE DEAD BODY FOUND IN THE OLD QUARANTINE GROUNDS FULLY IDENTIFIED—A GERMAN NAMED WILLIAM WELDSPIEL IN CUSTODY — TESTIMONY SHOWING THAT HE WAS KATY'S LOVER AND PROBABLE SEDUCER—FACTS REGARDING THE GIRL'S CAREER—THE MANNER OF HER DEATH NOT YET DISCOVERED.

The identity of the young woman whose body was found on the Quarantine grounds at Staten Island a week ago Sunday has finally been determined. She is now known to have been named Kate A. Reidel whose code of morals was not at all rigid. The main points of the story told by George Dyckman, the young German, at the inquest on Saturday evening, have been verified. On Sunday morning the Mrs. Wiener who, Katy Reidel told Dyckman, was her aunt was found at her residence, No. 134 Hester street. Through information given by her a man named Weldspiel was arrested. He confessed that he had known a young girl named Katy Reidel. He did not believe that the girl he knew was the deceased, but willingly accompanied his custodians to the Richmond County House, near Egbertville, Staten Island, to view the body of the poisoned woman. The party reached the Poor-house at 11 o'clock on Sunday night, and in the darkness went to the hut where the remains of the dead girl lay. The prisoner was nervous during the drive to the place, but at the entrance to the hut became almost powerless from terror. He repeatedly exclaimed "Oh! if it is Kate it will kill me." Then he would add, as if with the hope to reassure himself, "No; it can't be her." He entered the hut with faltering steps and glanced, as if in dread, around the room, dimly lighted up by the rays of a lantern carried by Keeper McCormick, of the Poor-house. There was nothing in the apartment but the plain pine box in which lay the remains of the dead girl. He did not look at the coffin for a few seconds, but stood irresolutely near the door-way. When he first gazed at the face of the corpse he said, without hesitation, "It is not Katy." The changes in the appearance of the face since the discovery of the body were explained to him, but he persisted that the corpse was not Katy Reidel's. He examined the teeth and hands of the dead girl, and then insisted that he had not known her in life. He described the clothing of the girl he had known, and they proved to be exactly similar to the garments found upon the deceased. He remained firm in his declaration that she was not Katy Reidel. Suddenly, however, he acted as if stricken with some fearful thought. He pressed his temples and paced the floor excitedly. Then he stopped suddenly, seized the hand of Keeper McCormick which held the lantern, and held it up so that the light streamed over the pallid face of the corpse, and, for a moment, stood looking into the coffin, with a wild expression upon his now haggard features. A moment more and he threw his arms up and sobbed, then cried out as he flung himself upon the coffin, "Yes, it is Katy. Oh, my God! Oh, my God!" He lay upon the coffin for five minutes moaning and muttering unintelligibly. When he arose, he stood rigid for a moment. Then he beckoned to the bystanders to approach, and when they had placed themselves around the bier, he drew up one of her hands, and, after kissing it, showed them that the fingers were flattened as if the girl had been in the habit of placing them in her mouth. After looking at them for a few seconds he again threw himself upon the coffin all the while sobbing as if his heart would break. Again he arose, and standing stiffly, he said with a defiant air: "No, it is not Katy; it cannot be." He once more moaned aloud, and fell upon the corpse, pressing his lips upon its mottled cheeks, and crying out, "Oh, mine Gott, mine Gott, Katy, you have killed my life; you have killed my life." Then he paced the hut like a maniac, begging the officers to lock him in alone with the corpse. After much entreaty by Police Capt. Blake and the keeper of the poor-house, he consented to leave the hut, and return to Stapleton.

Weldspiel is a heavy-built German, with a flaxen mustache and goatee. His face is forbidding in character, as his eyes are deep-set, and his brow is marked with corrugations. His whole appearance is that of a man of very strong passions—one whom it would take some time to anger, but who when excited would pursue a desperate scheme with determination and steady perseverance. The Police keep him closely guarded and permit no conversation with him, but it is understood that he declares his belief that Katy Reidel was murdered, but does not know any person who had reason to get her out of the way. Weldspiel is a piano-maker by trade, and has lately been employed by Lindermann & Brothers of this City.

The inquest over the body of the poisoned girl was resumed last evening by Coroner Dempsey in the Police Station at Stapleton. The place was crowded uncomfortably.

The testimony was very voluminous, but interesting, and reveals that a very remarkable relation existed between Weldspiel and the deceased.

THE TESTIMONY.

Mrs. Henrietta Wiener, of No. 134 Hester street, in this City, was the first witness examined. She testified that she knew the deceased; she came to her house with a man named Weldspiel, and was represented as his wife; this was in November; she did not remain at the house continuously, but was there at times when out of employment; she was a servant employed in private houses; Weldspiel lived in the room until the week before New Year's Day, when, as I could procure more pay for the apartment, I told him to leave; Mrs. Weldspiel told me she was married to Weldspiel in Boston, and was the mother of two children; she also told me she was pregnant, and did not want to be in that condition; she never told me she desired to produce an abortion, but she told another person in the house she would like to know of something to take; I never heard Mr. and Mrs. Weldspiel quarrel, and did not know he was jealous of her; Mrs. Weldspiel visited my house for the last time on Saturday three weeks ago; she then told me she had left her place and was living with her husband in Chrystie street.

At this juncture the prisoner, Weldspiel, was brought into the room, and the witness recognized him as the man who engaged the room in her house and lived in it with the now deceased girl. Mrs. Wiener also recognized a blue enamelled shawl-pin as one that was worn by Mrs. Weldspiel, while in her house.

Miss Adaline Wilber, a domestic in the family of Mrs. M. R. Phelps, of No. 11 Thirty-ninth street, testified that she knew a young girl named Katy Riedel, who was employed in Mrs. Phelps' house as a chamber-maid and waitress, from Dec. 28, 1876, until Jan. 27, 1877; Katy left her situation of her own accord; witness knew George Dyckman, a milkman; had been acquainted with him over five years; Katy Reidel knew George, and saw him every morning while she was in Mrs. Phelps' house; George called there several times at night, but witness did not know that he came particularly to see Katy; Miss Wilber here recognized the prisoner Weldspiel as a man who twice called upon Katy at Mrs. Phelps' house; he said he was Katy's brother, and was named Reidel; Katy, it seemed to witness, acted coolly toward Rieder; he never questioned her as to Katy's conduct, and she never witnessed any display of really harsh feeling on the part of Katy toward the other when Katy left Mrs. Phelps' house she told witness she was going to No. 134 Hester street, but the expressman said he was to take her trunk to Eldridge street; she had forgotten the number of the street; Katy told witness that the prisoner Weldspiel was her brother; that he had a family of two children; she also said she had once accompanied him to Europe, and remained there nine months; Katy never appeared to the witness to have a grief; she was always lively, and never complained of sickness; witness never believed that Reidel was really Katy's brother; Miss Wilber recognized an enamelled shawl-pin and a plain gold ring as the property of her former fellow-domestic.

George Dyckman was recalled and confronted with Weldspiel; he declared he had never seen the prisoner before; he then stated that Katy Reidel told him she had a brother living in Lewis street, and that a young man who worked in the shop with her brother, and lived in Thirty-fifth street, kept company with her; she never told him the name of the young man.

After some further questioning Dyckman was discharged from custody, the Coroner thanking him for the information he had given, throwing light upon the career of Katy Reidel.

Gottleib Rathjid, of No. 167 Eldridge street, testified that the prisoner Weldspiel came to his house on Dec. 31 1876, and hired a room; he gave his name as Reidel, and said he wished the room for his individual use; three weeks later Reidel brought to the house a young woman, who he said was his sister; the two slept together in the room, but Reidel ate his meals in another place; Reidel called the young woman Katy, at 5 o'clock P. M. on Saturday, Feb. 10, Reidel and the woman left the house together, and the former said they were going to Newark, where his sister expected to get work; at 6:30 o'clock Reidel returned to the house and said he had left his sister on the boat, and that as he had a head-ache she told him to go back, and she could find her way alone; ever since that time Reidel had resided at witness' house; when he went away with Katy he had side whiskers; he shaved them off last Saturday; witness first heard of Katy's death on Monday morning; from the fact that Reidel and Katy slept in one room he made up his mind that the statements they were brother and sister was untrue; Reidel slept in witness' house the night of the day he escorted Katy away as if to go to Newark. Witness gave him a light to retire with, and heard him cough frequently during the night. He left the house at 9 o'clock on Sunday morning, the 11th inst., and returned at 2 o'clock P. M.; in the evening he played cards with witness; Katy was never sick for more than a day while in witness' house, and she never gave evidence of being pregnant.

Peter Wohlbert, of No. 163 Lewis street, testified that he knew Weldspiel, and had known him since November, 1875; Weldspiel came to his house with a child whom he wished to have boarded; witness kept the child for three months, during which time Weldspiel visited it almost every night; the child was taken away, and very soon afterward died in a house on Second avenue; after this Weldspiel told witness that he and Mrs. Reidel were married, that the child was theirs, and that they had another child, which was born in Pennsylvania; Katy Reidel visited the family of witness for the last time just after New-Year's Day, Mrs. Clementina Weldspiel, of No. 63 Columbia street, New-York, testified: I am married to William Weldspiel, and am the mother of six children, three of whom are alive and are now in the Nursery on Staten Island; I was at the nursery myself for two weeks; I do not live with my husband; he is boarding, but he supports me; we broke up house-keeping last July; I spoke to him the last time on Sunday morning last, when he called upon me at the residence of Mr. Betier; my husband gave me money for my rent on Saturday last; witness saw her husband every day since she has been in New-York; she was married to Weldspiel in Boston in 1869; she could not remember the name of the clergyman who performed the ceremony of marriage; she arrived in Boston in 1869, and made the acquaintance of several families, among whom was one named Reidel; witness came to New-York from Boston with two children; her husband preceded her, and having procured work, wrote for her to come on; a short time after she came to New-York Katy Reidel came on from Boston, and procured a situation in a family; she called on witness several times; witness and family removed to Philipsburg, Penn.; at the railway depot Katy Reidel met them; shortly after she and her family arrived in Phillipsburg, Katy Reidel followed them and was installed in their household; there Katy was delivered of a child; she never said who its father was; it lived only seven weeks, and was buried at Philipsburg; there was no trouble in witness' family resulting from the birth of Katy's child; Katy was born in Boston; witness lived in Boston for several years, and while there Katy Reidel was put out to her by her mother to act as a nurse in her family; she was then about 11 years old; witness went to Germany and took Katy with her; her husband came to Germany and accompanying them back to this country; they returned to Boston, but after a time her husband got out of work and came on to New-York to procure it; he was not compelled to flee from Boston; she never told her landlady that her husband had to leave Boston to avoid arrest, and that they broke up housekeeping so as to prevent officers from seeking her husband; she never was in Chicago in her life; never condemned her husband for paying attentions to Katy; she was only a child, she thought, though she knew she had a child in her house; witness never knew Katy had a gentleman friend, though she told her often about her "fellers;" witness never knew that her husband kept a room for Katy; did know, however, that he had a room at Mrs. Wainer's, No. 134 Hester street; she slept there several nights last December, but never saw Mrs. Wainer, and she never saw witness; the last time witness saw Katy Reidel was in August, 1874; she then told her she was married; never told any person that her husband had deserted and refused to support her.

Mrs. Weldspiel was here asked if she knew Peter Wohlbert, and he was told to stand so that she could see him. She replied that she did not know him. He said he never saw her before.

Mrs. Weldspiel then stated that the reason she and her husband lived apart and had their children in the Nursery was that Weldspiel was out of work all through the Winter of 1875-6, and they had to sell their furniture for money to live.

A controversy arose just here between some of the jurymen and the Coroner about the latter's method of examination. The jurymen claimed that the Coroner was badgering the witness, and endeavoring to force her to give answer to suit some settled theories in his mind. At its conclusion the inquest was adjourned until to-day.

George L. Ernst, who was arrested on Saturday on suspicion of being connected with the death of the woman whose body was found in the Quarantine ground at Staten Island, was brought before Justice Duffy at the Tombs Police Court yesterday by Detective Sally, who informed the court there was no evidence against him. Justice Duffy questioned the prisoner closely as to his knowledge of the woman, and Ernst protested his entire ignorance of everything connected with the case, and was discharged.

COMBINATION OF DISTILLERS.

CHICAGO, Feb. 19.—A combination of the distillers of the entire country, embracing nearly every important establishment in the United States, has been formed for the purpose of self-protection, and for pooling their earnings. Their plan is to deposit the sum of 10 cents for every gallon of taxable spirits that is manufactured, and to divide the sum thus accruing semi-monthly among all distillers in proportion to the capacity of their several distilleries. It is immaterial whether any still is in operation or not, the proprietor receives his proportion of this deposit the same as though he was running. It is expected that in this way the market price of whiskey will be raised to a figure at which money can be made. The smaller distillers will be glad to form such an alliance, as at the present rate they are actually losing money, and the larger distillers keep prices down below their lowest rates.

BUSINESS FAILURES IN OHIO.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 19.—Madison W. Jones, Aaron C. Johnson, and Isaiah Brown, all of Fayette County, Ohio, filed petitions of voluntary bankruptcy in the United States Court to-day. The following are their liabilities and assets: Jones, liabilities about $34,000; assets, $14,000; Johnson, liabilities, $80,000; assets, $31,000; Brown, liabilities, $38,000; assets, $21,000.

SUSPENSION OF A CHICAGO SAVINGS BANK

CHICAGO, Feb. 19.—The City Savings Bank has closed its doors. Its deposits were about $40,000. The examiner on behalf of the creditors, who went through the papers and books this afternoon, says it will pay nearly if not quite dollar for dollar.

OBITUARY NOTES.

Judge H. W. Williams, of the Pennsylvania Supreme Court, died in Pittsburg yesterday afternoon of heart disease.

Information has been received of the death of Mrs. Minerva Rodgers, widow of Commodore Rodgers, and mother of Rear Admiral John Rodgers, of the United States Navy, at Rock Island, Ill., on Saturday, Feb. 17, at the age of 92.

HAMPTON'S LETTER TO THE TWO CANDIDATES.

Judge S. M. Boone, of Winchester, Ky., recently wrote to Wade Hampton in regard to his letter to Hayes and Tilden, and received the following reply:

COLUMBIA, Jan. 30, 1877.

MY DEAR SIR: You owe me no apology, but one is rather due from me to you, and I hope that you will find it in the fact that I scarcely have a moment of leisure. My correspondence has been neglected of late, and my friends must attribute this to the constant pressure of public business. I write now merely to thank you for your letter, and to say that you apprehended my motive in writing the duplicate letters correctly. I only desired to serve a patriotism which would demand that the Constitution and the laws should be respected by installing the candidate who was legally declared elected, peacefully. The Electoral bill proceeds on the identical idea expressed by myself, and our Democratic friends in Congress have placed both candidates for the Presidency on the same footing. I have never doubted Mr. Tilden's election, but my opinion can do him no harm. Thanking you for the interest you have shown, I am, very respectfully, yours, WADE HAMPTON.

HAWAIIAN MINISTER TO WASHINGTON.

Speaking of the resignation of Hon. Elisha H. Allen as Chief Justice of the Hawaiian Islands, and his appointment as Minister Resident of that Government at Washington, the Honolulu Gazette says: "He will leave as soon as he may be able to close up his official labors here—probably in February or March next. The necessity of having a representative at Washington is becoming more apparent every month, as questions arising from the treaty are constantly being raised, which, unless settled at once, may lead to controversy. There are also duties in the Eastern United States known to be opposed to the treaty, who may seek to terminate it by legislative action in Congress. These contingencies can be more effectually met by having the right man on the spot. The expense attending such a mission ought not to be thought of in view of the great benefits conterged by the treaty. The last Legislature voted a salary of $4,000 a year for this purpose; but the least sum necessary to maintain an officer in his position, considering the expenses of living in that city, is $5,000, and we trust the Legislature will increase the pay to this figure at least."

LATEST NEWS BY CABLE.

ADDITIONAL TROOPS STATIONED ALONG THE DANUBE — REPORTED CONCLUSION OF PEACE WITH SERVIA—REPLY OF THE POWERS TO GORTSCHAKOFF'S CIRCULAR.

LONDON, Feb 19.—A dispatch from Rustchuk, Bulgaria, says: "The number of Turkish troops quartered in the villages along the Danube has increased from 60,000, on the 31st of January, to 75,000. The garrison of Rutschuk numbers 12,000 men."

LONDON, Feb. 20.—A special dispatch from Berlin says it is reported there that the conclusion of peace between Turkey and Servia is now assured. Another Berlin dispatch says it is stated in diplomatic quarters that the powers have already confidently communicated to Russia the substance of the replies they intend to make to Prince Gortschakoff's circular. All have agreed to abstain from any interference until the Porte has proved itself incapable of carrying through the promised reforms. It is reported that Russia, on her part, will inform the powers of her intentions and of the circumstances which make it impossible for her to forego immediately all interference; but she will give no indication of her eventual isolated action.

A dispatch from Vienna says the report is current that Prince Gortschakoff has expressed his satisfaction to the Prince of Montenegro that the latter consented to send Plenipotentiaries to Constantinople, and he wished them good luck.

The Political Correspondence gives a detailed account of the strength of the Russian Army, derived from authentic sources. It substantially confirms the statements in the report from Kisheneff which appeared in the Daily News on Feb. 15, but it makes the forces even more formidable. The Russian Army south of the Caucasus, on the Asiatic frontier of Turkey, in readiness for action, numbers 115,000, and has 35 field batteries and 250 heavy siege guns.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

LONDON, Feb. 19.—Silver closed to-day at 56½d. per ounce.

Mr. Sidney Herbert, Conservative, was returned to Parliament yesterday for Wilton, defeating Mr. Norris, the Liberal candidate, by a poll of 751 to 187.

An official telegraphic dispatch from the Viceroy of India, dated Feb. 17, reports that the numbers of natives on the relief works show a further reduction of 32 000 in Madras, and 41,000 in Bombay. The prices of grain are falling in most of the Madras districts owing to large importations. In Bombay prices remain unchanged.

THE BRITISH GRAIN TRADE.

LONDON, Feb. 19.—The Mark Lane Express, in its weekly review of the corn trade, says: "Advices from the rural districts continue fairly favorable as to the condition of Winter-sown wheat, which is looking well on light lands and where it has not suffered injury from the recent floods in the southern counties. Beans are also said to be unusually forward for the time of year, and vegetation generally is rapidly advancing. Very little alteration is noted either in the quantity of English wheat marketed or the condition of samples, which, owing to the grain never having become thoroughly dry in the stack, have been damp and in inferior condition. Consequently, a further decline of 1 shilling per quarter had occurred, but farmers, as a rule, have not pressed sales. In some country markets it has been difficult to buy at the decline. The week's imports of foreign wheat into London have been moderate. Until the close of the week trade was extremely quiet, sales being effected with difficulty, although prices were not quotably lower. On Friday, however, a decided reaction set in. A steady demand was experienced from millers at improving prices, especially for the red varieties, which received most attention, owing to the scarcity of fine milling samples, and this class of wheat occasionally realized a slight advance. Politics has produced no apparent effect on trade, and the return to firmness, combined with improvement in demand, seems to result from continued short imports, with an advance in American prices, and extremely small shipments, recently advised from Atlantic ports. The inquiry for feeding stuffs has been very light throughout the week, and grinding barley, oats, and maize have given way 6 pence per quarter. With moderate arrivals at ports of call, floating cargoes of wheat have met with a steady inquiry at an improvement of 1 shilling to 2 shillings per quarter, chiefly upon red sorts. Maize has also ruled a shade steadier.

AMUSEMENTS.

THE OPERA BOUFFE.

"La Grande Duchesse" was sung at the Eagle Theatre, last evening. The performance was not of marked interest, owing to the absence of Mlle. Aimée, who was to have sung the titular part. Mlle. Aimée being indisposed, the character was taken by Mlle. Gueymard, a clever and industrious artist who, unhappily, is unequal to tasks of so trying a nature. Mlle. Gueymard got through the opera, and that is about all that can be said. M. Raoult, who has produced a much more favorable impression this season than last year, was exceedingly good as Fritz, and the other rôles were in competent hands. The Grand Duke was among the spectators.

NEW BROADWAY THEATRE.

After a week's recess, this house was reopened last evening. A performance of "Our Boys" was the attraction. Mr. Byron's neatly constructed and smartly-written comedy, which is now approaching its one thousandth representation in London, was dealt with in this place when it was made known at the Fifth Avenue Theatre, a few months ago. It requires, therefore, no extended description. Its rendering, at the New Broadway Theatre, while it failed to reproduce the English atmosphere and characteristics which endow some of the personages and scenes of "Our Boys" with an agreeable rackness of the soil, was sufficiently clever and lively to amuse the attentive spectator. Mr. Whiffin, whose speech and manner, moreover, were as suggestive of the retired British tradesman as could be wished, personated Perkyn Middlewick with much earnestness and vivacity, and created unbounded merriment. Mr. J. G. Saville portrayed with suitable elegance of bearing Talbot Champneys, and Mr. Mark Bates was becomingly simple and forcible as Charles. Mr. Lovedny was an acceptable Sir Geoffrey, and the female rôles, which were allotted respectively to Misses Annie Edmonson, Genevieve Stebbins, and Gallagher—Miss Gallagher representing "the slavey"—and to Mrs. Sol Smith, were in good hands. A pretty numerous audience enjoyed last night's performance, and was liberal of applause.

GENERAL MENTION.

Mme. Essipoff plays at Steinway Hall, this evening. She proceeds next week to California.

Mr. and Mrs. Feininger's recital of vocal and instrumental music, occurs at Chickering Hall, tomorrow evening.

Mr. F. F. Müller's concert at Chickering Hall occurs this evening. He is to have the assistance of Mrs. Kate Reed, Mrs. J. W. Lockwood, and Messrs. Fritsch, Sohst, and Arbuckle.

A Berlin dispatch to yesterday's London Post announces that the proposed repetition of Richard Wagner's "Ring of the Nibelungs" at Bayreuth will not take place this year, having been postponed on account of the impaired health of the composer.

The San Francisco Minstrels added to their programme, yesterday evening, a new extravaganza called "Our Hash House." It proved to be an exceedingly amusing, if exceedingly nonsensical, affair, and rounded off in the merriest manner imaginable a programme rich in good things, lyrical, terpsichorean, and semi-dramatic.

THE CANADIAN ELECTIONS.

OTTAWA, Feb. 19.—The Dominion Parliamentary elections to-day in South Waterloo, Ont., and Kamowraska, Quebec, resulted in the return of Masters, Ministerial candidate, and Roy, opposition.

LECTURES ON GERMAN LITERATURE.

Mr. Bayard Taylor will commence his course of lectures on German literature at 11 o'clock this morning, at Association Hall. The lectures are to be given in the daytime, in order to accommodate ladies who have taken an interest in the subject, and they will be continued on Tuesdays and Fridays of successive weeks until the course of 12 lectures is completed. The subject for to-day is "The Beginnings of German Literature."

THE FUTURE OF NEW-YORK.

LETTER IV.

Debt and taxation are a load under which New-York is staggering. Debt, State and Municipal, is placed before taxation because debt is in great part the cause of the excessive rate of taxation which is now the source of complaint, and is regarded as withering the energies and checking the growth of the City. The actual increase in the current expenses of the City in proportion to the value of the property is really not very great as compared with a period 20 years ago. For instance, in 1857 the rate of taxation for current expenses was $1.13 upon $100, and in 1876 the rate for the same purposes was $1.30 upon $100. This statement will be regarded by many as incredible, so a few figures by way of proof. The rate for 1857 for all purposes was $1.5564. From this deduct the interest upon the debt, $1,311,813, and the State tax of 1¾ mills upon the assessed value, $895,545, and it gives a rate of $1.11. In 1876 the rate for all purposes was $2.80. From this deduct the interest upon the debt, $9,503,189, and the State tax, $7,233,189, and it gives a rate of $1.30.

Now, do not let me be considered as in anywise the apologist for the current extravagance. The City debt is immense, and it is the product of extravagance, recklessness, and dishonesty. But, there it is, and it has to be met honestly and carried manfully. The State tax has been enormous, and this City has paid in the past 10 years $64,014,204 in that direction. Fortunately, it is now subsiding, and the City will pay for that charge in 1877 less than in any year since 1867. The building mania, which has cost the State so largely during the past few years, no longer prevails, and it is hoped that the good sense of the Legislature will permit no large appropriations this year. The interest upon the City debt must be paid, and for the present, at the fixed rate of interest. It is possible, however, under certain conditions, to be hereafter named, that the rate of interest may be reduced, and so that burden lightened.

There remain, then, only the current expenses of the City in which immediate or very early retrenchment is possible. Then in that direction must the knife of retrenchment be applied. Can it be done? It can. It will hurt; but so does the surgeon's knife. The body politic is in peril, in extremity, and the fact must be recognized. Resolution and courage are needed to apply this remedy, but they ought not to be wanting.

The Board of Estimate and Apportionment is the final arbiter in fixing so much of City expenses as is under local control. Legislative restrictions, so far as they relate to the minimum compensation for services should be removed, still restricting the maximum. The composition of the Board of Apportionment should be changed. The Mayor and President of the Board of Aldermen should remain, but the head of one department should not be called upon to fix the appropriation for other departments. It is an invidious duty. The gentlemen who fill those positions now will know that this suggestion is not made from any distrust of their ability or integrity. They would, I doubt not, esteem it a privilege to be released. The board should consist of five, three of whom might be selected respectively by the resident members of one year's standing of the Chamber of Commerce, the Bar Association, and the Produce Exchange and commissioned by the Mayor from among citizens who for two years preceding have been the owners of real estate of the assessed value of at least $25,000. These gentlemen should be ineligible for any local office to which a fee or salary is affixed for two years after their terms as members of this board have expired, and should be prohibited from recommending or procuring the appointment of any person to a local office during their term of office. The term of one of them should expire each year. A board so composed would give to the real estate interest the importance and control to which it is so well entitled.

The fact that this City could, as already stated, pay for a State tax in ten years the enormous sum of more than $60,000,000 from taxation—equal to more than half the City debt—is a proof of the wonderful vitality of the City; a vitality, however, which must not be too much strained or presumed upon, or a collapse may ensue. A large portion of this State tax was to meet the bounty debt, and probably none of that vast sum was for any purpose which increased the taxable resources of the City.

In the general depression which, for nearly four years, has affected every interest in the country, real estate has not escaped. Yet other investments have proved less reliable than those in real estate. The owner of unincumbered real property in this City may have reason to complain of a diminished income from rents, and of high taxes, but still his condition is far better than that of those who hold securities which have defaulted in the payment of interest, or stocks no longer paying dividends, and the capital of which has, in some cases, disappeared. The diminished compensation paid to those unemployed, and the enforced idleness of many out of employment, has led to a condensation of tenants in the one case and a total stoppage of rents, very often, in the other. That is to say, families who formerly occupied an entire house have been compelled to put themselves into half a house, and others formerly occupying half a house have been reduced to the necessity of occupying apartments, or a single floor. This process of condensation has left a good deal of property unoccupied. There probably have not been so many instances of removal to distant suburbs as in better times, as such removal is rarely a merely economic measure so far as family expenses of living are concerned.

Owing to the changes of methods in business already referred to in part, and a resulting surplus of store property, some stores remain idle, and the rents of nearly all where leases have expired have suffered reduction. Incited by the prevailing low prices for materials and labor, a good deal of building has been going on in the face of the depression in business, the owners not expecting to find occupants immediately, but deeming the temporary loss of interest upon the investment a less consideration than the advantage obtained in the very low cost of construction.

GEORGE H. ANDREWS.

I would ask leave to call attention to some statements in the article on the "State Capitol Building" in THE TIMES of the 19th. In that article, the objections raised against the present plan on account of the change introduced into the style of architecture are held as factious, because adding two additional stories in the Romanesque style on a building with two stories already completed in the Renaissance style, is a trifling matter of taste. The article then adds, that in reality the difference between Romanesque and Renaissance is slight, and many people do not know the difference even between Greek and Gothic architecture.

This last statement is unfortunately true and it is also unfortunate that a nation in which nearly every man builds or buys a house should know so little about architecture. The Romanesque is not closely allied to the Renaissance. The Romanesque flourished when Christianity overthrew pagan ideas. It continued until about the close of the eleventh century, when Gothic forms were introduced, and for nearly 300 years every public and private building in Europe bore traces of the Gothic spirit. In the fifteenth century, with the revival of the study of classical literature, came the revival of classic architecture. That revival, with the modifications required by different modes of life, has existed to the present day, under the name of the Renaissance—the born anew. Its greatest development has been in France, where the French Renaissance has almost become a distinct style. Its beauty and adaptability to modern ways can be seen in every street in Paris, and its capabilities for originality and almost scenic effect can be seen in the Louvre and in photographs of the now-destroyed Hotel de Ville.

In the Albany Capitol two stories were completed in a severe Renaissance style, that is in a style similar to the old City Hall in New-York. On these two stories, the new architects commenced to add two additional stories in the style of the American Exchange Bank on the corner of Broadway and Liberty street. When the discussion that took place in the English papers and magazines over the new law courts at Temple Bar is remembered, it seems surprising how little remark so great an architectural blunder has excited. The American Institute of Architects took the unusual step of protesting against the change, but otherwise the opposition has been more like a quarrel between the ins and outs on a big job.

The interior arrangements of the old plan might easily be improved by the new commission; but in putting one style of architecture on the top of another, the State of New-York is paying for a monument which will not be creditable either to its education or its taste in the year 1877.

GENERAL MISCELLANY.

From the Springfield (Ill.) Journal, Feb. 17.

The most notorious man in the nation to-day is William Henry Weldon, who attempted the assassination of Gov. Packard, of Louisiana, on Thursday, at the State-house, New-Orleans. Weldon used to live in Springfield, and is well known by many of our citizens, who find it almost impossible to conceive of him in the rôle of an assassin. The dispatches gave a description of Weldon, and the additional fact mentioned, that among his papers was also found a letter from Mr. G. M. Brown, formerly senior of the firm of Brown & Coleman of this city, led to some inquiry by a Journal representative, yesterday, the result of which conclusively establishes the identity of the assasin with William H. Weldon, about six years since and for two years prior, a popular clerk at Brown & Coleman's store. He will be remembered as about five feet five in height, of heavy build, ruddy complexion, dark hair and eyes, exceedingly dressy, and accustomed to wear Burnside whiskers. His Springfield career was like that of many clerks, with nothing to especially draw attention to it, if it had not been recalled by the recent tragic occurrence at New-Orleans. About eight years since, William H. Weldon first became employed at Mr. L. H. Coleman's store. He was an affable young man and polished; about 21 years of age then, and the son of a Lutheran clergyman at Bethlehem, Penn., a short distance out from Philadelphia. He proved himself an efficient clerk, the more so as he could speak German (being in fact of German descent) and speedily achieved a marked popularity among his fellow clerks, and others with whom he associated. Mr. Coleman, in conversation yesterday regarding him, spoke of Weldon as industrious and trustworthy; one who would be considered rather reliking, except for a strong liking for society, and by good looks and accomplishments Weldon was fitted to adorn society, and became quite a social favorite. Mr. Coleman finds it almost impossible to conceive of Weldon in the rôle of an assassin, for personal or opinion's sake. He cherished very strong opinions, but rarely gave utterance to them. He was an ultra, or as Mr. Coleman expresses it, even a bitter Democrat, still he very rarely gave utterance to his political views even among his most intimate friends. Perhaps the most intimate Springfield friend of Weldon's—in fact his room-mate when he lived here—is Mr. George E. Maxon, now a salesman at Herndon & Co.'s. They were fellow-salesmen at Brown & Coleman's. Two years later Weldon went to Lafayette, Ind., and later to Cincinnati, where he became salesman in W. H. Johnson & Co.'s, of which house Mr. G. M. Brown was then a partner. Mr. Maxon was also employed there with Weldon, and afterward went to Philadelphia and became connected with a white-goods house, where he was still supposed to be by his friends here, until the startling news came from New-Orleans. He corresponded with Mr. Maxon, Mr. J. M. Hibbs, and other friends here no to less than a year ago, but never mentioned any connection with the press of Philadelphia or elsewhere, and it is not believed that he was so connected. Mr. Maxon says there was nothing of bravado or recklessness about Weldon; he was in appearance and taste rather fitted for society, of which he was very fond and quite a pet, than for war. Not being addicted to drink, (in fact he was a regular church attendant while here,) his association would not naturally be with men of blood. He was, however, ambitious of distinction, and if a craving for notoriety led to the act, that he would surely get, notoriety he desired, and possibly more. Among other acquaintances of Weldon, Messrs. Hibbs, Roper, C. Wolf, Habilzel, Cashier Weber, and others pronounced him a fine fellow in every respect when here, deserving the popularity which was his. All expressed themselves as astonished when they heard of his connection with the assassination, and would as readily have suspected one of themselves. The opinion obtains among most of them that he must have been hired to do the work, and yet that he would consent at all is an occasion of surprise to them.

TERRIBLE COLLIERY EXPLOSION.

TEN LIVES LOST—THE EXPLOSIVE EFFECTS OF FOUL GAS.

A London newspaper of Feb. 8 prints the following dispatch from Bolton: "Scarcely have the inhabitants of this district recovered from the shock occasioned by the news of the disastrous fire at the Stonehill Colliery, Farnworth, by which 18 men and boys were suffocated, than they have been again startled by the occurrence of a dreadful explosion at a colliery in the neighboring township of Darcy Lever, resulting, it is to be feared, in the loss of 10 lives. The pit at which the latter catastrophe has taken place is known as Fogg's Pitt. It is situated on the banks of the Bolton and Bury Canal, and is worked by Messrs. Andrew Knowles & Sons (Limited.) There is only one shaft to the mine, the lowest workings in which, known as the Cannels, are at a depth of 320 yards. These, however, have not been in operation for some time. The upper mine was sunk to the Doe, of seven feet, and was worked at a depth of 320 yards from the pit's mouth, or 60 yards above the Cannell. In this pit some 50 men and boys were employed. The various ramifications extended for a distance of 900 yards, the number of men engaged in the remoter workings, which are situated immediately under the farm of Mr. James Edge, in Little Lever, being 14. The colliery was considered a very safe one, the ventilation, indeed, being sufficiently good to permit of the use of naked candles and even of blasting operations. The men had been at work for some hours this morning when, about 10 o'clock, those who were employed about the pit bank were alarmed by a sudden emission of smoke from the return air shaft, followed directly afterward by a signal from those below to wind up the cage. The men were quickly hoisted up, one of the last to ascend being Anselm Norris, the fireman. One and all reported that their workings were rapidly filling with smoke, but they were unable to say whether it was the result of fire or of an explosion. Two of the men, named Thomas Hindley, of Little Lever, and James Hurst, of Darcy Lever, who were among the 13 engaged on the coal mountain Edge's Farm, stated that they were alarmed by a sudden inrush of smoke, and they at once took to their heels. They declared that they had no time to warn their fellow workers, and it they had turned back even for an instant their lives would have been lost. The choke-damp overcame them rapidly for a distance of 230 yards, and when they arrived at the pit's eye they were suffering greatly from the inhalation of the sulphurous fumes. When the names of all the men came to be called over, it was found that 10 who were engaged in the furthermost workings were missing. Norris, the fireman, and nearly the whole of the miners at once descended, and on penetrating toward the spot where it was supposed the unfortunate men were lying they discovered sad evidences of the explosive effects of foul gas. In some places the roof had fallen in, while in others sapphues had been blown down. Dense smoke filled the workings in the immediate locality, thus proving beyond all question that the ignited gas had fired the coal, (which is said to be of a very combustible nature,) and so cut off from all hopes of escape any who might have survived the terrible effects of the explosion. Dangerous as it was, the men came to look at a way through the thick smoke, but all in vain, and the men were at length compelled to ascend. Meantime Mr. Peter Howcroft, manager to Messrs. Knowles & Co., had been communicated with, and information of the catastrophe having reached the neighboring collieries of Messrs. Fletcher & Sons and of the Bridgewater Trustees, their managers also hastened to the scene. An exploring party was then formed, and having provided themselves with several of Sinclair's helmet respirators, they descended the mine, with a number of the men assisted in removing the débris caused by the explosion; others sprugged the shattered roofs. Measures were taken for diverting the current of air, with the view of clearing the workings from smoke. Bricks and mortar were hastily sent down the pit, with which to erect new stoppings. Brattice cloth was laid wherever necessary, and very soon the exploring party had the satisfaction of reporting that for a distance of 800 yards from the pit's eye the workings were entirely free from foul air. Beyond that point, however, they found it impossible to penetrate, and to the poor creatures, who by this time had congregated round the pit bank, anxiously inquiring for missing husbands, sons, and brothers, but little hope could be held out that any of the unfortunate men would be found alive. Mr. Howcroft did indeed state that if the men had managed to escape into the lower workings, it was possible they might be found alive, but it was felt by all who were experienced in such matters that this was but a delusive hope.

Some of the exploring party, about 6 o'clock, had to the brought back out of the pit. They had become nearly insensible through inhaling the after-damp, and had to be lifted out of the lines. Restoratives were administered by Dr. Douglass and they recovered, but they were in such a state of exhaustion that they were not allowed to descend again. The remainder of the party were successful in proceeding 630 yards from the pit's eye. At that point they discovered a pony, dead."

FEARFUL CRIME IN FRANCE.

The Paris correspondent of a London newspaper writes: "Never were more crimes committed in this country than at present. Every day has its scandal or worse. A place called St. Brieux was the scene of the last drama, the chief part being played by the manager of Le Progres des Cotes du Nord, named Le Foll, who had served in the Army, and been decorated with the Legion of Honor. A short time ago he was sentenced to a month's imprisonment for insulting the Army in his journal, and on being released from durance vile he accused a Capt. Wurtz of improper intimacy with his wife, an American FLOUR AND MEAL—A fairly active movement was reported in State and Western Flour at generally firm though in instances somewhat irregular prices. The export call was mainly from buyers for the West Indies and South America, from which sources the inquiry was mostly for city Mill Extras, and the better class of Winter Wheat Extra. Under the limited trade the demand was very light. Home trade dealings were comparatively liberal in Minnesota Extras, straight and patent, more than usually so in desirable brands of patent, values on which were fully an quoted. Most other grades were less active on the basis of our quotations.....Sales have been reported since our last of 14,750 bbls. of all grades, including about 4,000 bbls. of Rye Flour at $5 20@$5 75 for Sour Flour at $4 50@$6 75; poor to strictly fancy No. 2 at $4 40@$5 20, chiefly at $4 75@$5 for good to choice; $4 50@$4 65 for common to fair; ordinary to unsound Superfine Western, $3 60@$3, mainly at $5 75@$5 90, with fancy brands held higher; poor to good Extra State, $5 95@$6 20; good to choice do. at $6 20@$6 50; City Mills Extra, shipping grades, for West Indies, on the basis of $7 75@$7 90 for very choice to fancy do. for South America, at $8@$8 50 for very good to fancy; do. for the English markets, (of the grade of standard Extra state,) offered at $6, with $6 90 reported as bid for small parcels; interior to good shipping Extra Western, $5 90@$6 20; good to choice do., $6 20@$6 50; very poor to very choice Western Trade and Family Extra, Spring Wheat stock, $6 15@$6 50; inferior to very good Red and Amber Winter Wheat stock, at $6 15@$8 50, (part for shipment at $7 75@$8, or which 950 bbls. sold,) ordinary to very choice White Wheat do. do. at $6 25@$8 25; very poor to fancy St. Louis, Indiana and Ohio at $6 25@$9 50; Extra Genesee at $6 35@$7 50, the latter an extreme; poor to very choice Minnesota clear and straight Extras at $6 40@$8 75, chiefly at $7@$8 25 for fair to choice, (with very choice to fancy up to $8 25@$8 50, and very interior lots called Minnesota down to $6 25@$6 35;) and unsettled Patent Extras, principally at $8 25@$9 25 for very fancy, at $8@$11, mainly at $8 50@$10, with up to $12@$13 for very choice to strictly fancy, and odd lots of very inferior, called Minnesota Patent, as low at $5 35@$7 75).....included in the sales have been 7,000 bbls. shipping Extras, of which 5,000 bbls. were City Mills; 2,250 bbls. Minnesota clear and straight Extras; 1,450 bbls. do. Patent do.; 900 bbls. Winter Wheat Extras, (for shipment, at $7 25@$8;) 300 bbls. Superfine, and 350 bbls. No. 2 at the quoted rates.....Southern Flour has been in less demand to-day, chiefly for home trade purposes, at steady rates.....Sales have been reported here of 1,100 bbls., in lots, at $5 60@$6 for poor to choice Superfine; $6 20@$7 for poor to very choice shipping Extras; $7 50@$9 25 for fair to fancy trade and Family. The dealings were mostly in Extras at from $7 50@$8 25.....Rye Flour quiet at drooping prices, $4 75@$5 for a quote at from $4 25@$5 for ordinary Western to choice State superfine; $5 05@$5 10 for very choice to fancy State, in small lots, and $5@$4 for poor to very choice Fine.....Sales reported of 260 bbls., in small lots, chiefly at $4 70@$5 for fair to choice Superfine State; $4 50@$4 80 for Pennsylvania, and $4 40@$4 85 for about fair to choice Western.....Corn-meal has been in less request at unchanged prices.....We quote at $2 85@$3 10 for poor to very choice Yellow Western; $3 50@$3 10 for Yellow Jersey and $3 50 for Brandywine.....Sales have been reported of 450 bbls., including Yellow Western, in lots, at $3, and Brandywine at $3 50.....Corn-meal, in bags, has been less active, within the range of $1 20@1 50 for poor to very choice ₱ 100 lb. Most of the sales have been of coarse lots at $1 09 for City Mills.....Oat-meal dull within the range of $6 25@$7 for fair to choice City and Western; very choice to fancy held higher; Canada, $7@ 50.....Buckwheat Flour has been in moderate demand within the range of $3 25@$3 75 for very poor to choice State, Jersey, and Pennsylvania, and up to $3 50@$3 75 for very choice to very fancy do.....Most of the lots sold were at $3 50@$3 75 for fair to choice ₱ 100 lb.

GRAIN—Wheat was sparingly purchased to-day, for export, and local milling account, the firmness of the principal holders operating against a free movement. Values were quoted generally as before.....Sales were reported of 37,000 bushels, including ungraded Spring, called ordinary No. 2 Chicago spring, 16,000 bushels, for milling at $1 42 (with $1 43 asked,) and $1 43 bid for strictly prime do., in store, and $1 50 asked for strictly prime No. 2 Milwaukee do., in store.; No. 3 Chicago Spring, old and new, mixed, in store, 10,000 bushels, for export, at $1 35; ungraded Spring, in lots, at $1 25@$1 45; and very inferior to good Red Western, for export, at $1 38@$1 54, of which 2,000 bushels at $1 54, and 4,000 bushels at $1 38. The inferior old Spring, (about a boat-load,) exported from Glasgow, is said to be old No. 2 Chicago, is yet reported as offered at $1 30, without bids. The accumulation of Wheat at Glasgow is represented as unusually large.....New crop Corn has been less active after, particularly for prompt delivery, though opening stronger, was toward the close weaker in price. Old crop without further reported movement, but quoted steady.....Sales have been reported since our last at 65,000 bushels, including 40,000 bushels No. 1, 9,600 bushels, (for home use,) at 60c.; New-York No. 2 (quoted) at 58¾c.@59c.; New-York low Mixed at 59¾c. First Mortgage 7s of 1886
HAVING THE PERSONAL GUARANTEE OF ERASTUS CORNING, OF ALBANY,

Secured by sinking fund of $75,000 applied semi-annually—March 1 and Sept. 1 of each year—to retiring the bonds at par, drawn for by lot at the United States Trust Company of New-York, where the principal and interest are payable.

Allowing for the semi-annual drawings, these bonds, although due in 1886, have now only the average time of four and a half years to run.

Being the total unsold balance of the issue of $1,500,000, which has since Sept. 1, 1876, by drawings at par, been reduced to $1,350,000, for sale

THE BURNING OF THE BAVARIA.

ARRIVAL AT THIS PORT OF THE OFFICERS, CREW, AND PASSENGERS OF THE BURNED STEAM-SHIP—DETAILS OF THE DISASTER —THE SHIP ABANDONED—RESCUE OF THE BOATS WITH THE SHIP'S COMPANY.

The steam-ship Gulf Stream, Capt. Crowell, arrived at this port yesterday, after a voyage of four days, from Charleston, S. C., bringing the officers, crew, and passengers of the ill-fated steam-ship Bavaria, which was burned at sea on the 6th inst. Soon after landing the men reported at the office of the British Consul, where the assistance required was given promptly. Capt. Williams, commander of the Bavaria, in conversation with a reporter, said that his ship, one of the screw-steamers of the Dominion Line, left New-Orleans for Liverpool on Feb. 1, with a crew of 56 men and eight passengers, and had on board a cargo of 4,356 bales of cotton, 1,000 barrels of resin, and 269,000 Mexican dollars. The ship was coaled at the South-west Pass, and resumed her voyage on the 3d inst. Nothing of interest occurred on board until the afternoon of Tuesday, Feb. 6, when the firemen discovered that the coal in the starboard bunker was burning. The donkey-pumps were started, and the fire was soon extinguished. About 7 o'clock on the evening of the same day smoke was detected between decks, and an investigation showed that the cotton on the steerage-deck was burning. The pumps were started again, and every effort made to save the ship, but it was evident that combustion had been going on a long while. About 10 o'clock P. M. the fire was burning furiously and was completely beyond control. The ship had six boats, sufficient to accommodate every soul on board, and orders were given for all hands to prepare to leave the ship. Two bags of bread and a breaker of water were put into each boat, so that, with proper care, the people could live for 10 days, if not swallowed up by the sea. There was no excitement, the men acting coolly and bravely. They had their waterproof coats on, but beyond that and the clothing they wore when the second fire was discovered nothing was saved except the ship's papers. When the order was given to clear away and lower the boats the engineers rushed on deck and took the places assigned to them. The fire was then bursting through the deck and hatches. Among the passengers were Mr. D. O'Connor and his wife, Mary and Michael O'Connor, their children, and an infant. They were placed in the Captain's boat. The other passengers, Mr. J. D. Binary, George Woodward, and John Harrison, were placed in the other boats, and the crew distributed among them. The sea was comparatively quiet, and no trouble occurred in getting all afloat except boat No. 4. While the men were getting that boat away a burst of fire and a dense cloud of smoke drove them back. Again and again the men rushed for it, only to be driven back. The flames were then rushing up the rigging and had reached the mast-heads, when Capt. Williams made a final rush for the boat, and succeeded in lowering it without accident. After seeing every one else safe, the Captain entered his own boat, and it was pulled away from the burning vessel. The officers now knew their exact position then to be 31° 14' north longitude, 78° 42' west of Greenwich, in the Gulf Stream and off the lower coast of Georgia. Their orders were to keep as close together as possible.

About midnight on Feb. 7 the light of the fire was seen by the officers of the British bark Thomason, Capt. Frorick, bound from Quebec to St. Helena. The bark bore down on the Bavaria, and about daylight the next morning was close to the burning ship. Capt. Frostick reported that at that time only a part of the mizzenmast was standing and on fire, the fore and mainmast having gone by the board. He then commenced a search for the boats, being satisfied that the ship had been abandoned. At 10 o'clock in the morning he picked up the first officer's boat, and soon after found three others. As the bark was picking up the third and fourth boats she was seen by Capt. Williams's boat, and with renewed energy the men tried to reach her, but slowly the bark went about and their hearts sank again as she disappeared. Toward the middle of the afternoon a shout went up from the boat's crew as the bark again appeared heading directly for them, and soon the fifth and sixth boats were picked up. The shipwrecked people were kindly treated and taken to Beaufort, S. C., whence they were forwarded to Charleston. There the British Consul gave them each a suit of clothes, fed them, and procured passage for all to this port on the steamer Gulf Stream.

DELAWARE AND HUDSON CANAL.

The Directors of the Delaware and Hudson Canal Company met yesterday afternoon to consider the proof-sheets of the annual report to be issued to-day. It was approved as presented, and ordered to be printed. Mr. Dickson and the other officials of the company when applied to for advance sheets of the report, positively refused to furnish them, on the ground that the Directors did not wish it published until to-morrow. At a late hour it was learned that copies of the report had been secretly furnished to the World and Bulletin. This action created a great deal of talk on the street, those papers having been engaged for some time past in bolstering up the company, and it was freely charged that the object of the officers was to keep the bull movement up for another day, before the independent newspapers would have an opportunity of analyzing the report. If such was the intention it was of no avail, as the reporters succeeded in obtaining an official copy of the report, of which the following is a synopsis: The company claims to have made last year above dividends, interest, rentals, and all first charges, $308,020. It acknowledges that it lost through lease lines $555,045, but says that this is included in the account showing the amount of net profits given above. The "real estate, inventories, &c.," owned by the company is appraised at $8,532,813, and the estimated value of its coal lands is stated at $12,000,000. The other assets are miscellaneous bonds and stocks, $8,088,714, including among others Boston, Hartford and Erie bonds, $1,254,268, and New-York and Canada railroad bonds, $3,100,385. There are said to be bills receivable to the amount of $2,063,237, and the bills payable are stated at $855,000. The other items are as follows: cash on hand, $624,584; "depositors," $634,318; funded debt, $15,116,000; capital stock, $20,000,000. It is reported on the best authority that the company raised $900,000 cash by hypothecating bonds through the Bank of Commerce, about the middle of last week.

THE NEW-YORK WESLEYAN CLUB.

The New-York Wesleyan Club held a meeting last night at the residence of Mr. Stephen H. Olin, No. 111 East Thirty-first street, and Dr. Hunt, the President, being absent, the speaker of the evening, Dr. John W. Draper, was introduced by Mr. Olin. Dr. Draper repeated his interesting lecture on "What Science Owes to America for the Past Hundred Years," an address which attracted so much attention when read before the American Chemical Society on the 16th of last November. The lecture was listened to with marked attention, and as its conclusion its author was rewarded by a hearty vote of thanks. A collation was then served, and the rest of the evening was spent in social intercourse. The club will hereafter hold monthly meetings, the next of which will be at the call of the President.

THE CARE OF THE INSANE.

MEETING IN AID OF THE BROOKLYN RETREAT FOR THE INSANE—THE OBJECTS OF THE INSTITUTION AND WHAT HAS BEEN DONE TOWARD ITS ESTABLISHMENT—ADDRESSES BY REV. DRS. PUTNAM AND STORRS.

The third of a series of meetings, under the auspices of a number of ladies who desire to found a private asylum in Kings County for the reception of respectable females in the incipient stages of insanity, was held last evening in Rev. Dr. Putnam's Church, corner of Pierrepont street and Monroe place, Brooklyn. Dr. Putnam called the meeting to order and presided. He said that since the last meeting the association of ladies who had the project of an asylum in contemplation had become incorporated under the title of "The Brooklyn Retreat for the Insane," the declared objects being the providing of a comfortable retreat for insane women in the County of Kings, the Trustees for the first year to be Mary W. Manning, Anna C. Field, Sarah M. Parsons, Amelia Forman, Ruthy B. Hutchinson, M. Therese Tupper, Mary H. Holley, Hannah D. White, and Sophia R. Ormiston. The ladies who had undertaken this work believed that, under an improved method of treating the insane, combined with cheerful surroundings, pleasant occupation, and outdoor exercise, a much larger percentage of cures may be effected, and they had already procured $1,000 in subscriptions from women.

Rev. Dr. Storrs was introduced, and said that it was a sad and sombre subject, treating of the night side of life, that they had met to consider. He had had nothing to do with originating the association, and all the credit was due to the ladies who had so nobly come to the front in this great project. There were 45,000 insane persons in the United States, a very large proportion of whom were women, and this did not include the very large class of those whose nerves were abnormally affected. A severe Winter increased the number of insane persons, and great disasters, like the Brooklyn Theatre fire and the Ashtabula horror, had a great effect in disturbing the normal condition of the minds of many. The ratio of insanity to population was constantly on the increase, and the ratio of cure was as steadily diminishing. The ratio of cure had diminished from 90 per cent. to a little over 30 per cent. The phases of insanity had increased in intensity and difficulty of treatment, owing mainly to the severe strain put upon the faculties in the present active competition in all the walks of life. The proper care of insane persons when in the incipient stages of the disease had a great influence in promoting a cure. Fewer patients should be in each asylum, and fresh air, cheerful surroundings, and sympathetic care were grand aids in the process of effecting a cure. An asylum containing over 1,000 patients, as many did, with only three or four physicians to look after them, was an impracticable plan for the cure of the disease. Insanity was in the air in these large institutions, and the effect of the presence of those who were in an incurable or chronic condition on those in only an incipient stage was very detrimental. Proper variety of employment could not be had in large asylums, and varied employment was very conducive to a cure. In general hospital practice the ratio of cure was about 50 per cent.; but in Flatbush Insane Asylum only 10 per cent. of the inmates were cured. This came of overcrowding, and inadequate facilities for varied and cheerful employment and diversion. There were 1,081 inmates of that asylum, and the per cent. of cure was so rapidly lessening that it would soon become, if no improvement was made, a veritable sepulchre of dead minds. There were 55 insane asylums in this country, costing $30,000,000. The support of the extravagantly built and conducted asylums of this State averaged $5,000 annually for each inmate. During the last decade the population of the United States had increased 25 per cent., while the number of insane persons had increased 55 per cent. The ladies who had charge of the present project intended to endeavor to establish an asylum that would be substantially self-supporting, and be free from the "pauper taint" so much in existence, and have advantages unknown perhaps to any of them.

Mr. David M. Stone gave many interesting illustrations of the ill-treatment of inmates of insane asylums, and said that the ladies who had presented their plan for the securement of the aid and good will of the press in creating sentiment to substitute a treatment founded on the love and sympathy of a home, instead of a system of neglect and harsh treatment.

After brief remarks by Rev. Mr. Nye, of the Church of Our Father, the meeting adjourned, with the understanding that a committee would be instructed to collect subscriptions.

LITTLE HELL GATE TO BE FILLED UP.

The conference between the Police Commissioners and the heads of other departments in relation to the proposed filling up of Little Hell Gate with street refuse, met again yesterday at Police Head-quarters. President Wales, of the Department of Docks, occupied the chair, and Prof. Chandler, of the Board of Health, officiated as Secretary. Gen. Smith offered the following bills, which were concurred in as being necessary to the proper authorization of the work:

AN ACT to declare Little Hell Gate not a navigable channel, and to accord the assent of the United States to the filling up of the same:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives, in Congress assembled, that the water passage known as Little Hell Gate, between Randall's and Ward's Islands be and the same hereby is declared not a navigable channel or public highway.

AN ACT to change the bulkhead line of Randall's and Ward's Islands: The people of the State of New-York represented in Senate and Assembly do enact as follows:

SECTION 1. The bulkhead line, or line of solid filling, adjacent to the westerly shore of Randall's Island shall be altered and extended from a point on the sea wall of said Randall's Island, lying in the line of the prolongation of the north side of the building of the female department of the House of Refuge, and 150.7 feet distant from the north-west corner of the same, and running from this point to the north-west corner of the building occupied by the Superintendent of the Department of Commissioners of Emigration to the point in the sea wall of Ward's Island, lying in the prolongation of said line.

SEC. 2. The bulkhead line, or line of solid filling adjacent to the easterly shore of Randall's Island shall be altered and extended from a point of the sea wall of said Randall's Island, lying in the prolongation of a line starting from a point in the southerly face of the school house of said Randall's Island (Nursery Department) 24.7 feet distant from the south-east corner of the same and run ing thence through a point lying in the prolongation of the south-erly face of the main building of the large boy's dormitory (Nursery Department) and 87 feet distant from the south-west corner of the same to the point in the sea wall of Ward's Island lying in the prolongation of said line.

A letter was received from Chief of United States Engineers at Washington notifying the conference that the United States authorities do not object to the scheme, and suggesting the presentation of an appropriate bill to Congress.

THE ROBBERY OF STOCKS AND BONDS.

Messrs. James G. King's Sons have not obtained any clue to the sneak thieves who so adroitly carried off the two tin boxes full of securities from their safe on Friday last. Mr. King said to a TIMES reporter yesterday that he had succeeded in fixing the time of the robbery as just before noon. The boxes were not kept in the large safe of the concern, but in another safe which is stationed in a small room opening into the main office on the left and divided from it by a plaster partition. Mr. Richards, the owner, did not inform the firm that the boxes contained anything valuable, and it was supposed in the office that there was nothing in them but private papers and memoranda. Two clerks have seats in the little room, but on Friday both had been sent out on messages. The members of the firm have occasion to pass in and out of the room continually for books and papers. About 11 o'clock, during the absence of the clerk, three gentlemen came up to the railing and asked the junior partner for the senior. He informed them that he was expected every moment, and to walk in inside. They did so, and young Mr. King, turning his head to look at the clock, saw it was just 11. At the same moment Mr. King Sr., entered, and the gentlemen transacted their business with him and left. The outer office was filled with people, but nothing unusual was noticed until about lunch time, when one of the clerks noticed that a number of revenue stamps were jammed in the door of the small safe. Opening it to arrange them he discovered the absence of the boxes, but it was supposed that Mr. Richards must have taken them away. It was not until the next morning that it was learned that he had not. One of the most curious points about the robbery is, that the thieves must have had at least five minutes to accomplish their work. The space in front of the safe door is so narrow that the person opening it is obliged to step out of the way before he can reach the interior. A similar performance has to be gone through to shut it. The detectives think five men were engaged in the robbery, but have very little hope of capturing the thieves or getting the bonds back, except by means of a compromise with the thieves.

JUSTICE FLANAGAN'S SALARY.

Thomas C. Clark recently sued John Flanagan, the Justice of the Tenth District Court, and recovered judgment against the latter for $1,938 54. An execution issued against the defendant's property was returned unsatisfied, but the plaintiff discovered that Justice Flanagan had not drawn his salary for the month of January, 1877. Clark then applied to Judge Sedgwick, in the Superior Court, Special Term, to have the $666 66, the amount of Flanagan's warrant for salary, applied toward the satisfaction of the judgment. Judge Sedgwick denied the application yesterday, on the ground that the delivery of an unindorsed warrant would transfer no right of the defendant, and that the Controller could not be compelled to pay money thereon. The denial of the motion is, however, without prejudice to a further application by Clark to compel Flanagan to apply the amount received on the warrant to the satisfaction of the judgment.

INSURANCE COMPLICATIONS

SUITS INSTITUTED AGAINST LUTHER W. FROST AND OTHERS TO RECOVER MONEYS ALLEGED TO HAVE BEEN FRAUDULENTLY OBTAINED.

Mr. William R. Grace, the new Receiver of the Continental Life Insurance Company, is acting with commendable promptitude in endeavoring to recover from the former officers of that corporation some of the money which they have, as alleged, fraudulently obtained therefrom. One of the suits instituted by the Receiver is against Luther W. Frost, the former President of the company; Juliet D. P. Frost, his wife; Maria L. Tyler; Minnot Mitchell and his wife; Daniel J Noves, and George J. Schermerhorn. The complaint in this action, after reciting the incorporation and existence of the Continental Life Insurance Company and the appointment of the plaintiff as Receiver on Feb. 7, sets forth that the defendants, as the Receiver is informed and believes, hold in their possession $622,-294 65 which rightfully belongs to the policy-holders and other creditors of the company. It is alleged of the first named defendant that $212,327 15 was taken by him from the funds of the company beginning on June 7, 1866, and down to the time of his removal, that amount having been paid to him during that period for premiums and appropriated to his own use. He is also charged with having caused to be paid to various agents $77,333 48, on sums which, if due at all, as plaintiff believes were due by himself. The complaint further alleges that between the month of May, 1870, and June 21, 1872, the defendant Luther W. Frost drew from the funds of the said corporation $69,500, and that subsequently, for the purpose of canceling the claim against him on the books of the company, he entered into a certain agreement, whereby he agreed to sell his claim to commissions on certain policies; that again, between July 16, 1872, and March 23, 1875, he drew from the assets $115,506 66, and on Jan. 15, 1873, borrowed of the said company, on his bond secured by mortgages, the sum of $25,-000; and that on June 26, 1872, another agreement was made, whereby he agreed to sell his claim to commissions on certain outstanding policies, and was thereupon credited with the sum of $141,506 66. It is also charged that between Aug. 9, 1872 and March 24, 1873, Luther W. Frost drew out of the funds other sums amounting in the aggregate to $17,558 36, which were charged as "interest paid L. W. Frost on second sale of commuted commissions;" that his salary was $15,000, and this was drawn, over and above the amounts cited; that during the time of his Presidency, Luther W. Frost claimed that the Board of Directors had granted him an extra salary, and stated that he would sell the said annuity to the company, and under such agreement received $14,478 30 to cancel his said pretended right; that in 1874 he again drew out $12,641.77; in 1875, $8,000, and in 1876, $6,000; making a total of $41,120,08, all of which sums were for the purpose of canceling his right to the annuity above mentioned. The complaint further alleges, that as the Receiver is informed and believes, the said Luther W. Frost has assigned property to his wife, Juliet D. T. Frost, on Palisade avenue, Yonkers, to his mother-in-law, Maria L. Tyler, property on North Broadway; to Minnot Mitchell, on Jan. 15, 1877, premises on Babcock place, Warburton and Woodworth avenues, and on Jan. 22, 1877, property on Riverdale avenue, all in the City of Yonkers. On Oct. 18, 1875, it is charged that he assigned to Daniel J. Noyes two mortgages, one for $3,000 and the other for $5,000, and to the other defendant, George J. Schermerhorn, a mortgage for $18,000. The Receiver therefore prays that judgment may be entered against Luther W. Frost for the full sum of $622,294 65, that the assignments above mentioned be declared void, and in fraud of the rights of the Continental Life Insurance Company, and that the defendants be restrained from disposing in any way of the property in their possession. Attachments have been issued in this suit against the property of the defendants.

Suits have also been instituted against Sarah P. and G. Hilton Scribner, and against Luther W. and Juliet D. T. Frost to set aside satisfaction pieces executed on mortgages formerly held by the Continental Company. The first named of these has been heretofore mentioned in THE TIMES and is brought in relation to a mortgage for $17,500 upon which a satisfaction piece was given by Luther W. Frost on June 17, 1874. The complaint charges that this certificate was made and executed in pursuance of a corrupt and fraudulent arrangement between the defendant and Luther W. Frost to cheat and defraud the company.

The suit brought against Luther W. Frost and his wife is on a $25,000 mortgage executed by M. B. Wynkoop, which was, on April 5, conveyed to Ruins C. Frost, who in turn conveyed it to Juliet D. T. Frost. Both of these mortgages, the Receiver charges, were kept among the assets of the company long after they had been satisfied of record.

LUTHER W. FROST HEARD FROM.

For some time past the whereabouts of Luther W. Frost, the former President of the Continental Life, have been unknown, and it was generally believed that he had left the State for the purpose of avoiding any explanation as to the manner in which the business of that institution was carried on. It was generally known that he had left his residence at Yonkers, and although he had been seen in this City within a few weeks, no one was able to tell where he could be found. One of the parties in interest, at whose suit Mr. William Allen Butler was appointed Referee, yesterday received a letter from him, which, however, did not show where it had been written. In this letter Mr. Frost asks a suspension of criticism for a short time, and says that under legal advice he and those who were associated with him in the management of the Continental will be ready to meet any and all charges that may be preferred against him. The daily papers, he says, have done him very great injustice, and he adds that it was his only and honest purpose to carry the company safely through the evils with which it was beset. Mistakes were at such a time, according to his belief, a necessary consequence, and if any were made there was no intention to defraud. As for himself and his associates, he thinks they were only actuated by the best of motives, and the charges of dishonesty that have been made against him he denounces as a slanderous and untrue. The compensation that he received from the company, Mr. Frost continues, was fairly earned by him. He expresses regret that the scheme of the Western capitalists, whose desire it was to make good the deficiency existing and put the company again on its feet, was not looked upon favorably, and closes with the expression of the hope that everything may be satisfactorily settled.

INSURANCE NOTES.

In the official report of the examination of the Security Life Insurance and Annuity Company, Mr. John A. McCall, Jr., the Deputy Superintendent of the Insurance Department, stated yesterday that the death claims against that company amounted to $217,869. This amount was reached after deducting the premium rates and loans existing against the policies, and it forms a large portion of the liabilities. On Monday next, Mr. Robert Sewell will move before the Supreme court for an order to William H. Wickham, the Receiver of the company, to show cause why he should not give these claims preference over any and all others existing against the company. This will be a test case, and inasmuch as the rights of policy-holders generally will be questioned, the decision is looked forward to with some anxiety.

It is understood that Attorney-General Fairchild will personally appear as the representative of the Insurance Department in the hearing in the matter of the Continental Life Insurance Company when it is resumed on the 23d inst.

It was stated yesterday that Benjamin Noyes, the President of the National Capitol Life Insurance Company, who left this City suddenly on Friday night last, was in New-Haven, and that he would return at an early day, when a meeting would probably be arranged between himself and ex-Gov. Parker, the Receiver of the New-Jersey Mutual, looking to the transfer of the assets of the latter corporation.

THE INSURANCE SUPERINTENDENT.

The insurance interests of the State of New-York ought to thank you a thousand times for your articles condemning the nomination of J. F. Smythe for Insurance Superintendent. People this way have thought Gov. Robinson an honest man, but this appointment seals his character forever. Smythe is entirely unfit for this place. He has not the first qualification for the position. His antecedents are all wrong. In these times the insurance community demand an honest, competent Superintendent, one whose past character is above suspicion. The Senate should be made to feel the just indignation of the community in hastening the confirmation of such a nomination.

THE NEW STOCK EXCHANGE.

The New-York Open Board of Stock Brokers held another meeting in Delmonico's, Broad street, yesterday afternoon, Mr. J. F. Underhill in the chair. There was a large attendance. The Committee on Nominations asked for further time to select candidates for officers of the Board, and on motion the election was postponed until to-morrow. Polls will be open from 2 to 4 P. M. The Chairman announced that the limit of 200 members placed at a previous meeting had been reached, and that there were 100 additional applications, 51 of which had been reported favorably by the Committee on Admissions. He advised that the limit be extended to 300, which was on motion adopted. The list of new names were read, and members were invited to make objections privately to the Chairman of the Committee on Admissions before 2 P. M. to-day. The Committee on Building reported that they had secured the refusal of an eligible exchange at a rental of $10,000 per year; that they had in view two other buildings, corner of Exchange place and William street, and corner of Exchange place and Broad street, that would serve as temporary exchanges until the permanent edifice could be remodeled, and that they had just received another proposal which they had not had time to investigate. They refused to indicate the location of the proposed permanent building, on the ground that the Stock Exchange had leased the present Gold Exchange over their heads when they learned they were after it, and were anxious to do the same in the present case. On motion the committee was given full power to lease the building, and the Chairman and two other persons were added to it, making six in all. The meeting then adjourned.

THE MURDER OF MAGGIE BAUER.

BEGINNING OF THE TRIAL OF HER ASSASSIN AT THE QUEENS COUNTY COURT OF OYER AND TERMINER—TESTIMONY OF THE MOTHER OF THE LITTLE VICTIM.

The trial of Frank McConnochie for the murder of Maggie Bauer at Foster's Meadow last August was commenced at the old court-house in North Hempstead, Long Island, yesterday, before Judge C. E. Pratt, County Judge John J. Armstrong, and Justices Chipp and Barrett. On the opening of the court the prisoner was arraigned, and pleaded "not guilty." He was represented by ex-Judge Richard Busteed and Theodore J. Armstrong as counsel, and regarded the tedious work of impaneling a jury with close attention. He wore no coat, collar, or necktie, and appeared in his shirt-sleeves. Mrs. Bauer, the mother of the murdered child, was seated inside the bar, surrounded by a number of friends and neighbors. She was dressed in deep mourning, and was much affected as the trial progressed. The jury was finally impaneled at 2:30 P. M., and comprised the following members: John Remsen, of Hempstead, farmer; Samuel O. Wright, residing at Hempstead and doing business as a carpenter in this City; Thomas Duncan, gardener, of Astoria; John H. Van Cott, farmer, of Greenvale, Long Island; Oakley Ketchum, insurance agent, of Glen Cove; John M. Samuels, merchant, of Oyster Bay; Nathaniel Baylis, farmer, of Springfield; Charles E. Van Nostrand, farmer, of Hinsdale; William H. Hicks, farmer, of College Point; Richard A. Sammis, merchant, of Oyster Bay; Clarence Betts, no occupation, of Woodside; and John Decker, farmer, of Springfield. The case was then opened by District Attorney Downing for the prosecution. He reviewed the particulars of the tragedy at some length, and placed Mrs. Margaret Bauer, the mother of the murdered child, on the stand. Mrs. Bauer testified that she lived at Foster's Meadow, in the town of Hempstead; her daughter Maggie was 8 years and 9 months old when she was murdered; the tragedy took place on Aug. 14, 1876; on that day Catherine Hoffman came to her house about 10 A. M. and left about 12:50 P. M.; on leaving the house she inquired the way to the Valley Stream depot, and little Maggie volunteered to show her the way; the pair started off together. This was the last time witness had seen her daughter alive. As the afternoon waned and Maggie did not come home, her parents searched the neighborhood as long as daylight lasted, and resumed the search at 3:30 o'clock the next morning; at 6 o'clock the same morning Dick Rhodes found the body of Maggie; witness described the condition of the body when it was found; the hood of her sunbonnet was rolled up and stuffed in her mouth, and the strings were tied back of her head, while the cape was used to cover the face of the little girl; bundles of leaves were also crammed into her mouth; there were marks on her breast, and the impression of a human hand in black and blue marks was found upon one arm; there was blood upon her ears also; Maggie's clothes were not torn; she was barefooted, and there were pieces of flesh under her nails showing that in her death struggles she had scratched the face of her assassin.

Upon being cross-examined by ex-Judge Busteed, witness said that when Maggie left her home with Kate Hoffman, she [witness] was preparing dinner for her other children; she had known Kate Hoffman for 15 years; had never heard that Kate had made threats against any of her family, and knew of no dissatisfaction on the part of the former with the wages she had received when in the employ of Mr. Bauer; the first knowledge witness had that the prisoner was the murderer was when she was so informed by Stephen Payne, a detective, who with her husband and the prisoner came to her house together one day at noon; the party took dinner at her house, and during the progress of the meal Payne told her that McConnochie was the murderer of her child; the prisoner denied it. "They ate dinner," said she. "You must not think I could eat any dinner, when right opposite me sat the murderer of my child;" after dinner the party went to the scene of the murder, where the prisoner had described the mode of committing the deed, and pointed out the places where he had first seized Maggie, and where he had killed her.

To the District Attorney—The prisoner at that same interview acknowledged having taken from Maggie a silver dime and half dime; he also acknowledged that the little girl had scratched his face in several places.

John De Mott Henderson was the next witness. He testified that he was a farmer, and had lived near the Bauers' place "all of his life." His statement of the circumstances surrounding the murder was substantially the same in its general features as that of Mrs. Bauer. He was one of the Coroner's Jury that held an inquest upon the body of little Maggie, and had had in his possession a belt which the prisoner had acknowledged having tied around the throat of his victim before he murdered her. In the course of his testimony, witness said that the prisoner had said that when he was killing little Maggie she cried out "Mamma" three times in a loud voice.

The witness was cross-examined at length by ex-Judge Busteed, but nothing new was developed. The witness' knowledge of the English language, although he was an American born, was extremely limited, and the necessity thus imposed upon counsel to explain commonplace words rendered the cross-examination very tedious. The court rose at 5 P. M.

THE SWALLOW-TAIL DEMOCRACY.

The Manhattan Club, which recently experienced certain financial embarrassments, seems to be in process of resuscitation, or rather a new club has been formed to take its name and place. A certificate of incorporation of the Manhattan Club was filed in the County Clerk's office yesterday. According to this the association is organized under the laws of May 12, 1875, and March 14, 1876. Its incorporators are Edward Cooper, Aaron J. Vanderpoel, Edward Patterson, Frederick R. Coudert, Nathaniel Jarvis, Jr., John R. Brady, Peter B. Olney, William E. Rider, Cyrus Yale, John T. Agnew, Thomas R. Fisher, Henry Wilder Allen, Benjamin Hart, F. H. Bangs, B. Casserly, J. Augustus Page, George H. Purser, Edward Schell, August Belmont, Charles D. Burrell, Everett J. Wheeler, Richard Lathers, Mortimer Porter, Wilson G. Hunt, and Augustus Schell. The business and objects of the club are stated to be "to advance Democratic principles, promote social intercourse among its members, and provide them the conveniences of a club-house." The business of the club is to be done by 19 managers. The managers for the present year are the following: August Belmont, Augustus Schell, Edward Cooper, Sidney Webster, Aaron J. Vanderpoel, William E. Rider, Clarkson N. Potter, Smith Ely, Jr., Edward Patterson, Peter B. Olney, William C. Whitney, and Oswald Ottendorfer.

THE BROOKLYN ALDERMEN.

The Brooklyn Aldermen held their regular weekly meeting yesterday, but transacted very little business of public interest. Alderman Griswold (Republican) offered a resolution indorsing a bill which has been reported on formally by the Assembly Committee on Cities. The bill provides that the offices of the City Auditor, Collector of Taxes and Assessments, Treasurer, and Register of Arrears be consolidated in the Finance Department. The bill, the Alderman said, would save hundreds of thousands of dollars to the tax-payers, and the resolution indorsing it should receive the unanimous report of the Common Council. Alderman Burnett (Republican) hoped that the resolution would be laid over. The resolution was laid over for a week. The motion to suspend the weekly by-laws to accept the report of the board was varied by the practical withdrawal of Alderman Ray, the Republican candidate. The Republicans, however, had not decided to unite on any other candidate, as the first vote showed. The vote was as follows: Arnott, (Republican,) 3; Black, (Democrat,) 11; Riley, (Republican,) 9; Donovan, (Democrat,) 2. When the vote was announced Alderman Baird (Republican) moved that Alderman Francis B Fisher be elected President of the board for 1877. Alderman Aiken (Republican) moved that Alderman David S. Arnott be elected President, and Alderman Acker (Republican) moved that Alderman Griswold be the man. Alderman Duane (Democrat) moved as a substitute that another vote be taken viva voce for President. The motion prevailed, and the vote resulted as follows: Arnott, (Republican,) 4; Black, (Democrat,) 11; Donovan, (Democrat,) 1; Griswold, (Republican,) 5; Fisher, (Republican,) 1; Cottrell, (Republican,) 1. The board then adjourned.

CITY HALL NOTES.

Mayor Ely yesterday stated that, owing to the press of official business, he would not appear to-day before the Joint Committee on Cities of the Senate and Assembly, to participate in the conference on the bills relating to this City. Controller Kelly, however, and also Commissioner Campbell intend, it is said, to appear before the committee.

The Commissioner of Public Works has removed Antonio Leon and John Leon, who were employed as night watchmen in the new Court-house and the First District Court, and who are implicated in the attempt to murder of Rose Massimino, in Brooklyn. They received a salary of $900 each.

Chamberlain Tappan reports that the balance in the City Treasury on Feb. 17 was $1,194,729

TRIVIAL OBJECTIONS MADE TO ELECTORS FROM MICHIGAN AND NEVADA—SINGULAR ACTION OF THE SENATE ON THE MICHIGAN CASE—THE OBSTRUCTORS IN THE HOUSE REBUKED BY THE RESPECTABLE DEMOCRATS—THE OBJECTION TO THE NEVADA ELECTOR UNANIMOUSLY OVERRULED IN THE SENATE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—When the House met this morning at 10 o'clock, there were many members absent, and Vance, of Ohio, with several others, attempted to secure two hours' delay by moving a recess until noon. This effort resulted in nothing except a half hour's loss of time, and the debate on the objections to sustaining the decision of the Commission began at 10:30. About a dozen members spoke in the two hours alloted to debate, the first speech being by Mr. New, of Indiana, who proposed to stand by the consequences of the Electoral bill. Mr. Joyce, of Vermont; Mr. Townsend, of Pennsylvania; Mr. Crapo, of Massachusetts; Mr. Danford, of Ohio; Mr. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, and Mr. Pratt, of Iowa, made earnest speeches in defense of the action of the Commission. Of these perhaps Mr. Kelley's was the most forcible, since he met the charge of fraud by a vigorous protest and a strong declaration of the character of the crimes by which the Democrats had sought to carry the State of Louisiana. He quoted the recent opinion of Judge Church, of New-York, and was interrupted by Mr. Cox, who said that Judge Church meant that there was no way under the law of going behind the returns, a sentiment which Mr. Cox seemed to indorse, and which is precisely what the Commission decided and what the Republicans claim. Cox evidently had in mind that the Commission was a Democratic Returning Board instead of a body bound by existing law. Mr. Danford referred to the Oregon telegrams and Tilden's connection with the Oregon fraud, and expressed his gratification that Gov. Hayes had no such affair as that laid to his charge.

On the Democratic side, after Mr. New's speech, the decision was further attacked by Messrs. Levy, of Louisiana; McMahon, of Ohio; Rice, of Ohio; Watterson, Cox, Ellis, of Louisiana, and Fernando Wood. Their speeches were reinforced by Henry L. Pierce, of Massachusetts, and in some manner by Prof. Seelye. Mr. Watterson plainly expressed his purpose to accept the result of the Electoral Commission, and go home to his confiding constituents and tell them all about it. Mr. Cox mixed his speech in about equal parts with jokes, partisan recrimination, and profane allusions to Holy Writ. He declined to be held responsible for the result of the Commission's action, but seemed inclined to accept it without great opposition. Mr. Pierce concluded that the State of Louisiana had been carried by tremendous frauds, and he admitted the illegality of the action of the Returning Board, as he claimed it to be, and while he had a holy horror of Democratic rule, he could not endure the thought that the results of violence should be overcome, except in some manner to square exactly with his own judgment of what might be proper. Prof. Seelye concluded, on the whole, that the intimidation on one side and the fraud on the other were so great that, really, the State of Louisiana ought not to have any voice at all in the Presidential election. He approved the decision of the Commission in respect to its interpretation of law, but regarded this as a case where equity rises so much above the law as to compel the law to be set aside in behalf of the right. Both Seelye and Pierce voted with the Democrats against sustaining the decision. Both are men whose honest purposes can never be impeached, but they have been overcome by the popular delusion that what is not made right by law must be made right in some unlawful manner. Prof. Seelye's position on the general result would sustain the action of the Returning Board, if it had been as fraudulent as Mr. Pierce supposed it to have been, because the Returning Board in saving the State from being carried against the will of the people by murder and intimidation, would have preserved, according to Prof. Seelye's position, though in an unlawful manner, the exact equities of the election. Putting Mr. Pierce's allegations and Prof. Seelye's logic together, the Returning Board simply rose above the law to enforce the right. This demonstration by two such men is the remains of the sentimentalism by which a great many good people have been misled, because they seem to think there is some better way to right wrongs than the legal way. This was in the main the theory which Don Quixote pursued. The House sustained the objection to the decision of the Commission by a vote of 172 to 99.

The Senate was then notified that the House was ready to proceed with the count, and at 1 o'clock the Joint Convention assembled for the fifth time since Feb. 1. The eight votes of Louisiana were counted for Hayes, and the count proceeded, Maine, Massachusetts, Maryand, and Michigan being called in regular order. It was generally expected that the count would proceed until Oregon should be reached, that being the next State in alphabetical order from which there are two sets of Electors returned. It was a great surprise, therefore, when, in response to the inquiry of the Presiding Officer for objections to the vote of Michigan, Mr. Tucker, of Virginia, arose and presented formal objections to the counting of the vote of one of the Electors returned, on the ground that he was a Federal officer at the time of his appointment, and continued to be such officer, and there was, therefore, no election, and the vacancy was not legally filled. The objections having been read the Senate retired to its own Chamber. It was generally suspected that the objection to Michigan was made simply for delay, and when Mr. Southard, of Ohio, who has advocated every violent measure proposed in caucus, was awarded the floor to make a motion for a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow, this suspicion was partly confirmed. It was subsequently pretended, however, that those who preferred the objection to the Michigan Elector were not acting in concert with the obstructionists. Mr. Tucker disclaimed all purpose of interposing unnecessary delay, and stated he was prepared to proceed with the argument in support of the objections. Fernando Wood also mildly opposed a recess, and the demonstration which followed on the Democratic side showed that the advocates of delay would be in a hopeless minority. The vote on Southard's motion for a recess was first taken viva voce, and the great volume of sound that rolled into "nay" left no doubt of the result. A division was demanded, when 86 arose for and 163 against recess. The filibusterers then demanded the yeas and nays, and they were ordered, resulting in a more sweeping defeat for them; only 57 were bold enough to record themselves for further delay, while 192 are recorded against it. The negative vote was furnished by the following States: Ohio, 10; Kentucky, 6; Pennsylvania, 4; Indiana, 4; Georgia, Maryland, and Tennessee, each 3; Alabama, Illinois, Louisiana, Mississippi, North Carolina, New-York, Virginia, and Wisconsin, each 2; Arkansas, California, Massachusetts, Missouri, New-Jersey, Oregon, Texas, and West Virginia each one. Meade and Odell were the New-York negative voters. It was 3 o'clock before debate began on the Michigan objections, and it continued until after 5, being marked by nothing of special interest. Some of the speeches delivered to-day were prepared for the Louisiana case, and were gravely read by their authors to listless auditors. Several times general impatience was manifested by some wearied members calling out, "Vote, vote," but the monotony was continued until the two hours devoted to debate had been exhausted. Then Mr. Jenks, one of the Democratic objectors in the Louisiana case, offered, as a substitute for Tucker's motion, a resolution providing that the vote of Michigan be counted, despite the objection, and much to the surprise of most of the spectators, this was carried by an overwhelming vote. After this, on motion of Mr. Hale, the Clerk was instructed to notify the Senate that the House was again ready to go into joint session.

When the Senate reached its own chamber, after the separation, Mr. Allison, of Iowa, offered a resolution to the effect that the vote of Michigan be counted for the Republican candidates, notwithstanding the objection made by the opposition. Upon this proposition Mr. Bayard surprised his non-partisan friends by making an exceedingly injudicious speech, in which he repudiated all the principles established by the decision of the Electoral Commission, of which he is a member. He declared, among other absurd things, that a vote for an Elector about whose eligibility there was a dispute was not a vote at all, or if it was a vote, it was only such a one as could be cast for a dead man. Messrs. McMillan and Christancy followed in strong speeches in favor of the resolution and against sustaining the objection made in the House. Then Mr. Hereford, of West Virginia, mustered up courage enough to open his mouth, and declared that although he did not desire to take up the time of the Senate, he thought it was his duty to his State to protest against the counting of the vote under discussion. Mr. Morton followed in support of the resolution, and he in turn was succeeded by Mr. Stevenson, of Kentucky, who, much to the surprise of his associates, supported the resolution and expressed a determination to vote for it.

At this point news was received that the conspiracy in the House to take a recess until to-morrow had been defeated by a vote of 192 to 57, and then Mr. Bayard, seeing that he had made a mistake in opposing the resolution, obtained the floor by unanimous consent, and declared that if he had had time to finish his speech he would have expressed the opinion that upon the testimony submitted in the Michigan case it would not be just nor legal to throw out the vote of the so-called ineligible Elector. This put an end to all partisan opposition to the counting of the vote. Messrs. Bogy and Kernan fell into line, making speeches in favor of the resolution. Senator Morrill, amid loud laughter, stated that for once he would be unpartisan and vote with his Democratic friend Mr. Kernan, and it seemed as if the resolution was going to be passed without further waste of time. This, however, was a mistake, for Mr. Whyte obtained the floor, and offered a substitute for the original motion, which greatly modified its language and scope. This gave rise to considerable debate, pending which Senator Norwood stated that when he signed the objection he was not aware of the insufficiency of the evidence upon which it was based. Then a vote was taken on Mr. Whyte's substitute, and it was lost by a majority of 10. The original resolution was then taken up, and Mr. McDonald made a motion to strike out the first clause, which set forth that the objection was not good in law. This was defeated by a vote of 38 to 26, and then the question recurring upon the first resolution, it was, at the suggestion of Mr. Cooper, voted upon separately. The first clause was adopted by a vote of 40 to 17. The last section, providing that the Michigan vote be counted, was carried by the unanimous voice of the Senate, Mr. Hereford voting with the rest.

Shortly after this a message was received stating that the House was ready to again meet in joint session, and the Senate proceeded to the Hall of Representatives. Then the vote of Michigan was declared for Hayes and Wheeler, and the count went on until Nevada was called, when Mr. Springer, one of the most prominently unscrupulous and dishonorable filibusters in Congress, objected to the count on the ground that one of the Electors from the State named was ineligible at the time of his appointment. This made it necessary for the two houses to separate again. The Senate returned to its own Chamber and by a unanimous vote declined to sustain the objection, and ordered that all the votes of Nevada be counted for the Republican candidates. Pending the discussion of the subject, the lower house took a recess until to-morrow morning. There was no roll call on the motion, both sides were worn out with the labors of the day, and seeing that it the count proceeded the session would last until late at night, they were willing to let it be suspended for another day.

SCHEMES OF THE REVOLUTIONISTS.

THE POLICY OF DELAY AND ITS WORK YESTERDAY—DUPLICITY AND UNSCRUPULOUSNESS OF THE EXTREMISTS—THE TRUMPED-UP OBJECTIONS REJECTED BY THE SENATE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—The new revolutionary policy of cheating the Democracy into an abandonment of the course marked out in the party caucus by offering plausible, well-appearing excuses for delay, met with a serious defeat to-day, which gives promise of a completion of the Electoral count without intentional procrastination. The Fabian policy of the handful of lunatics who propose to prevent an election, succeeded in securing the recess yesterday on a false pretense of wanting time to prepare for the Oregon case, and by a promise of contentment with one day only. Hurd, who was said to be sick and unable to go on with the Oregon case, was in the House to-day looking as well as ever. This would seem to give credence to the other story that Hurd had become disgusted, and had refused to claim the fraudulent vote of Cronin. The Louisiana case was permitted to be closed without delay, but when the Joint Convention met and had proceeded with the count as far as Michigan, it was found that a trumped up objection had been framed against the vote of one of the Electors chosen to fill a vacancy in the college. The disingenuousness of this objection is witnessed by the unanimous vote of the Senate against sustaining it. The motive of it was immediately revealed by the motion of Southard, of Ohio, that the House take a recess till to-morrow morning. The purpose to delay was scarcely attempted to be disguised. Southard could only say for himself that he did not have any intention of speaking, but this was a very important question, and he wanted a day for consideration. Some points of order were raised, but Randall ruled against them all, except one to the effect that if a recess was taken till evening, the question of sustaining the objection could not be set aside for legislative business. This was so plain a provision of law that any person who could read could not fail to understand it, though three or four members, including Sayler, of Ohio, endeavored to thrust a legislative evening session into the midst of the Electoral count. The motion of Southard was one for which no pretext could be presented in its support. The vote showed about the same number of revolutionists who had voted in caucus, while near a hundred Democrats voted with the Republicans against the proposed delay. This vote is regarded as a decisive defeat of the revolutionists, though it will by no means put a stop to their secret plots for delay.

The case made out against the Michigan Elector was similar in most respects, though much weaker than that which Springer had prepared against Chaffee, the Illinois Elector. Crossman, of Michigan, had been made a United States Commissioner for a special matter, and without ever coming into possession of a commission, had ceased to act 13 years ago, without any formal recognition. Chaffee, in Illinois, had been really a Commissioner, and had acted as such to the knowledge of his neighbors for some years. But the objection was not made in the case of Chaffee, lest the counting of his vote should prejudice the Louisiana case before the Commission. The objection in the case of Michigan was simply for delay, and shows in strong light the duplicity of the revolutionists in the party.

The objection trumped up to a Nevada Elector was of the same character and made for the same purpose, and the Senate, without even dividing, refused to sustain the objection, and, as in the case of the Michigan Elector, the House will probably refuse to reject the vote, though there may be the full two hours of debate, for many members have written speeches on the general situation which will fit this case as well as any other. There are, however, no more States which are known to afford opportunities for objection till Oregon is reached. After that the only State is the last on the list, (Wisconsin,) where there is some story about an ineligible Elector which may be taken advantage of. Of course, South Carolina must go to the Commission. The revolutionists may still consume considerable time, but cannot defeat the declaration of an election.

HEWITT AND KENNER'S GAME.

A SCHEME TO SPRING KENNER'S STORY ON THE COMMISSION IN THE LOUISIANA CASE—HEWITT'S CONFIDENCES WITH A BABBLING JOURNALIST—FAILURE OF THE SCHEME THROUGH THE DECISION NOT TO TAKE TESTIMONY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—There is a history concerning Duncan Kenner's testimony as to his attempt to bribe the Louisiana Returning Board to vote to give the State to Tilden that is decidedly interesting. Wells was the first to allude to this attempt, and charged Kenner with an offer of $200,000 for the vote of the State. Kenner immediately came forward with his story that Wells had made the first proposition, and that Kenner had tried to raise the money, subscribing liberally himself, but had not succeeded. It was the purpose of the Democrats to reserve Mr. Kenner's testimony for the Commission, the expectation of some of them being that testimony would be received in the Louisiana case. It was noticed that Kenner was not called by the Field committee as soon as he arrived in town, and the explanation of the delay is as stated above. Mr. Hewitt imparted the story of Kenner to Sam Bowles, of the Springfield Republican, during a dinner at Mr. Hewitt's house, and also told Bowles of the very shrewd design of producing a tremendous effect on the Commission by springing this testimony unexpectedly upon them. Bowles promised to observe secrecy, but immediately wrote the whole story in a letter signed with his initials and printed in the Springfield Republican, before the decision of the Commission was announced. The intent which Mr. Hewitt at the same time expressed of submitting Kenner's testimony before Field's Committee if they should fail to secure his examination by the Commission, was afterward accomplished by his examination last Saturday. It is not generally supposed that Kenner's confession of his part in the transaction, supposing the story which he tells were uncontradicted, would have produced so great an effect upon the Commission in behalf of giving that State to Tilden as Mr. Hewitt expected; but at any rate the decision of the Commission not to take evidence defeated the theatrical exhibition which the great Democratic manager had prepared for the stage.

DONN PIATT'S DEFIANT ATTITUDE.

HOW HE REGARDS HIS OWN INFAMOUS ADVICE—HIS EXPLANATION OF THE ARTICLE IN THE CAPITAL—AN ATTEMPT TO INCITE REVOLUTION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—Donn Piatt is said to have published the incendiary article in Sunday's Capital to secure for himself some gratuitous advertising, and he regarded the matter as a huge joke. Now that the case is in progress of examination in the courts it appears less funny to him than it did, and to-day he publishes a card in the Star in which he freely mingles explanation and defiance. He closes with the following Parthian shot:

"I only seek to protest the misconstruction put upon my words. None other than an insane man, or one desperately wicked, would ever think of assassination, let alone publicly advocate the commission of so horrible a crime. Beyond this I have nothing to say. I ask no odds of these people. They are playing with a dangerous element, when they openly innovate on right sanctioned by time and sanctified by the blood of the people. They will have enough to do in caring for themselves, without troubling me."

He incorporates in the card the incendiary paragraph from his former article, which he says he again repeats, and he explains that his appeal was to the people and not to the assassin. He means open attack instead of concealed murder, or, to give his words their most favorable construction, he incites to revolution instead of assassination. His interpretation of his own language is about on a plane with Kelly's explanation of the Oregon dispatches. The point which he makes is so fine that it will be necessarily determined by a jury in a public trial.

NORTH CAROLINA DEMOCRATS.

THEIR ATTACK UPON A COMMISSION CREATED BY THEIR OWN PARTY—THE INAUGURATION OF THE PRESIDENT-ELECT BITTERLY OPPOSED—HOW 30,000 AMERICAN CITIZENS ARE TO BE DISFRANCHISED.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

RALEIGH, Feb. 20.—The Senate having passed the resolutions telegraphed on Sunday last, a Democratic member on yesterday introduced the following in the lower house of the Legislature:

Whereas, The Joint Electoral Commission, by their action, deliberately sanctioned fraud and have violated the spirit and the letter of the act constituting said Commission; and whereas, The direct result of their action in refusing to inquire into the fraud of the Returning Boards is to place in the office of President a person who has no legal or moral right to hold said office, in defiance of the will of the people, and in opposition to a large majority of the Electoral vote legally cast; therefore,

Resolved, That the General Assembly of North Carolina do enter its solemn protest against the action of said Commission, and the Senators and Representatives of North Carolina in Congress are request d to use all lawful means, confining themselves within the terms of the act constituting the Commission, to prevent the inauguration of the person attempted to be illegally thrust upon the people of the United States.

An amendment was adopted making the resolution refer to a majority of the Commission. After considerable angry and excited talk, action was postponed until the night session to-morrow. The Georgia game is now on foot in the Legislature. A bill is now before the Senate to amend the Constitution so as to require each person who applies to vote to exhibit his receipt for poll-tax for the preceding year. The Democratic organs are pressing this bill upon the ground that it will virtually disfranchise 25,000 or 30,000 negroes, and thus make North Carolina as firmly Democratic as the State of Georgia.

THE PHILADELPHIA ELECTION.

A SWEEPING REPUBLICAN VICTORY—MAYOR STOKLEY RE-ELECTED FOR A THIRD TERM BY A LARGE MAJORITY—DESPERATE EFFORT OF THE DEMOCRATS TO SECURE CONTROL OF THE CITY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 20.—One of the hardest fought battles for municipal offices which has ever taken place in this city was that of to-day for Mayor, Receiver of Taxes, and City Solicitor. These three offices are very important, and the Democrats made strenuous efforts to capture all, but were not successful. Hon. William S. Stokley, the present incumbent, was re-elected Mayor by a good majority considering the opposition which was made against him. During his present term he incurred the displeasure of some of the Republicans who were ambitious for the office of Mayor, and failing to reach the prize themselves took up as their candidate Mr. Joseph L. Caven, an Independent Republican. A combination was formed with the Democrats, and Mr. Caven foisted upon them as their candidate. To this the Bourbon minded, straight-out members of the party objected, and refused to support him, preferring Mayor Stokley again to a man whom they did not know, and who was crammed down their throats. In addition to this, the orderly citizens feared a Democratic Police force. Six years ago we had Democratic policemen, who bartered with thieves, and made life unsafe in the streets even in daytime. A complete reign of terror prevailed, but under Mayor Stokley the roughs were driven from the city and order has been preserved. The people took the matter in their own hands and re-elected Mayor Stokley to a third term.

The Democracy had a two-fold purpose in their desperate effort to secure control of the municipal offices, notably that of Mayor and Receiver of Taxes, because they could then use the latter office for the purpose of flooding the State with bogus tax receipts, and by fraud overcome the Republican majority in the city, and capture the State. This, in conjunction with a Democratic Police to club voters from the polls in the city, would have given them control of immense power. The majority for Mayor Stokley is estimated, at 1 o'clock A. M., from returns thus far received, at about 5,000. Nelson West, Republican, is elected City Solicitor, and Robert C. Roberts, Republican, Receiver of Taxes.

MUNICIPAL ELECTIONS IN PENNSYLVANIA.

TYRONE, Feb. 20.—A Republican Mayor was elected to-day.

LEBANON, Feb. 20.—The Democratic candidate for Burgess was elected to-day. The Council is also Democratic.

HARRISBURG, Feb. 20.—Meigzar, Republican, was elected Controller to-day. The Democrats gain in both branches of the Council.

PITTSBURG, Feb. 20.—Liddell, Dem. was elected Mayor to-day, and McCarthy, Dem., Controller. Kilgore, Rep., was elected Treasurer over Cosgrove, Dem. Liddell's majority over Humphries, Rep., in 74 of the 101 precincts, is 1,414.

THE MILITIA OF SOUTH CAROLINA.

COLUMBIA, Feb. 20.—Information having reached President Grant, through Republican channels here, that several white military companies, including the Washington Light Infantry, which attended the Bunker Hill and Centennial celebrations, intended celebrating Washington's Birthday by a parade, an order was issued to Col. Black, Eighteenth Infantry, commanding the post here, to prevent any such demonstration or parade on the part of such organizations. Gov. Hampton, upon hearing of it, issued a proclamation tonight calling upon the people to comply with the requirements of the President's order, but protesting in strong language against it and asking that the celebration be postponed until some more auspicious period. The order creates some excitement among the people and indignation among the citizen Militia.

PETITIONS AND PRAYERS IN CANADA.

OTTAWA, Feb. 20.—On a motion to receive several petitions from boards of trade in the United States, the Speaker said he was of opinion that citizens of the United States or other aliens had no right whatever to petition this House, and ruled that they could not be received. The report of the committee on the form of prayer to be used at the opening of the House was presented. It recommends prayers for the Queen, Prince of Wales, and Parliament, ending with the Lord's Prayer. It was agreed that the Speaker should read prayers before the galleries were opened in his own language, and that the form of prayers should be printed with the votes and proceedings in French and English respectively, that all might understand them.

TURKEY AND HER ENEMIES.

ARRIVAL AT CONSTANTINOPLE OF MUNITIONS OF WAR—RUSSIA'S ARMY WELL ORGANIZED AND READY TO CROSS THE BORDER—THE CZAR'S NEGOTIATIONS WITH THE SHAH OF PERSIA.

BUCHAREST, Feb. 20.—The Turkish flotilla has returned to Sultina after an excursion to Rustchuk. It has just been reinforced by a second iron-clad corvette.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Feb. 20.—The Servian Plenipotentiaries had their first conference with Safvet Pasha to-day. The interview lasted three hours. The conciliatory impression continues. The Porte does not seem disposed to press its points relative to guarantees as a sine qua non. The British steamer Lotus, Capt. McNabb, which sailed from New-Haven Jan. 23, with a cargo of arms and ammunition for the Turkish Government valued at $1,750,000 has arrived here with boats and deck-house damaged, hatches and skylights washed away, and winches broken. The cargo is also reported to be damaged.

LONDON, Feb. 20.—The Vienna Political Correspondence, in its detailed account of the strength of the Russian Army, says: "In all Russia has 600,000 men, or two-fifths of her Army organized. Of these about half are ready on the frontiers, and only awaiting orders to begin operations."

The correspondent of the Times at Vienna says the statement of the Political Correspondence appears to be a tolerably correct one, when compared with information from other sources.

A special dispatch from Pera says: "Twenty more Bulgarians, charged with complicity in the May insurrection, have been sentenced each to 20 years' penal servitude. Chevket Pasha, of atrocities notoriety, has been appointed to command an army corps on the Danube."

LONDON, Feb. 21.—A dispatch from Vienna reports that the Roumanian representative has officially informed Count Andrassy that Roumania desires to remain neutral in any case, and the Roumanian Militia will be disbanded next week. A special dispatch from Pesth says it is rumored in Belgrade that Russia has informed Servia that she intends to cross the Pruth within 10 days. A correspondent at Pera telegraphs that peace with the principalities is considered certain. A dispatch says news has been received that the Russians are actively working in Persia to induce the Shah to join them in the event of war. The inducement held out to Persia is the possession of disputed frontier territory. The Shah does not appear to be altogether averse to the plan. The Turkish frontier is almost denuded of troops, and even with 20,000 soldiers whom the Shah can collect, something might be done. The chronic differences between Turkey and Persia would furnish a ready excuse for a declaration of war. The foregoing strengthens the impression that Russia, in the event of war, will make her chief effort on Turkey's Asiatic frontier.

ENGLAND AND EASTERN AFFAIRS.

LONDON, Feb. 20.—In the debate in the House of Lords to-day on the Eastern question the Duke of Argyle pointed out that the object of the Marquis of Salisbury's mission had been to secure peace in Europe and reform in Turkey. Neither of these objects had been attained. Turkey was not reformed, and there was no prospect of peace in Europe. He deprecated the unreasonable suspicion of Russia which actuated English policy up to August last. He admitted that England had a great interest in the neutrality of Egypt and in preventing Constantinople from falling into the hands of any great European power. But, except on these points, he could conceive of no injury to Great Britain by any transfer of power from the Turkish Empire. He pointed to the various instances where European powers, while professing to respect the independence guaranteed to Turkey by the Treaty of Paris, had interfered in Turkish affairs in a way that showed they regarded Turkish justice as utterly unworthy of confidence. It was necessary to carry this argument further in the sense indicated by the Marquis of Salisbury when he declared the independence of Turkey might at the present time be interpreted so as to be consistent with the joint military and diplomatic action of the guaranteeing powers. The speaker concluded with an eloquent appeal to the Earl of Beaconsfield to mark the close of his career by procuring some measure of liberty for Christians in Turkey.

The Earl of Derby asked if it was not premature to say the conference had failed. He could not yet say the peace of Europe was to be broken; and, relative to internal reforms it must be remembered that Turkey had lately introduced very comprehensive reforms. We were not justified in concluding because a particular mode of effecting reforms was not adopted, that Turkey, therefore, had a fixed purpose of rejecting all reforms. He pointed to the fact that the Government had never been willing to fight for Turkey, and had informed the Turks so as far back as last May. He admitted that although the Government had never changed its policy, they had in one respect changed their course of action; that is to say, that having to deal with the danger of a European war, which at one time appeared imminent, they had done and accepted many things which they would have thought impossible to do or accept if more had not been at stake than the suppression of a petty insurrection. The Government had said all along that the Turkish Government could be maintained only by the maintenance of their internal administration. He agreed with the Duke of Argyle that independence was a very elastic term. There were in all parts of the world States which by their weakness were exposed to measures on the part of stronger neighbors which those neighbors would not adopt toward more powerful States. In answer to the charge of undue suspicion of Russia, he said it was not his duty or wish to say anything of the Russian Government, but it was perfectly well known that official personages, personages connected with the Russian Government, were among the most active agents in stirring up the disturbance in Herzegovina. Lord Derby cited passages from former Blue Books, showing that in one case a Russian Consulate was the head-quarters of the insurgents. The Bulgarian outrages had only secondary influence on the change of the Government's course of action. The principal cause was that Servia entered a fight with an army of which the fighting element was almost entirely Russian. Russia was in the field in fact, though not in name. Russian feeling was so excited that there was very great fear of war. Lord Derby gave a detailed account of the efforts to procure an armistice. He was never so much surprised in his life as when Russia refused the five months' armistice. If the Duke of Argyll, or any other member of the Opposition, desired to raise the question of the advisability of coercion, he [the speaker] would undertake to show that coercion would be unreasonable unless it meant war, and war would be fraught with every possible danger to Europe. Since the conference the Government had been unremitting in pressing the expediency of peace on Servia, Montenegro, and Turkey—a few days would show with what success. If they were successful half the work of the conference would be done. There would, of course, remain the question of internal reform. He was not prepared to give a definite opinion on this subject, but he was much struck with the suggestion made by the Turkish representative at the conference that the Porte should be given a reasonable time to carry out reforms in its own way, and then if nothing was done the powers would have the right to demand guarantees. This was admitted by Midhat Pasha, and he [Lord Derby] thought the idea was a moderate and fair one.

The Marquis of Salisbury, replying to the Earl of Kimberly, who blamed the Government for having declared their intention not to coerce Turkey, said the present complications were traceable to the treaty concluded after the Crimean War. The idea of six European powers undertaking the tutelage of the subject populations of Turkey, was an impracticable chimera. Long and sad experience had proved that Turkey would not reform herself as the powers expected when they undertook the obligation to protect her Christian subjects. The Government, however, are bound by the acts of their predecessors. We, like all the Governments, since the Crimean war, are bound to respect the treaty by which that war was concluded. He pointed to the startling fact that the persons who signed that treaty guaranteeing the independence and integrity of Turkey are now attacking Lord Derby for not having fostered and encouraged the Herzegovinian insurrection when the hopelessness of Turkey's reform became evident. It is also plain that England's attitude toward Turkey could not remain the same, as in 1856. Lord Salisbury asked, however, were we justified in immediately turning around on our ancient ally, who had long been encouraged to count upon our support. If the terrible events in Turkey were to alienate the undoubted affection which had been entertained by the English people for Turkey, surely it was our duty to struggle as long as possible against a change which forced us, at all events, to put a new and unexpected interpretation on words to which England was pledged. We have changed as far as force of circumstances have compelled us, but we have not dissolved our traditional alliance without sorrow, and we still cling to the hope that some change in counsels may restore that alliance. The refusal of the Turks to accept the recommendations of the conference is a mystery. Their infatuation seems tremendous. The assertions of the Porte's irresponsible advisers that the Russian Army was disorganized and diseased had much influence on its determination. In regard to England's not having used threats of coercion at the conference, Lord Salisbury thought it important to place upon record the fact that, as far as the proceedings of the conference went, no power had used such threats, and nothing had happened at the conference to pledge Russia as a matter of honor to take military action against the Porte. He energetically challenged the Opposition to bring forward a definite motion stating the policy which they advised. He showed that the only coercion England could threaten would be the destruction of Stamboul by a fleet. Turkey would probably disregard it. As the question of yielding is not in the hands of those who are most deeply interested in the prosperity of the country, the execution of the threat would destroy the only Government which now controls thirty millions of people. Our policy is to endeavor to secure some measure of liberty and safety for the subject populations. Of that we do not despair. Midhat Pasha was unquestionably the greatest opponent of the conference. It is fair to assume until we know otherwise, that his fall betokens a more conciliatory spirit. We hope that if the substance of the reforms be adopted, no power will consider itself bound or justified in trying to solve the question by the sword. If once the powers are assured that peace is hopeless, there is every reason to fear that the great energy which now induces them to strain every nerve to avert war will lead them in the future to say this question must be settled once for all. That is the terrible danger.

The Earl of Beaconsfield challenged the Opposition to propose a distinct motion. He deprecated the policy of coercion. The policy of Europe, and not merely of England, was to maintain the integrity and independence of the Ottoman Empire. That was the principle which has always been acted upon by all statesmen as affording the best security for the peace of Europe. Nothing had happened since the treaty of Paris to show that this principle was not wise and just.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

LONDON, Feb. 20.—Much uneasiness is felt on account of an outbreak of rinderpest at Hull, which cannot be traced to any contact with infectious beast or matter. Stringent measures have been taken to isolate local outbreaks.

On the Stock Exchange to-day the foreign market was stagnant. Prices tend down, but there was no business doing. The suspense of the political situation flattens all international stocks. American railways are depressed.

VIENNA, Feb. 20.—The journals here report that an agreement has been reached on the bank question, and the Hungarian Ministers have started for Pesth.

PARIS, Feb. 20.—M. Duverdier, an extreme Radical, has been elected President of the Municipal Council.

LONDON, Feb. 21.—A dispatch from Barcelona says seven per ons have been arrested there. It is said that they are charged with taking part in a Zorilliist plot which was to have been carried into effect during the approaching sojourn of King Alfonso at Barcelona. The trial of the prisoners has already commenced.

LONDON, Feb. 21.—Mr. Hutchinson, Liberal, has been returned to the House of Commons from Halifax, receiving 5,750 votes against 3,624 thrown for Mr. Gamble, Conservative.

BUSINESS FAILURE IN CHICAGO.

CHICAGO, Feb. 20.—The failure is announced of D. Kreigh, commission merchant in produce and provisions, and an extensive dealer on 'Change. The rapid decline in the price of provisions is assumed to be the cause of the failure. Mr. Kreigh says he cannot yet give any definite figures; but it is known the failure is for a very large amount. Among the secured liabilities are $100,000 in trust deed, to N. Corwith, of Chicago; $130,000 in warrantee deed to James L. Flint, of New-York, and a mortgage on real estate (amount unknown) to T. J. S. Flint of New-York. The unsecured liabilities are from $1,000 to $4,000 each, to numerous firms on 'Change. Mr. Kreigh is an old and highly respected citizen of Chicago, and his failure has caused great surprise to all except those who were informed of his late business transactions.

THE ST. LOUIS MUTUAL LIFE.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 20.—The Receivers of the St. Louis Mutual Life Insurance Company filed suit in the Circuit Court to-day against the Columbia Life Insurance Company for a settlement of accounts between the two companies. The petition sets forth that in December, 1873, the St. Louis Mutual Life Insurance Company executed a contract with defendant under which all its property and assets of every kind were transferred to the defendant, amounting to nearly $11,000,000, and that the contract was illegal and void, and judgment in the above amount is therefore prayed.

MURDERER IDENTIFIED.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 20.—The proprietor of the hotel at Jefferson, Texas, at which Bessie Moore and her murderer stopped, while in that city, arrived here this morning and identified "Abe" Rothschild as the man who was last seen with Bessie Moore. While there he passed under the name of Monroe. It will be remembered these dispatches gave an account on Saturday last of an attempted suicide by Rothschild, supposed to have been caused by remorse for the murder of Miss Moore.

THE ASHTABULA DISASTER.

CLEVELAND, Feb. 20.—A special dispatch to the Leader from Ashtabula says that the Coroner's jury to inquire into the cause of the disaster reassembled to-day. Several brakemen were examined relative to the length of time it took to stop a train running at a given speed on which the patent brakes are used.

MURDER IN THE SECOND DEGREE.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 20.—In the criminal court to-day George Waters, (colored,) who has been on trial for the past two days for the murder of William Giles (colored) in December last, was found guilty of murder in the second degree and sentenced to 15 years' imprisonment in the Penitentiary.

AID FOR THE WAMSUTTA STRIKERS.

FALL RIVER, Feb. 20.—A mass meeting of mill operatives held here to-night resolved to aid the strikers of the Wamsutta Mills, New-Bedford, and voted an assessment for that purpose.

THE MOBILE AND OHIO RAILROAD.

MOBILE, Feb. 20.—In the Mobile and Ohio Railroad case a rehearing of Judge Bruce's late decision in opposition to the former decision of Judge Woods will be heard in April.

HOMICIDE IN KENTUCKY.

LOUISVILLE, Feb. 20.—E. D. Kennedy, Master Commissioner of the Garrard County Court, was killed to-day by his nephew, G. C. Kennedy, at Lancaster. They had a difficulty about a lawsuit. The murderer was arrested.

THE RAILROAD STRIKE IN BOSTON.

ACCIDENTS AND APPREHENSION OF OTHERS MORE SERIOUS—THE STRIKERS TAMPERING WITH THE ENGINES—NARROW ESCAPES ALONG THE BOSTON AND MAINE ROAD.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Feb. 20.—The strike on the Boston and Maine Railroad does not change materially. Both parties are confident of success and both are equally obstinate. Between them the public has to suffer, if not from actual loss, at least from nervousness and inconvenience. There is a constant apprehension that some fearful catastrophe will happen. To-day, as a train from Medford was being pushed into the depot by the shifting engine "Lion," it left the rails in the yard, in consequence of a misplaced switch, and went bounding over the sleepers for about 60 feet, striking a train standing upon the side track. The collision raised both trains from the ground, and, as they crowded against each other, the seats were wrenched out of position, and the sill timbers sprung, one of them being broken. The panels of the front car of the incoming train were stove in half its length, and the timbers of one truck were smashed. The train was quickly stopped and all excitement allayed, but some of the women were badly frightened and screamed frantically. The damage done was not serious, but the escape from worse consequences was very fortunate. There was a danger of the cars upsetting and had this occurred the cars would undoubtedly have caught fire, when the worst results might have followed. It is said that the switchman had not had time to replace the switch.

A dispatch from Portland says an accident happened, at midnight, to the freight train bound for Boston, and inquiry

A FRESH INSTALLMENT OF DOCTORS.

ANNUAL COMMENCEMENT OF THE MEDICAL DEPARTMENT OF THE UNIVERSITY OF THE CITY OF NEW-YORK—DEGREES CONFERRED UPON 157 STUDENTS.

The thirty-sixth annual Commencement of the Medical Department of the University of the City of New-York took place at the Academy of Music last evening, in the presence of an unusually large and brilliant assemblage. The auditorium, orchestra, parquet, and balcony were crowded with friends of the institution, fully one-half of whom were ladies. On the stage, which was handsomely decorated with flowers, were seated the members of the Faculty and other distinguished guests, including Chancellor Crosby, Profs. Loomis, Hammond, Darling, Weiss, Arnold, Goulet, Pardee, Darby, and Thompson; Bishops Quintard, of Tennessee, and Potter, of New-York; Prof. Little, Dra. Meyra, M. A. Finnell, Louis H. Ayme, L. Lopez-Silvero, and many others. The music was furnished by Grafulla, and comprised selections from Strauss and other popular authors.

The Mott gold medal for the best anatomical process was conferred upon Mr. M. M. Johnson, of Connecticut, and the silver prize upon Mr. Alexander Dallas, of New-York. Honorable mention for proficiency and superior excellence in this examination was made of the following gentlemen: H. C. Toal, F. A. Gillen, C. A. L. H. Von Ramdohr, M. T. Scott, A. G. Paine, Jay Owens, L. Haupt, G. L. Krieger, F. W. Brown, H. H. Coleman, W. P. Bowen, H. T. Dawson, S. Kohn, A. E. Prince, and W. E. Cladek.

The address of Bishop Quintard contained a pleasant reference to the past 30 years' history of the institution and of the noted men who had been connected with it, and was full of sympathy and encouragement for the young graduates before him. At the same time he cautioned them against overconfidence, and reminded them that perseverance and constant study were as necessary in the physician as in the student. Theirs was a burdensome profession, often an overtasked and unremunerative one, and patience and courage were, above all things, necessary. He did not side with those who thought a strictly medical education sufficient for a good physician. A liberal allowance of academical studies—especially Greek and Latin—were essential to a man of thorough cultivation, and certainly would not detract from a physician's usefulness or capacity for improvement. He would especially urge upon them a spirit of manly independence and self-reliance. The address was listened to with marked attention and elicited much applause. During the evening Chancellor Crosby conferred degrees upon the following undergraduates, 157 in number:

ACADEMY OF DENTAL SURGERY.

DISCUSSION ON THE USE OF ANÆSTHETICS FOR DENTAL OPERATIONS—PAPERS ON OTHER SUBJECTS READ.

The regular meeting of the American Academy of Dental Surgery was held last evening, the President, Dr. George H. Perine, presiding. After the records of the last meeting were read, reports of different committees were made and accepted. Donations to the library, consisting of volumes of medical and dental publications, were received. The President stated that since the last meeting of the academy he had received a number of letters requesting his theory respecting the use of anæsthetics for dental operations, and as the public are interested in the subject, he would be glad to have an expression from the Fellows. Dr. Robinson said there was often a want of care in the administration of anæsthetics. He considered it dangerous to administer them without first understanding the physical condition of the patient. He fully concurred with the views of Dr. Perine, that patients affected with apoplectic tendencies should never rise from the effects of an anæsthetic, even for a very painful operation.

Dr. Reed said there is a stage of the anæsthetic process during which the inhalation should be carried on slowly, for it is a stage of danger. He alluded to the struggling stage. That the air is not saturated is the reason that we do not hear of still more accidents. We understand that this vapor of the residual air is being absorbed even if respiration is entirely suspended. And now we may mark that at the close of this stage, we can see how easy it may be to give an overdose. After some further discussion, an interesting paper upon the "Tumors of the Mouth" was read by J. P. Buddington, M. D., which was treated scientifically both from a surgical and medical point of view. After the discussion of this paper the President introduced C. M. Larich, M. D., Moscow, Russia, who detailed some interesting cases in practice, which interested his auditors. He paid a handsome tribute to American institutions. The President tendered his thanks and the thanks of the Academy to Dr. Larich for the treat enjoyed. The meeting then adjourned.

ACCIDENT AT THE NEW COURT-HOUSE.

A painful illustration was afforded yesterday of the negligent and dangerous manner in which the work on the interior of the new Court House is being carried on. The workmen have been engaged for several weeks in tearing down the sections of iron pillars, set in brick, which were designed to support the dome originally intended to surmount the edifice. The present architect is having brick piers erected for the support of the octagonal dome, which, according to the new plan, is to be put on the structure. In the work of removing the pillars a derrick was used to lower the sections as they were hewn out. While endeavoring to move the derrick at 11 A. M. yesterday, one of the ropes gave way and the derrick with its tackling fell into the passage-way around the balcony on the third floor. Henry Heynard, one of the workmen, was then engaged in removing a plank. He was caught by some of the tackling of the derrick, and was forced against the iron balcony in the rotunda. His left arm was badly fractured and he received a severe wound on the head. Mr. McDonnell, one of the Superior Court officers, rushed hastily to the spot and picked up the wounded man, who was bleeding profusely. Heynard was taken to the Chambers Street Hospital. Another workman had his hand badly cut. The heavy rest of the derrick fell close to where Messrs. Governeur P. Lowery and Charles D. Burrill were engaged in a discussion. Persons familiar with the manner in which the work on the dome is being done have repeatedly expressed surprise that no accident has occurred hitherto. There is at present, just at the place where the accident occurred yesterday, a mass of brickwork which looks as though it might topple over at any moment. During the week of removing the iron plates on top of the dome, heavy iron bolts were constantly falling into the passage-ways beneath, and it is rather providential that no person was struck by them.

WORK OF BROADWAY CUT-THROATS.

EX-GEN. IRRIE, OF WASHINGTON, KNOCKED DOWN AND ROBBED NEAR TWENTY-SIXTH STREET.

At 10 o'clock on Monday evening a gentleman, who afterward proved to be ex-Gen. Irrie, of Washington, was found lying in a semi-unconscious condition at the corner of Twenty-sixth street and Broadway, with a deep gash in the back of his head. He was taken to the Police station on Thirtieth street by Officer Hill, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, and as soon as he had recovered sufficiently announced that he had been robbed of a gold watch and chain valued at $200 and a small sum of money. The gentleman first stated his name as Atborn, but subsequently gave his real name, and asked that a message be taken to his friend, President Smith, of the Police Department, who had been his class-mate at West Point. The officers, thinking that his wounds had temporarily unsettled his mind, neglected to send the note. The General's injuries were attended to by Dr. Fetter, and he was allowed to depart, after the Sergeant at the desk had first entered a charge of "intoxication" against him. A TIMES reporter visited the General, who is confined to his bed, at his residence in West Twenty-seventh street, yesterday, and obtained from him the following statement:

"I had just called at the Army and Navy Club and was walking down Broadway to the Stevens House. As the corner of Broadway and Twenty-seventh street I paused under the light of the street lamp to consult my watch. In doing so I noticed two men close behind me, who seemed to be watching my movements. In getting at the watch I had to unbutton my Ulster, displaying both the watch and the large gold neck chain to which it was attached. I found that it was too late to make the call I intended, and I accordingly crossed to the other side of the street and walked down to the corner of Twenty-sixth street and Broadway. Here I was struck suddenly from behind, and fell to the ground. I remember nothing more until I reached the Station-house, where my wound, which bled freely, was attended do. As soon as I recovered consciousness I found that my watch and chain were gone, together with a few dollars in money and my memorandum book, containing important private papers. I was not intoxicated at the time, and I am positive that the loss was the result of robbery through carelessness. I had been taking one or two glasses of wine during the evening, but not enough to affect me to any extent."

The General's wounds consist of an ugly gash three inches in length, immediately back of the left ear, and a contusion on the top of his head. The doctor at the Station-house thought that it had probably been inflicted by a knife. When the General reached the Station-house his pockets were found turned inside out, and his appearance indicated that he had been professionally "gone through" by armed footpads. The Sergeant who was at the desk at the time says that the General had certainly been drinking more or less, and that it was not clear whether he had been robbed, or had merely lost his property while in a state of inebriety. A diamond ring and the purse were found on him, and these were returned to him when he left. It is well known that men, and particularly well-dressed persons, in a partially intoxicated condition, are a favorite prey with highwaymen, from the fact that they are unable from their condition to identify their assailants.

A few days ago a gentleman who was walking down Fifth avenue with his wife was suddenly confronted, at Twenty-sixth street, by three men, apparently tramps, two of whom stationed themselves on either side of the couple, the man on the right seizing the lady's ear-rings and attempting to wrench them off. The gentleman showed fight, and the ruffians fled. The facts in the case of Gen. Irrie have been communicated to the authorities at the Central Office, and a vigorous search is being instituted for the recovery of the plunder and the arrest of the thieves.

GRÆCO-ROMAN WRESTLING.

A fair number of spectators assembled at the Metropolitan Riding Academy, Third avenue, between Sixty-third and Sixty-fourth streets, last evening to witness a Græco-Roman wrestling match between William Miller, the champion, and Ernest Treber. Miller is 29 years of age, stands 5 feet 9¾ inches in his stockings, and weighs about 200 pounds. Treber is three years younger, is 5 feet 7 inches high, and weighed last night 180 pounds. As Treber had earned considerable reputation in some of the smaller cities, and had been highly spoken of by the local press, it was thought that the last night's match would be well contested, although Miller was the favorite. From the moment the men began to wrestle, however, it was evident that those who had expected to see a good struggle would be disappointed. The match was for the best three in five falls, with no restrictions as to grips. Time was called shortly after 8:30 o'clock, and when the men came together Treber rushed at his bulky opponent as though he meant to make short work of him. The latter threw him handily in succession, and it soon became apparent that he was no match for Miller, who played with him as a cat would with a mouse. The first two falls were won by Miller in seven and nine minutes respectively. The third was won by Treber, who, taking advantage of a slip made by Miller, pluckily rushed in on him and threw him backward, making the fall in 10½ minutes. The fourth fall was won by Miller in eight minutes, and the match was declared in his favor.

DELAWARE, LACKAWANNA AND WESTERN.

The annual meeting of the Delaware, Lackawanna and Western Railway Company was held at the office of the Company on Monday afternoon, but particulars were withheld until yesterday. The entire old Board of Managers and former officers were re-elected. The annual report was presented, of which the following summary only was furnished for publication:

THE RIVAL BOARDS OF BROKERS.

The organization of the rival Board of Brokers has alarmed the members of the regular Stock Exchange, and a short time ago the Executive Committee appointed a sub-committee to examine into the advisability of reducing rates of brokerage. Yesterday afternoon after business hours a public meeting of members was held on the floor of the Exchange to express their views on the matter. Mr. Henry G. Stebbins presented a resolution recommending the abolition of the penalty prescribed for doing business below the high rates of brokerage established two years ago. This was not satisfactory, and Mr. Thomas Denny offered a substitute, recommending that the Executive Committee reduce the rates to 1-16 for investment securities, 1-32 for other securities, and $2 per 100 shares to members. These are the rates under which the new Open Board are to do business, and they are about the same as were current before the advance. The substitute was carried enthusiastically, the vote standing 343 for to 11 against it. It is expected that the Executive Committee will take immediate action.

SUICIDE OF A FARMER.

NEWBURG, Feb. 20.—William H. White, aged 39 years, a farmer, living near Fishkill Village, Dutchess County, hanged himself yesterday. Mental depression was the cause. He leaves a wife and three children.

FORTY-FOURTH CONG

SECOND SESSION.... Feb. 20.

SENATE.

The Senate resumed its session at 10 o'clock, but no business whatever was transacted, it having decided yesterday to sustain the decision of the Electoral Commission in the Louisiana case, and notified the House accordingly. The Senate awaited notification from the House that that body was ready to meet the Senate for the purpose of resuming the counting of the Electoral votes. At 1:30 P. M., Mr. Adams, Clerk of the House of Representatives, appeared at the bar of the Senate and announced the action of the House in regard to the decision of the Commission. He also informed the Senate that the House was now ready to meet it for the purpose of resuming the count, and the Senate, headed by its officers, left the chamber.

THE OBJECTION TO THE MICHIGAN ELECTOR.

Upon returning at 2:30 P. M. the President pro tem. announced that the Senate having withdrawn from the joint meeting of the two houses of Congress upon the submission of an objection to counting the vote of D. L. Crossman, an Elector for the State of Michigan, the objection would be read. The Secretary having read such objection, Mr. Allison, of Iowa, submitted the following:

Resolved, That the vote cast by Daniel L. Crossman, as an Elector from the State of Michigan be, and the same is hereby directed to be counted, notwithstanding the objections made thereto.

Mr. STEVENSON, of Kentucky, inquired if the Senator [Mr. Allison] knew the fact that the person alleged to have been ineligible was not a Government officer.

Mr. ALLISON replied that he did not, but he heard the testimony read before the joint meeting.

Mr. THURMAN, of Ohio, said this testimony was not as clear upon this very important subject as the Senate might desire it to be. It appeared that an Elector had been voted for in Michigan who held an office of trust and profit under the United States. Although he had not acted for some time, he had not resigned. Mr. Bayard then spoke of the provision of the Constitution authorizing the appointment of Electors, and said the Constitution said the State should appoint a certain number of Electors, but should not appoint a certain class. The Constitution authorizes the State of Michigan to appoint 11 Electors. Suppose she should appoint 22, it would be rejected, because the State exceeded the number authorized by the Constitution. Congress was bound to observe its fealty to the Constitution in all things, and the provision in regard to the qualification of Electors was just as binding as that in regard to the number. At a late stage of the debate Mr. Bayard said, while he would adhere to all the requirements of the Constitution, he did not consider the facts in this Michigan case as made up were sufficient to exclude the vote of this Elector upon constitutional grounds.

Mr. MCMILLAN, of Minnesota, said that under the decision of the Electoral Commission, the vote of the Michigan Elector was legal; but there was another point to be considered. There was no testimony before the two houses of Congress that the Elector was ever an officer of the United States. The mere statement of some person before a committee of the House of Representatives was not evidence for the two houses of Congress. The best evidence as to the ineligibility of the Elector was the record of the court showing his appointment as Commissioner of that court. His own admission that he was such Commissioner was not sufficient evidence. The record of the court must be produced. Had it come to this, that a great political party sought to deprive a sovereign State of her rights in this manner? At any other time than this such an attempt to so deprive a State of her rights would meet with a rebuke from the whole nation.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY, of Michigan, said he looked upon the objection as one of mere technicality, without merit, which, if it should prevail, would disfranchise one-eleventh part of the people of Michigan.

Mr. ALLISON, of Iowa, modified his resolution so as to read:

Resolved, That the objection made to the vote of Daniel L. Crossman, one of the Electors of Michigan, is not good in law, and is not sustained by any lawful evidence.

Resolved, That said vote be counted with the other votes of the Electors of said State; notwithstanding the objection made thereto.

Mr. MORTON, of Indiana, referred to the action of the Senate yesterday in sustaining the decision of the Electoral Commission, and said he believed that decision to be law, and he should adhere to it to-day. What greater fraud could be practiced upon the people of a State than to deprive them of their suffrage by proving that an Elector held a petty, contemptible office which the people of Michigan did not know, and which the incumbent himself had forgotten. To deprive the people of a State of their votes upon such a pretense would be a fraud for which there was neither justification nor excuse. It had not been proved that this man ever was a United States Commissioner. The first and best proof of that fact would be a transcript of the record of the court. That transcript was just as attainable as the witness himself. The same principle decided by the Senate yesterday in sustaining the decision of the Electoral Commission was, that it was not competent to prove at this stage of the proceedings that an Elector was ineligible on the 7th of November last.

Mr. DAVIS, of Kentucky, referred to the case of Gen. Shields, whose seat in the Senate was contested, and said that Mr. Webster in that case held that it was not necessary to have the record of evidence; that the admission of Gen. Shields that he had not been born in this country was sufficient. The Senate had been told that it was sacrilege to exclude the vote of an Elector. Was it a sacrilege to obey the Constitution of the United States? Had not our forefathers, irrespective of party, respected the Constitution? A new spirit seemed to have come over Senators in regard to State rights. He was not satisfied that this man in Michigan was an officer, and, even if he was, it had been so long ago that he [Mr. Stevenson] had his doubt about his holding the office now, and would give the benefit of that doubt to Michigan. He thought that the vote of the Elector should be counted. [Cries of "Good" on the Republican side of the chamber.]

Several other Democratic Senators expressed doubt as to the Elector being an officer of the United States.

Mr. WHYTE, of Maryland, said that he could not vote for the resolution of the Senator from Iowa as it stood. He therefore submitted the following as a substitute:

Ordered, That while it is the sense of the Senate that no Senator or Representative, or person holding an office of trust or profit under the United States, shall be appointed an Elector, and that this provision of the Constitution is void in part, and cannot be carried into full execution, yet that the proof is not such as to justify the exclusion of the vote of Daniel L. Crossman as one of the Electors of the State of Michigan, and that his vote shall be counted.

Mr. NORWOOD, of Georgia, said when he signed the objection to the vote of Crossman this morning he knew nothing as to what the proof would be. He was satisfied now, from the evidence which had been submitted, that it was not sufficient to exclude the vote of this Elector.

The substitute of Mr. Whyte was rejected by a strict party vote—yeas 27, nays 39, as follows:

NAYS—Messrs. Alcorn, Allison, Anthony, Booth, Boutwell, Bruce, Cameron of Pennsylvania, Cameron of Wisconsin, Chaffee, Christianey, Clayton, Conover, Cragin, Dawes, Dorsey, Ferry, Frelinghuysen, Hamlin, Harvey, Howe, Ingalls, Jones of Nevada, Logan, McMillan, Mitchell, Morrill, Morton, Paddock, Patterson, Robertson, Sargent, Sherman, Spencer, Teller, Wadleigh, West, Windom, and Wright—39.

The question then being on the motion of Mr. Allison, Mr. MCDONALD, of Indiana, moved to amend by striking out the first resolution. The vote was:

Rejected—Yeas, 26; nays, 38, a strict party vote. Mr. COOPER, of Tennessee, demanded a separate vote on the resolutions, and the first one, as submitted by Mr. Allison, was agreed to by a vote of 40 yeas to 17 nays—a party vote. The second resolution was then unanimously agreed to—yeas, 63; nays, 0.

Mr. CHRISTIANCY moved that the House be notified of the action of the Senate, and also, that the Senate was ready to meet the House and resume the count. Agreed to.

CREDENTIALS PRESENTED.

Mr. HARVEY, of Kansas, presented the credentials of P. B. Plumb, elected United States Senator from the State of Kansas for six years from March 4, 1877. Placed on file.

Mr. DORSEY, of Arkansas, said he had been unexpectedly called away from the Senate yesterday, but had hoped to return in time to vote on the Louisiana case. He had not been able to get back, but if he had been present he would have voted to sustain the decision of the Commission.

At 5:15 a message was received from the House of Representatives announcing the action of that body in regard to the vote of Crossman, the Michigan Elector. On motion of Mr. ALLISON, the Senate proceeded to the House of Representatives.

OBJECTION TO NEVADA.

Upon returning, at 5:50, the President pro tem. stated the Senate had withdrawn from the joint meeting on objection submitted to the vote of the State of Nevada. The objection to the vote of R. M. Daggett, an Elector from that State, submitted in the joint meeting, was then read, and also the testimony of Mr. Daggett taken by the Committees on the Powers and privileges of the House in regard to his holding the office of Clerk of the United States Court, but which, he stated, he resigned on the 6th of November last.

Mr. JONES, of Nevada, submitted a resolution that the vote of R. M. Daggett be counted with the other votes of Nevada, notwithstanding the objection made thereto. Agreed to unanimously, and the Secretary directed to notify the House of Representatives of the action of the Senate.

At 6:15 o'clock the Secretary returned, and reported that the House had taken a recess before he reached the hall.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 10 o'clock A. M., but over half an hour was consumed in calling the roll to ascertain whether there was a quorum present.

COUNTING THE ELECTORAL VOTES.

Mr. GIBSON, of Louisiana, offering an order that the Hayes Electoral vote for the State of Louisiana be not counted.

Mr. HURLBUT, of Illinois, moved to amend by striking out the word "not."

Mr. NEW, of Indiana, opened the discussion. He said that he had voted for the Electoral Commission bill, and he was not ashamed of the support which he had given that measure. When he voted for that act he did so in full confidence that no requirement in it, either expressed or implied, would be ignored or treated as surplusage. He had enough of simplicity and credulity to believe that a Commission so constituted would not become mere counting tellers for the President of the Senate. He would vote to sustain the objections to the decision of the Commission. He was in favor of proceeding without unnecessary delay to a completion of the count, and he declared it to be his best judgment that the Democrats of the House, of the Senate, Louisiana, and of the Union should submit (he did not now think of a more appropriate word) to the installation of a minority President under the findings of the Commission.

Mr. SHELLEY, of Massachusetts, said that in the perfectly clear that the charges made by each party against the other were in the main true. He found it quite impossible to say which of the two sets of Electors coming up from Louisiana voiced the true will of the people of that State. It would have been hard to find wiser and more candid men than those who had pronounced the decision of the Electoral Commission. He appreciated the strength of their position. Congress could not be too jealous of the constitutional right of a State to choose its Presidential Electors, but there were cases where summus jus became the summa injuria; cases where the law, strictly interpreted and strenuously enforced, worked out results contrary to all law, and in such cases equity laid the spirit of the law aside. He found such a case in the pending issue. Granted that the Commission had clearly interpreted and accurately applied the laws, yet, what if the very principles on which the laws must rest became thereby subverted? "No nation," said Neibuhr, "ever died except of suicide, and the suicidal vice is engendered not so much in unjust statutes of a Government as in the immoral practices of a people which the Government is unable to punish and unable to restrain."

Mr. JOYCE, of Vermont, supported the decision of the Electoral Commission, and asked whether anybody supposed that if the decision had been the other way the wailing sounds about corruption would have been heard from the Democratic Party. He had heard, but was not to be frightened by threats of revolution and civil war, especially when they came from the Northern Democracy, for he knew the members of that party to be "childlike and bland" in their disposition to have no ambition for military glory, and to care nothing for "seeking the bubble reputation, even at the cannon's mouth." He therefore proposed to stick to what he honestly believed in, and risk the consequences. He declared that the whole scheme of the election to the Presidency of the grand fraud of Gramercy Park had been a superb Democratic cheat from beginning to end, and that the Democrats had started out with the impression that they could buy every man whom they could not overawe or delude.

Mr. TOWNSEND, of Pennsylvania, expressed his astonishment at the opposition made to the decision of the Electoral Commission by the Democratic Party, particularly as the Commission was a triunal of Democratic creation. He defended its action and argued that it was tied down by the Constitution and law, and that it was bound to adhere to the certificates returned to the President of the Senate, and could not go behind them. If the Commission had agreed to take evidence, where would it have got evidence to satisfy both parties? It could not have got it except by the reports of Congressional committees. The history of "the dark and bloody ground" of the bull-dosed parishes of Louisiana had never yet been written, and never would be written so long as the Democratic Party was in existence there. As to the task of fraud, there never had been a more bold-faced fraud attempted than the certificate of John McEnery, a private citizen, that eight other private citizens were legally constituted Electors.

Mr. MCMAHON, of Ohio, said that in his opinion the decision of the Commission in the case of Louisiana was worse in its consequence to the American people than the decision in the Florida case.

Mr. RICE, of Ohio, protested against the wrong and violence embodied in the decision, and argued that the whole subject should be referred back to the Commission.

Mr. CRAPO, of Massachusetts, said that as a member of the Louisiana Investigating Committee he had heard the testimony of the witnesses, and the result of it all in his mind was that the election was not entirely fair, free, and peaceable; that it was influenced and controlled by violence and intimidation, and that there had been in some sections of the State a determination on the part of the Democrats to carry the election, which had led to lawlessness which no good citizen approved, and which the people where he lived would not tolerate. He would not defend the action of the Returning Board, but he asked what must have been the condition of a State that made such a board necessary, that required such a system in order to guard against violence, and to protect in their political rights the timid, the ignorant, and the inoffensive, against the strong, the desperate, and the lawless.

Mr. WATTERSON said: If the acceptance of the inevitable with resolution and dignity be the highest act as it is the rarest form of courage known among men, it is made the harder in this present instance by the consciousness of double-dealing and foul play. Two courses are open to the majority on this floor; on the one hand, passionate outcry, at once impotent and childish; on the other hand, without violence or needless obstruction to the progress of events, and earnest, manly, but temperate protest against what we believe a great and grievous wrong. In my judgment the latter is our clear and bounden duty. We owe it to the necessities of the case; we owe it to the country; we owe it to ourselves. Because we were duped by false pretenses into a snare, furnished no reason why we should forget the obligations that press upon honorable men. In the very act of passing the Electoral Commission bill we provided for the contingency that has come upon us. It voted that the measure in perfect good faith. The result is against me, and detestable as I must think the means that brought it about, I accept it as a finality. I shall go to my people, and shall tell them all; for, as now advised, they know only a part. And when they have taken time for reflection, they will, I am very sure, intuitive as Hebrews and the grace of moderation, doing nothing that does not become good citizens. Life will still go forward, in spite of all this. There are many things to live for yet in this rough world, and among the rest that day of reckoning—"Dies iræ, dies illa"—when the dark shall be light, and the wrong be made right.

Mr. DANFORD, of Ohio, defended the decision of the Electoral Commission as one which outside of party feeling would meet the approval of the whole American people. He denied the Democratic assumption that there was fraud at the bottom of the returns in favor of the Hayes Electors in Louisiana. His judgment was that when the history of the last election in Louisiana was written it would be found rather that murder, intimidation, and outrage had failed in their purpose there. As to the return of Vernon Parish having been altered, he conceded that fact, but asked who was responsible for it? Every member of the Returning Board had sworn that he knew nothing of the transposition there. He knew the fact that a Committee of the House had before it a clerk of that Returning Board, who, by his own confession, had been villain enough to do it. He also knew, from the testimony of a Democratic witness, Duncan L. Kenner, that there had been Democratic money in the hands of the reform party in Louisiana to corrupt the Returning Board, or a member of it. He believed that, if the true and full vote of Louisiana had been counted, there would have been a large majority in favor of the Hayes Electors. Alluding to Mr. Field's speech on the Electoral Commission bill, he said that the "early watcher" from New-York would soon perceive that the flag on the Capitol was again furled, and that it had been pronounced that Rutherford B. Hayes, having received 185 Electoral votes, had been duly elected President from the 4th of March next. This declaration would be made in peace and would be accepted by the American people as a finality, and when Mr. Hayes came to his inauguration there was not an honest man in all the land who would not congratulate himself on the fact that, although there had been investigating committees into the elections in Florida, Louisiana, and Oregon, which had found much crookedness there, in all the words spoken, the letters written, the telegrams sent, there had not been traced to the President elect or to any member of his household, one word that would bring the blush of shame to the American people. [Applause.]

At this point [noon] the speaker announced that to-day's legislative session would begin. After prayer by the Chaplain, and the reading of yesterday's journal, the debate was resumed.

Mr. PIERCE, of Massachusetts, said that he would be glad to avoid the responsibility of voting on the question presented, but he did not think it could be avoided. It was with great diffidence that he ventured to dissent from the decision of the Commission, but the rule it laid down was one he could not conscientiously indorse. The Commission had refused to receive evidence further than that given before the Governor of the State. It could never have been intended by the fathers of the Constitution that Congress should not be able to scrutinize the returns of the Electoral votes. If that was not a matter which the representatives of the people could inquire into, then this Government stood on a very insecure foundation. He could not give his assent to any such declaration. It was contrary to good government and good morals.

Mr. ELLIS, of Louisiana, argued against the decision, and characterized the members of the Returning Board as men whose souls were scorched with perjury blacker than that of Judas Iscariot. But the deed was done; the crime was accomplished. For four years more the Republican Party would hold the shadow of executive power. He said the shadow, because the substance of usurped power could never be realized. The immortal pencil of Doré had illustrated the legend of the Wandering Jew, who in all the weary march of years found no rest and no peace from his crime and its memories. He saw ever before him the pale suffering face of the Redeemer, and the accusing voice was ever in his ear. So it would be with the Republican Party. The spoils of office could not compensate it. The splendors of Presidential levees and receptions would not banish its presence. The silence and gravity of Cabinet meetings would not hush its avenging voice; and in four years more the great American people, wronged and outraged, would arise in their majesty and might, and hurl such drunken guests from power forever, and brand with the indelible brand of infamy men who had aided, countenanced, abetted, and defended this monstrous crime. [Applause.]

Mr. COX, of New-York, next addressed the House. He said in reference to the Elective bill, that a bill is the law; we know what it is; what its provisions are; we know what my friend from Kentucky [Mr. Watterson,] has said; that there was some scare in it. [Laughter.] Laugh and ex-

[illegible] will. I know [illegible] had gone out of this House when we had passed that bill, but I did not exactly see where the virtue had alighted. [Laughter.] I knew that the old privileges of the commons had departed; but to the interest of peace I gave a reluctant vote for the bill. But, one strange thing about the bill is this: that while we are permitted to vote in this House, yet, after all, it is a sort of post-mortem vote. [Laughter.] Although we are permitted to argue it is an argumentum ad post factum. We are gracefully permitted under this bill to argue after the manner is accomplished, and, although we vote and although we carry our vote in the House we are "gone." [Laughter.] We gain nothing; we are permitted to take 10 minutes after the counting and the conclusion. It is the old rule of han

District Attorney Rollins convicted Hammill of felonious assault, and the prisoner was sentenced by Judge Sutherland to four years in the State Prison.

COURT NOTES.

Chief Justice Davis, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday, heard argument and reserved his decision on a motion to vacate an order of arrest issued against Morris Weinberg, in the suit of William M. Carpenter and others, heretofore reported in THE TIMES.

Judge Robinson, in the Special Term of the Court of Common Pleas, yesterday denied a motion for the striking out of certain portions of the complaint in the case of Tilton and Feather against the United States Life Insurance Company, heretofore reported in THE TIMES.

William S. Wood, a thief, who was detected by John R. Taylor on the 9th inst. in the act of stealing a box of kid gloves from the store No. 441 Broadway, pleaded guilty yesterday in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions. Judge Sutherland sentenced Wood to two years in the State Prison.

On Jan. 1, 1876, James Nugent, of No. 10 Market street, stabbed Hugh Lennon, of No. 239 East Twenty-eighth street, in the abdomen, inflicting a serious wound. In Part I. of the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, Nugent pleaded guilty, and Judge Gildersleeve sentenced him to one year in the Penitentiary.

The suit of Lord against Funk and others was brought before Chief Justice Davis yesterday, on a motion to continue certain injunctions restraining the defendants from prosecuting their suits against the Virtue estate. The argument was adjourned until Friday. The details of the case have been published hitherto in THE TIMES.

Henry Meyer, Charles Fisher, and Peter Wolf, three men who entered the barn of Theodore W. Bayard, at New-Rochelle, Westchester County, and stole harness, lap-robes, and livery, valued in all at $150, pleaded guilty in Part II. of the Court of General Sessions. Judge Sutherland sentenced the thieves to two years and six months each in the State Prison.

The trial of the case of Henry H. Boody against Ogden and others was resumed before Judge Westbrook in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday, but the testimony was not of general interest. Samuel J. Tilden, who was one of the defendants, and escaped liability by pleading the Statute of Limitations, will probably appear as a witness in the case to-day.

In Part II. of the Court of General Sessions, yesterday, Assistant District Attorney Rollins convicted David Dawson, a negro, and his white wife Mary, of robbing a negro cook named Peter Mouton of $9 50 on the night of the 12th inst., in the den No. 59 Thompson street. The offense was a daring and aggravated one, and Judge Sutherland sentenced the prisoners to seven years each in the State Prison.

Chief Justice Davis, in Supreme Court, Chambers, yesterday granted an order for the publication of the summons in the case of Mary Emily E. Stickenholds against Carl Frederick Wilhelm Arnold Stickenholds, the latter being a non-resident of the State. The suit is brought for an absolute divorce on the ground of the defendant's alleged adultery with his sister-in-law. He is said to be in San Francisco, Cal.

Judge Spear, in the Superior Court, Special Term, yesterday rendered a decision in the case of Augustin Daly against Norman L. Munro and others. This suit grew out of the publication by the defendants of a story taken from Mr. Daly's play of "Pique," and Judge Speir in his decision sustains the plaintiff's right to an injunction, and the damages caused by the unauthorized publication are ordered to be settled by a reference.

Judge Donohue, in Part I. of the Supreme Court, yesterday granted a motion for the dismissal of the complaint in the case of Connors against the Mayor, &c., in which the plaintiff sued, as Administrator, to recover $5,000 for a death caused by the falling in of the roof of St. Andrew's Church. The motion was granted on the authority of the well-known case of Maximilian against the Mayor, &c., which limits the liability of the City for acts done by its officers.

JURORS WITH CONSCIENTIOUS SCRUPLES.

The case of the People against Robert Gerraty was called for trial in the Court of Oyer and Terminer yesterday. Gerraty was indicted for murder in the first degree, for killing John Smith on July 4 last. From the testimony, as given before the Coroner, it appears that Gerraty, in the evening of the day mentioned, accosted two young women who were walking along West Thirty-eighth street, near Tenth avenue. They passed him by, however, and he went up to them again when they were near No. 509 West Thirty-eighth street. He spoke to them a second time, and one of the young women answered him rather sharply. He thereupon struck her in the face with his fist, drawing blood. She fainted and fell, and a crowd gathered around. Among those in the gathering was the deceased. According to the testimony before the Coroner it would seem as though the accused went across the street and picked up a cart rung, and then came back and struck Smith with it. Smith died on July 8. In court yesterday both sides seemed desirous of having a speedy trial. With this view exertions were made to impanel a jury, but it was discovered that nearly each person called said he had conscientious scruples against the infliction of the death penalty. The panel of jurors was exhausted and only 10 jurors had been drawn. The case was then adjourned until Friday.

A QUESTION OF ADMISSION TO BAIL.

The matter of Andrew J. Mellen was brought before Chief Justice Davis, in Supreme Court, Chambers, on a rather novel application yesterday. Mellen, it appears, was indicted in Pennsylvania for grand larceny and embezzlement. The Governor of Pennsylvania granted a requisition directed to the Governor of this State for the extradition of Mellen, and Gov. Robinson duly issued his mandate for the surrender of the accused to the Pennsylvania authorities. A slight difficulty arose, however, in carrying out the executive mandate, it appearing that Mellen is held by the Sheriff of this county on a writ of arrest in a civil suit here. A writ of habeas corpus for the surrender of the prisoner by the Sheriff was taken out, but Judge Donohue, after argument, dismissed the writ and remanded the prisoner to the Sheriff's custody. The application yesterday was to admit the prisoner to bail pending the decision of the case on a certiorari, which was obtained from the Sheriff, and this writ, which operates as a stay of proceedings. On the part of the prisoner it was admitted yesterday that the statute with regard to bail does not, in terms, extend to cases in which an extradition warrant has been issued. The prisoner relied on his rights under the United States Constitution, which declares that excessive bail shall not be required. This case, it is claimed, is one in which the Pennsylvania laws allow the accused to be admitted to bail. Chief Justice Davis took the papers, reserving his decision on the question of admission to bail.

A BAR-ROOM ROBBERY.

On the night of Dec. 8, Morton F. Plant, of No. 584 Fifth avenue, while under the influence of liquor, accompanied a woman named Nellie Osborne to a liquor store at the corner of Mercer and Prince streets. Here Plant was robbed of his gold watch, locket, and scarf-pin by the bartender, Edward McLean, aided by Frederick S. Browne, alias Osborne, the woman's husband. Mr. Plant reported his loss at the Fifteenth Precinct Station-house, and Detective Edward Slevin, who was detailed by Capt. Byrne to work up the case, arrested Browne and the woman Osborne, Miss McLean and Osborne was tried in Part I. of the Court of General Sessions yesterday, by Assistant District Attorney Bell, who examined Nellie Osborne, as a witness for the prosecution, and proved that the robbery had been committed by Osborne and McLean. The jury found Osborne (or Browne) guilty of receiving stolen goods, and Judge Gildersleeve sentenced him to four years and six months in the State Prison.

DECISION IN AN EXTRADITION CASE.

Judge Johnson, of the United States Circuit Court, gave a decision yesterday in the case of Vanderveipen and wife, the Belgian forgers, who had been taken before him on a writ of habeas corpus and certiorari. He holds that a United States Commissioner's powers are co-ordinate with those of a Judge of the Circuit Court in extradition matters, and therefore refuses to take the case out of Commissioner White's hands or to review the evidence. The prisoners were remanded to the custody of the officers, and the examination will go on before the Commissioner.

SEIZURE OF COUNTERFEIT MONEY.

While Officer Moran, of the Fourteenth Precinct, was searching the premises of Eugene Schwer, at No. 16 Cannon street, in quest of stolen goods, he found $40 in counterfeit bills and $125 in counterfeit half-dollar pieces. He arrested Schwer and his wife, and arraigned them before Commissioner Shields, who held them for examination. All the spurious money was confiscated.

The ten-minutes' speeches of the Democrats in the House over the Louisiana decision were pitched in a somewhat funereal key. Mr. WATTERSON made a doleful reference to the great Day of Reckoning whose earthly counterpart has given him so much trouble. Mr. ELLIS, of Louisiana, predicted for the Republican Party the fate of the Wandering Jew, from which neither "the splendors of Presidential levees" nor "the silence and gravity of Cabinet meetings" could save them; while Mr. S. S. COX added a characteristic mixture of buffoonery and profanity to the mock heroics fitly spoken over the grave of Tildenism. The Democratic orators were perfectly agreed that the game was up, and they showed more unanimity than might have been expected in accepting, with however bad a grace, the inevitable.

The farcical objections made to the counting of the votes of Michigan and Nevada show to what desperate straits the extremists of the Democratic Party are reduced in their efforts to defeat a declaration of the popular will recorded at last election. More glaring examples of the want of either tact or leadership in that party could hardly be desired. Republicans have of late shown a good deal more vacillation than was desirable, and have by no means been free from the suspicion of divided counsels. But Democracy, in the presence of defeat, presents a far more pitiable spectacle than was ever presented by the half-hearted and hesitating policy of their opponents. Men who are nervously apprehensive of doing anything that might be made to appear wrong may not occupy a particularly heroic position, but they are infinitely more worthy of admiration and sympathy than men who are demoralized by the failure of a premeditated trick.

The country has had its attention concentrated so long and so closely on the Presidential dispute, that it will see the Forty-fourth Congress adjourn sine die and go home with no special desire for an early meeting of the Forty-fifth. The Senate is reported to be very anxious to secure this result by omitting to make any serious opposition to the appropriation bills, which came from the House greatly delayed. But the wish to get rid of politics as an absorbing topic of public interest can be carried too far, and we hope that the Senate will not forego a careful examination of the appropriation bills as they may really require. Worse things might happen than an extra session of Congress. Such a session might end in the passage of a bill for preparing to resume specie payments by judicious funding; and it might even lead to a practical and conclusive civil service reform. There is nothing so wholly bad in an extra session, at any rate, that the Senate need make improper concessions to avoid one.

The Washington journalist and jobber who was suspected of an attempt to utilize experience gained in the moth-exterminating business for the purpose of wiping out the next President of the United States explains that he has been misunderstood. It was the Watterson, not the Weldon plan that PIATT had in his mind when he wrote his sanguinary advertisement of Sunday last. With a taste for blood developed by the vermin-killing trade, he wants wholesale slaughter, not murder by retail. Of course, this blatant humbug invokes for his protection what he calls a "right sanctioned by time and sanctified by the blood of the people," and thereby makes a bid for some more cheap notoriety. His case is one of those which make one regret that the right of the whipping post is confined within so restricted an area.

An unfortunate person, evidently of unsound mind, has been going about the country during the past four or five years, proclaiming that the national currency received at the Treasury, in redemptions, is illegally reissued. About two years ago, his lunatic was found at large in the wilds of Nebraska, where he was, or had been, an observer for the Signal Service. Later, he made himself known in Alabama, and an investigating committee of the House finally captured him in New-Mexico or Colorado, and brought him to Washington. The extraordinary delusion which possessed him made some impression on the Democrats, who were panting for a sensation. But a brief examination into the facts of the case showed positively, conclusively, and satistactorily that such a charge was baseless, and that a reissue of the currency would be simply an impossibility. Notwithstanding this, the lunatic has appeared again, and has gravely confided his terrible secret to the House Committee on the Washington Real Estate Pool. Some of the Democratic newspapers print this old, old story with as much affectation of interest in it as if it were new and genuine. Assistant Secretary CONANT thinks it worth while to denounce it, in effect, as a yarn fit only to be told to credulous marines.

The Legislative committees have listened to the collective wisdom of New-York officeholders on the bills affecting the City, and they certainly have learned very little. Controller KELLY is in favor of economy in the abstract, but does not see very clearly where the pruning-knife is to be applied. He would like the work of salary reduction to be intrusted to the Board of Apportionment, which recently distinguished itself by raising the salary of the Commissioner of Jurors to $15,000, and by making similar additions to the pay of other Tammany Hall favorites. These samples of jobbery and extravagance were covered up by striking out from the final estimate the sum of $350,000 appropriated at the instance of Controller GREEN for repaving some of the down-town streets. Mr. KELLY did, however, admit that Policemen and Firemen would be adequately paid at $1,000 a year—a fact which the weak-kneed members of the Assembly Committee on Cities might profitably bear in mind. Commissioner CAMPBELL made some very sensible remarks about the contract system, which will doubtless, furnish the Democratic Aldermen with a fresh reason for trying to get rid of him. Commissioner ERHARDT'S urgent plea for a Police pension fund sounds rather strangely, in view of the recent misappropriation of the revenue from fines and penalties, which is pledged to the life insurance fund of the force. He is tired of the Street-cleaning Bureau, however, being naturally desirous to confine his attention to affairs where maladministration excites less indignant comment.

DEMOCRATIC RESPONSIBILITY.

Whether prudence or passion finally prevail in the councils of the Democratic Party, the country will understand where the responsibility rests for the existence of the disturbing causes now at work, and for whatever complications may arise in connection with the Presidency. Prudence may yet save the party from the more serious consequences which men like HEWITT, RANDALL, MILLS, and SPRINGER are desirous of bringing about, but it cannot obliterate the fact that forces are in operation within the party which would commit it to extreme and dangerous measures. On the other hand, the triumph of passion, with all its deplorable results, will only be the ultimate logical result of the policy inaugurated by Mr. TILDEN when his defeat became apparent, and acted upon under his guidance whenever an opportunity presented itself for reckless and dishonest tactics. In either case, the circumstances of the contest now carried on at Washington are comprehended with sufficient distinctness to leave no room for doubt as to the popular verdict that will be rendered when the pending proceedings end. It is the Democratic Party—not the Electoral Commission—which is on its trial.

The only reasons for the existence of the Commission are derived from the anarchical tendencies displayed by a large section of the Democrats under the excitement of defeat. There would have been no occasion for extra-constitutional methods of conducting the campaign had the Democratic managers evinced a willingness to abide by the result, as determined by the ordinary procedure. Just as Mr. TILDEN seems to have imagined that some superhuman agency had predestined him for the Presidency, so they insisted at every stage that, right or wrong, elected or not elected, he should be inaugurated. The claim and the purpose thus indicated might have been ascribed to a species of infatuation, if the cunning of Mr. TILDEN'S bloodless nature had not made his every act a matter of calculation. Impulse had nothing to do with the despicable means employed to secure him a majority. The remark is equally applicable to the Northern leaders who made his cause their own. An angry outburst might not have been unnatural, and allowance would have been made for violent utterances while it prevailed. But Mr. CLARKSON N. POTTER'S proposition was as cool as the Gramercy Park dispatches to PATRICK or KELLY. The idea of buying an Oregon Elector was not more deliberately thought out than was Mr. POTTER'S plan for preventing an election in the joint meeting of the two houses, and for bringing the Government to a deadlock by an act of usurpation on the part of the Democratic Representatives. The interests of the country were discarded as of no moment, in comparison with the ambition of a bad man and the greed of the crowd that were gathered around him. The Government was to be brought to a standstill for his sake. The foundation of civil war was to be laid in order that the Democrats might avenge their disappointment.

In pursuance of the same policy, arrangements were made for demonstrations on JACKSON'S birthday. They were failures everywhere, because the good sense of the people revolted against the attempt to foment strife as a means of helping the Democracy into power. The fact remains, however, that the Northern managers of the party devised a plan for fomenting a dangerous popular excitement, with the double purpose of driving the majority in the House up to the point at which Mr. POTTER'S programme might be acted upon, and furnishing the outdoor support which so perilous a scheme evidently required. Its failure, as evidenced by the break-down of the demagogues who had undertaken to give it effect in Ohio, Indiana, and Illinois, does not lessen the responsibility of its promoters. The money supplied from the treasury in Gramercy Park was wasted; the incendiary appeals called forth no adequate response. But neither of these circumstances forms an excuse for the partisan recklessness which attempted thus to accomplish its ends without reference to consequences. They were ready to plunge the country into anarchy to secure a chance of obtaining control of the Government.

But for this condition of things no such device as the Electoral Commission would have been dreamed of. It was a concession to Democratic demands, proceeding mainly, no doubt, from a conviction that no tribunal guided by judicial considerations could ignore the constitutional strength of the Republican case, but resulting in some instances from a timid desire to avert the trouble which Democratic braggarts had threatened. The relative moral difference between the two parties could have no more effective illustration than in the temper they have respectively displayed since the Commission began its labors. Each party professed confidence in the result. Each insisted that the result should be final. There has not been a moment at which the good faith of the Republicans in regard to this point could be questioned. There has hardly been a moment, since the Commission revealed its controlling principles, when trust could be felt in the ultimate action of the Democrats. They were prepared to extol the Commission as a piece of heaven-born statesmanship if it gave them what they wanted. Having decided contested votes against them, they are divided on the question whether the judgment shall be acquiesced in or resisted at the cost of the peace of the country and the infliction of ruinous loss upon its most important interests.

A party which in this manner proclaims indifference to everything except its own sinister objects confesses its unfitness to be intrusted with the power it seeks. Admitting that in the end wisdom may overrule folly in marking out the line to be pursued, the presence of a dangerous element, with strength sufficient to make its struggle for ascendency doubtful, is a valid reason for distrusting the party and fastening upon it the odium it has earned. Its bad faith is almost as conspicuous in the indecent conduct of Democratic members of the Commission, in their places in the Senate, as in the crazy violence of demagogues in the caucus. The same consideration seems uppermost in the minds of all of them. They may admit the binding force of the decisions of the Commission, while impugning the integrity of all not of their way of thinking, or they may defy the Commission and revive the original causes of quarrel in an aggravated form. There is a difference in the degrees of responsibility attaching, say, to Mr. BAYARD or Mr. MILLS, Mr. THURMAN or Mr. SPRINGER, but they are alike in a general willingness to excite bad feeling and surround the settlement of the Presidential question with disturbing influences. If, as the more moderate of them declare, the title of Mr. HAYES to his high office is in any quarter impugned, it will be because Senators who were appointed to sit in judgment are unwilling to accord to their judicial associates the credit for integrity which they claim for themselves. They profess to deprecate the violent suggestions of the Randalls and Hewitts, and yet supply the pretexts on which the latter rely. A Senator who in one breath declares that "the decision of the Commission must be respected," and in the next, that "the conduct of the Commission is unworthy of respect," might be dismissed with contempt if the lesson he inculcates were less mischievous than it is. The Democrats who openly propose to frustrate the work of the Commission and prevent an election of President before the 4th of March are more entitled to respect than Mr. THURMAN or Mr. BAYARD. They mean mischief, and they are frank enough to say so. For the uncertainty which their conduct meanwhile engenders the country knows whom to hold responsible. And if, after all, they carry their point so far as to provoke fresh trials of strength, and to call into play the reserved forces of the Constitution, they will bring upon the Democratic Party the fate it deserves. It can not rid itself of responsibility for their revolutionary course.

INSPECTING RAILROAD ACCIDENTS.

In what has so far been done, there is little reason for hope that the actual and complete causes of the awful disaster at Ashtabula will ever be known. The investigation from which most was to have been expected, that of the Ohio Legislature, though better by far than the Coroner's inquest made under local authority, cannot, in its result, be accepted as final. The only adequate means for reaching the exact and whole truth—if, indeed, that has at any time been within reach—was a careful inquiry by competent engineers, free from the bias of previous employment by the Lake Shore Railroad or its associate companies, yet aided by that road. Such an investigation the officers of the Lake Shore Road could have had if they had desired it, and to have secured it would have been an act of great service to the public and some compensation for the calamity at Ashtabula. But as the company did not choose to secure the investigation, and as there was, unfortunately, no means of compelling them to provide or submit to it, the disaster must remain a sort of vague horror in the history of railway travel, unrelieved by any practical and valuable warning conveyed for the future.

This state of affairs, which it is not too strong language to call disgraceful as well as lamentable, proves that the self-interest of railway companies is not sufficient to induce them to get at the truth, and to publish it, in a form which would generally be accepted. It is true that the company on whose line an accident such as that at Ashtabula occurs is more interested in knowing its causes than any one else. If its bridges are bad, it must want them improved. But, conclusive as this argument appears on its face, it is plainly broken down by the facts. The company may have more interest in ascertaining the truth than any one else, but it still has not enough. The general public, whose interest, after all, is supreme, suffers from the neglect, and in the present state of the law has no remedy. To our mind it is clear that the law ought to be improved. It is useless to depend on State law, because it is too limited, and though it may do much good, as it unquestionably has done in Massachusetts, for instance, it is a poor general reliance. The Federal Government is the proper source of adequate legislation in this matter, and the bill which Mr. GARFIELD has introduced is an excellent measure to begin with. We earnestly wish that, even in the closing days of this exciting session, it might be slipped through, and the bill is so simple and harmless that the desire does not seem unreasonable.

The bill provides for a Board of Commissioners, to be made up of three officers of Engineers, to be appointed by the President. It is made their duty to inquire into the number of accidents on the railroads of the United States, their cause, the means of preventing them, and the injury and death consequent upon them. The Commissioners are to make special investigations and reports of accidents of an unusual or unexplained nature, and besides are each year to make a general report upon the accidents of that year. Besides their pay, the Commissioners are to be allowed compensation for actual expenses incurred in investigation. It will be observed that this bill creates no new office, makes no demand of any moment on the Treasury, gives no extraordinary powers, avoids the question of jurisdiction, and simply directs three army officers, in the name of the Government, to ask the railroad companies to aid them in investigating accidents. Slight as the measure seems, we have no doubt that it would be efficient. Mr. CHARLES F. ADAMS, Jr., who prepared the bill at the request of Mr. GARFIELD, says that the Commissioners would have as much power as the British Inspectors have, and as much as the Railroad Commissioners of Massachusetts have, and that the latter have always found their powers entirely sufficient.

It was a happy thought, placing the proposed power in the hands of engineers of the Army. These officers, though not railroad experts, are thoroughly trained in a line of study closely connected with railroad building, and it would be easy to find those who had given special attention to this branch of their work. They hold their office by a lasting and independent tenure. They would be beyond the reach of the vicious influences which too often control the appointments to office. They would be sure to be men of more than ordinary integrity, and they would soon acquire the special knowledge which would be necessary to the proper performance of their duties. It would be impossible to form a commission of civilians which would combine nearly as many good qualities, and it is clear that a Federal commission of some sort is indispensable.

A MISCHIEF-MAKER AT LARGE.

Why does not PATRICK come forward and clear himself? Is he to be the only and final culprit in the Oregon fraud? He appears to be the only one who had no personal interest in the success of the conspiracy. Yet, unless he is greatly belied by those who profit by his crimes, he must carry into the wilderness the sins of the tribe. In a certain New-England village, justly celebrated for its manufacture of bass-wood hams, a family of six brothers and their father drove a thriving trade in these attractive but indigestible articles. The family, with a single exception, were honest and upright men; the exception was a wicked brother who sold the wooden hams which the rest of the family innocently fabricated. So far as known, Mr. J. H. N. PATRICK is the wholly unregenerate brother who has been wickedly peddling about the country the innocent schemes of KELLY, GROVER, PELTON, and TILDEN. Of these gentlemen, the palm for simplicity and unsuspiciousness clearly belongs to Senator KELLY. He is too innocent and guileless to be left out any longer in this wicked world. It must be a mental relief to the people of Oregon that his Senatorial term expires next March, and then he may return to the vast solitudes of his own State. That he is to be succeeded by the astute GROVER may be small consolation.

KELLY was drawn into the conspiracy in a singular manner. The attentive reader will remember that a cipher dispatch was sent from Oregon, Nov. 28, saying that an Electoral certificate would be issued to one Democrat, and that money was needed to buy one Republican. This was signed by PATRICK and formally indorsed by KELLY. The last-named gentleman says he met PATRICK, with whom he had a slight acquaintance, in a railroad depot. PATRICK showed the Senator a cipher dispatch which he wanted him [KELLY] to indorse as correct. KELLY represented to TILDEN the Oregon Democracy. The dispatch was a demand for money. Now, KELLY, on general principles, is in favor of using money in elections, and though the election had been long since over, he joyfully embraced the opportunity to indorse a dispatch asking for more money. It is much to the credit of this unsuspicious Senator that he took the word of a casual acquaintance that the secret message was harmless, and such an one as any high-toned gentleman might indorse. Of course, he is horrified now to learn that the message told TILDEN that bribery was necessary to carry the day, and that the money must be forthcoming at once. The good man thinks that he has been imposed upon by the casual PATRICK, who met him in the depot and inveigled him into indorsing such a bald fraud.

The wicked PATRICK not only deceived Senator KELLY as to the true intent and meaning of the cipher dispatch, but after he had done so he taught him the use of that cipher. The Senator was such an apt scholar that when PATRICK went away he [KELLY] kept up the correspondence with great spirit. Signing himself "K. for P.," KELLY renewed the demand for an immediate remittance. He urged that it would be impossible to convene the Legislature. Money only would carry the day. And to think that all this time this virtuous and unsophisticated Senator was so sure that the much-desired money was only needed for necessary expenses. He actually swore before the Senate committee that he did not know where a dollar had been corruptly used! This is simplicity on the largest scale.

It was PATRICK, too, who divined the intentions of Gov. GROVER, long before he had made up his mind, and who communicated the Governor's decision while it was yet incomplete. If PATRICK added necromancy and the art of foretelling the future to his other accomplishments, he could not have come out better with his predictions. For it was on Nov. 28 that this ingenious person telegraphed that GROVER would issue CRONIN'S certificate. And on the 30th he repeated that statement with emphasis, adding that the Governor would do this without reward. How did PATRICK know this? GROVER solemnly swore that he communicated his decision in advance to nobody, yet here was PATRICK not only telling TILDEN that the Governor would do what he subsequently did, but that he would charge nothing for the service. If PATRICK is not a skillful professor of the black art, then GROVER and KELLY have told some awful falsehoods. Of course, it must have been this bad man who sent the notorious "Gobble" dispatch, in which the writer said, "I shall decide every point," &c., just as though he were really Governor of Oregon. They used to say, in olden times, that Satan could assume the part of a well-known priest, citizen, or General in such a consummate manner as to deceive the most intimate friends of the real man. For the time, according to GROVER, PATRICK must have been playing Governor. How he "played" KELLY we have already seen. It is high time that this prince of darkness and general mischief-maker were brought to justice. If he remains longer at large, no Democratic statesman's reputation is safe.

BARUCH SPINOZA.

Two hundred years ago to-day, died one of the greatest philosophers of modern times, whose fortune it was, like that of so many great men, to be misrepresented in life and to be misunderstood after death. BARUCH or BENEDICT SPINOZA was born in Amsterdam, his father being a Spanish Jew, who, having fled to Holland to escape persecution, had prospered as a merchant, and desired his son to prosper likewise. The boy's frail health and hunger for knowledge, however, caused him to be educated for a rabbi. His extraordinary ability, and the interest he showed in Jewish theology, gained the ardent admiration of the leading Israelites of the city, who predicted his future eminence as an expounder of their religion. They were disappointed. Before he was fifteen, although modest and cautious in the expression of his opinions, he evinced symptoms of heresy. Having been reported as holding the doctrine of the unity of substance in the universe so absolutely as to interfere with the law of MOSES, he was called before the Hebrew judges and doctors, and menaced with excommunication. Fearless and unmoved, he made no effort to conceal his beliefs, and to save his accusers needless trouble, formally withdrew from the synagogue.

From that time the youth decided to discard all mere theologic trammels, and devote himself rigorously to what he conceived to be the truth, guide him where it might. The synagogue, anxious to retain him, offered him a handsome salary if he would be silent and yield an outward adherence to its dogmas. He declined, and his refusal created so much feeling against him that some zealot of his rejected faith attempted his assassination. His studies were diligently prosecuted, and he soon became familiar with the writings of DESCARTES, in whom he found much in common with himself. The illustrious Frenchman's maxim, "Receive nothing as true that is not sustained by good and solid reasons," echoed his own thought, and more than ever determined him to put to the severest intellectual test each and all of the opinions he had adopted from his infancy. The hostility of the Jews toward him so increased that a number of the rabbis, then very influential in Amsterdam, induced the magistrates to banish him from the city. He submitted without protest or murmur, going from town to town, continuing his studies, and supporting himself by polishing glasses for optical instruments—an art which, in accordance with the Talmud, he had early learned, and in which he excelled. In his thirty-fourth year, assenting to the urgent request of a few faithful friends, he took up his abode at The Hague, where he remained until his death, which occurred at the early age of forty-five.

No man has lived more purely, more conscientiously, more religiously. His whole time was spent in reflection and polishing glass, the slender earnings of his trade supporting him in the pursuit of philosophy. He had but one object—Truth—for which he surrendered everything, the joys of love, the quest of gold, the hope of fame, the charm of society, the total consideration of self. If, with renunciation, all true life begins, SPINOZA'S life was of the truest. His friend, SIMON DE VRIES, wished to leave him a handsome property, but was persuaded by him to make another his heir. He transferred his share of the paternal inheritance to his sisters. He refused the Chair of Philosophy at Heidelberg, because its acceptance might hamper his free spirit of investigation. When a pension from LOUIS XIV. was proposed to him, he said he had nothing to dedicate to the King of France. And, all the while, he suffered from ill health and poverty; laboring at his trade all day, and studying and writing far into the night. His first works, entirely logical, temperate, tolerant, and religious in their breadth and sincerity, while they brought him many distinguished admirers and friends, were condemned by the Church and State. Amiable by nature, and averse to controversy, he continued writing, but resolved to have nothing more published during his life. Consumption, the seeds of which had been in his system from the first, was so aggravated by his unremitting toil, his seclusion, his scanty sustenance, and Spartan simplicity, that he passed calmly away in the midst of his labors, in the presence of his physician alone, leaving his chief work, Ethics, with other manuscript, to be sent, as by previous agreement, to his publisher in Amsterdam.

SPINOZA'S philosophy, entirely pantheistic, holds that GOD is a being absolutely infinite, a substance consisting of infinite attributes, each of them expressing an infinite and eternal essence. Substance is necessary and infinite, one and indivisible, and therefore GOD. Nothing exists except substance, and the modes of its attributes. Substance cannot produce substance, and consequently there is no such thing as creation, neither beginning nor end. All things have flowed necessarily from GOD, and will continue to flow on eternally. Of all the innumerable attributes of GOD, only two are known—extension and thought—the objective and subjective—of which Deity is the identity. Body is a mode of extension, and indivisible; thought is infinite, and mental acts are its modes. GOD alone is a free cause; all other entities move by fixed laws of causation, without free will or contingency. GOD is the immanent cause of everything, not existing apart from, but expressed in, the universe. There is a constant parallelism between bodies—modes of extension—and ideas—modes of thought—and the parallelism appears everywhere. Soul is shared by animals, vegetables, and minerals, of all three of which man is an intricate compound. He gets life and self-mastery from GOD alone; love of GOD extinguishes all other desires; virtue is knowledge and power of GOD in the human soul. Immortality is secured by the influence of adequate ideas upon the mind which frees itself from the conditions of duration by exclusive contemplation of the eternal.

The publication of SPINOZA'S Ethics, a year after his death, excited enormous prejudice against him. He was denounced on every hand; called atheist and monster; BAYLE, LEIBNITZ, MALEBRANCHE, and MASSILLON joining in the detraction. Since then his principles have been better understood; many eminent thinkers have accepted and honored him; HERDER and SCHLEIERMACHER, SCHELLING, and HEGEL have followed him; GOETHE has acknowledged himself as his enthusiastic disciple, his most devoted worshiper. However widely his students may differ from him, they must admit his passion for truth, his earnest purpose, his perfect disinterestedness, and must see the great and good influence he has exercised upon the intellectual world.

To-day a statue to his memory is to be dedicated at The Hague; a number of the leading thinkers of Holland, Germany, France, England and America are expected to be present, and ERNEST RENAN will deliver a commemorative address. The world may be slow to understand, and slower to appreciate; but, in its own good time, it seldom fails to recognize those who have battled for human progress, or conscientiously striven in the cause of truth.

UNREASONABLE PEOPLE.

The world is full of unreasonable people. Every man who has met people who differ from him in opinion will recognize the truth of this assertion. The New-York Yacht Club is especially full of unreasonable people, and perhaps those members of the club who do not own yachts are rather more unreasonable than any other persons now living, except, of course, professional lunatics.

As is generally known, a very small proportion of the three hundred and sixty members of the Yacht Club own yachts. The control of the club is vested exclusively in the hands of the latter, who alone have the right to vote. Thus it happens that eight yacht-owners can elect themselves to all sorts of offices and pass every conceivable variety of resolution without asking the consent or listening to the protests of the hundreds of yachtless members. Recently certain yacht-owners decided that the two club-houses—one at Staten Island and one in this City—should be given up. To this decision the yachtless members have taken exception, and, with the most unreasonable indignation, are now complaining that the club gives them absolutely nothing in return for the money which they pay into the treasury.

It is usually a loss of time to reason with grossly unreasonable people. Still, charity requires that an effort should be made to convince the yachtless yachtsmen of the error of their ways. Have they ever asked themselves why they were admitted to membership in the New-York Yacht Club? Nothing can be more obvious than the answer. They were admitted solely in order that they might pay money into the treasury. The yacht-owners wanted to have regattas and other expensive aquatic amusements, and they nobly decided to allow other people to contribute to the cost thereof. To parody the famous epigram of the Tichborne claimant concerning brains and money, the yachtsmen saw that some men have plenty of money and no yachts, and other men have plenty of yachts and no spare money; and they naturally decided that the men with plenty of money and no yachts were made for the use of men with plenty of yachts and a deficiency of loose change. Upon this great principle they organized the New-York Yacht Club, and allowed persons without yachts to bring money into the treasury to be disposed of exclusively by the vote of the yacht-owners. There was no concealment or false pretense in the matter. The yachtless members of the club knew when they joined it that they could have no voice in its deliberations, and that their only privilege under the constitution, was that of contributing money. It was for that purpose alone—in the opinion of the yacht-owners—that they were created, and it is now rather late in the day for them to pretend that they were entitled to privileges other than those of paying initiation fees and annual dues.

Of course, so long as the club chose to maintain a club-house, the yachtless members were permitted to enter it. There is no doubt that they derived a good deal of innocent pleasure from the opportunity thus afforded of being able to lounge in a comfortable room and listen to a discussion between two real yachtsmen as to the comparative merits of different fireworks, the true way in which to cook blue-fish, and other abstruse questions of seamanship. Still, they knew that the yacht-owners had at any moment the power to abolish the club-houses, and must have known that, in case they did not contribute money enough to pay for both club-houses and regattas, they would have to do without the former.

Now that the Yacht Club is no longer to have a club-house, the yachtless members have no privileges except their original one of paying money into the treasury. That they should be dissatisfied is extremely unreasonable. No one proposes to deprive them of the right to pay their annual dues, and were they to frame an humble petition asking to be permitted to double their contributions to the treasury, there is every reason to believe that it would be granted. Indeed, if they would offer to rent and furnish a club-house exclusively at their own expense, there is no doubt that, not only would they be permitted to do so, but that the yachtsmen themselves would occasionally visit the club-house, in order to give it a moral and marine tone. The yachtsmen are liberal and kindly gentlemen, and there is probably not a single one of them who would refuse the yachtless members the privilege of making themselves as comfortable at their own expense as they might think proper.

It must inevitably lower one's estimate of human nature to have these yachtless persons gloomily asking what the club gives them in return for their money? Their obvious and reprehensible purpose is to lead the public to believe that the club gives them absolutely nothing. It has already been shown that the club gives them the priceless privilege of paying money, but its liberality does not end here. Every yachtless member receives in exchange for his money a receipt signed by one of the officers of the club. What more would these unreasonable people have? Perhaps they think the club ought to give them chromos or sewing-machines. The grasping spirit shown by them is a most melancholy exhibition. They are allowed to pay money and they are given nicely printed and written receipts for it, and yet they are dissatisfied, and clamor for other and further privileges.

If the yachtless members of the New-York Yacht Club intend to maintain their present attitude, they had better withdraw from the club and join some one of the many existing clubs where all members enjoy equal rights. As for the yacht-owners, if they find themselves unable to maintain their organization alone, they might, perhaps, let it die a natural death. There are certainly enough yacht-owners in New-York and its vicinity to maintain a flourishing club; and a single yacht club, consisting exclusively of yachtsmen, would be decidedly preferable to half a dozen struggling yacht clubs organized on the principle that men with money and no yachts are the natural prey of men with yachts.

THE MAYORALTY OF SYRACUSE.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

SYRACUSE, Feb. 20.—The charter election to-day resulted in an overwhelming victory for the Republicans. James J. Belden is elected Mayor by the largest majority ever given to the office in this city. The result is hailed with satisfaction by the entire business community. The Republican Convention nominated Mr. Belden during his absence from the city and against his earnest protest. Upon his return home he declined the nomination, basing his reasons for such action upon the grounds that until the decisions of the courts had fully vindicated him from the attacks made upon him by Tilden and his partisan agents he could not accept any honors at the hands of the citizens. The Republican Convention refused to received his declination, and renominated him by acclamation amid the greatest enthusiasm. The most responsible business men of the city, bankers and merchants, waited upon him and insisted that the welfare of the city depended upon his acceptance. The main question in the election was that of municipal reform. There were three tickets in the field, the Democratic, Citizens', and Republican. Mr. Belden's majority over both is fully 1,700, the largest majority ever given to any candidate in Syracuse. The entire business interests of the city united in securing his election. The result is indicative of the respect in which Mr. Belden is held at home. It shows that the citizens of Syracuse have entire confidence in his integrity and ability, and that they enter their protest against the partisan attacks that have been made against him. After the result was made known to-night Mr. Belden was waited upon and congratulated by hundreds of our leading citizens and representative business men. A hundred guns were fired by the citizens in honor of his election.

THE NEW-JERSEY LAW MAKERS.

TRENTON, Tuesday, Feb. 20, 1877.

The joint meeting to-day ended in a love feast. At noon, the Senate, headed by President Abbett, marched into the Assembly Chamber, and Mr. Abbett ascended to the Speaker's desk. Announcement was at once made that the business before the convention was the choice of a Controller of the State Treasury. The roll-call showed that Egan, who has been particularly bitter against the nomination of Gen. Robert P. Stockton by the Democratic caucus, was the only absentee. Mr. Howell asked to be excused from voting, explaining that he had paired off with Mr. Egan. Mr. Kruger, the disaffected Democrat, who had promised to vote for Morrow, the Republican candidate, answered with McMichael's name when the clerk reached him on the check list. The vote at the end of the roll call showed that Morrow had 39 votes, Stockton 37, and McMichael 3. Before the vote had been counted Senator Hobart was on his feet expressing a desire to change his vote from Morrow to Stockton. Gen. Scovell followed, and a stampede of Republicans to the Democratic caucus nominee ensued. When the result was announced, it was discovered that Gen. Stockton had received 58 votes, Mr. Morrow 14 votes, Mr. McMichael 3, Mr. Runyon, the present Controller, 3, and E. J. Anderson, now a clerk in the Controller's office, 1. William Patterson was elected State Director of Railroads and Canals, and the joint convention adjourned to Tuesday of next week.

The Carscallen bill, for the reorganization of the local Government, came out of the hands of the committee so badly riddled and cut up that no one can recognize the original in it. The committee's bill is offered as a substitute for that originally committed to them. It allows none of the present Commissioners to remain in office after the second Tuesday of May, but provides for the election of one Commissioner for each board in each Aldermanic district. The most important proviso is that the Board of Finance shall sanction whatever any of the other boards may do before the acts of other boards can go into effect. This is a rider which Assemblyman Drohan, who is also President of the Board of Finance, succeeded in foisting on the bill. He reconciles it to his party friends on the ground that Democratic good requires it.

MEETING OF THE CANAL BOARD.

ALBANY, Feb. 20.—The Canal Board met to-day. The Auditor presented a communication from James S. Wadsworth, Secretary of a citizens' meeting in New-York, asking to be heard on the subject of tolls. The board voted to hear Mr. Wadsworth and other parties Feb. 28. Application for a rehearing in the appeal cases of John W. Williams and Horatio E. Matteson was referred to the Attorney General. The Attorney General and the Controller reported in favor of paying witness fees to W. H. Bunn and C. W. Avery, Canal Superintendents, against whom charges were made, but dismissed. The Auditor and Controller were appointed a committee to report a plan to provide funds for ordinary repairs, preparatory to opening the canals. The Controller was requested to inform the board if any reduction in the toll-sheets of last year can be made without a deficiency in the amount required for the maintenance of the canals this year. The board then adjourned to Feb. 28.

ALBANY.

THE EXPENSES OF NEW-YORK CITY.

BUSINESS IN THE SENATE AND THE ASSEMBLY—JOINT MEETING OF THE COMMITTEES ON CITIES—CONTROLLER KELLY'S IDEAS OF ECONOMY—THE CAUTIOUS OPINION OF A VERY "CAREFUL" MAN—STATEMENTS BY MR. ALLAN CAMPBELL, POLICE COMMISSIONER ERHARDT, SETH HAWLEY, AND RUSH HAWKINS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

ALBANY, Feb. 20.—Senator Bixby to-day introduced a bill reducing all the New-York Commissions to single heads except the Police, and providing that this shall consist of two Commissioners representing both political parties in the State. The terms of office of all the Commissioners are to terminate on the 1st of May next, and the new Commissioners are to be appointed by the Mayor, to retain office until the 1st of January, 1879, and to be appointed thereafter for a term of two years. The salaries of all the Commissioners is fixed at $5,000, and the President of Police and the Health Officer of the Port are to act with the Commissioner of Health.

Senator Robertson introduced a bill incorporating the New-York State Bar Association—the first officers to be the same as those elected at the volunteer association formed in Albany last November, with Judge John K. Porter as President. The Assembly bill providing for the payment of the Clerks of the Justices' Courts in New-York, who were decided by the Court of Appeals not to have been properly appointed, was concurred in by the Senate by a vote of 19 to 1. The bill reported from the Senate Insurance Committee, preventing the reinsurance of risks by insurance companies except where they have gone into the hands of a Receiver, came up on its third reading, and after a good deal of discussion and several attempts to amend, it was recommitted to the standing committee.

Senator Gerard introduced a bill extending the time for the Broadway Underground Railway (the old Beach Pneumatic) to build its first section, (from Bowling Green to Harlem River,) five years after May 1, 1877, on the filing of a certificate by the Engineer Commissioners that the whole capital stock of the company has been subscribed or such financial arrangements made as will insure the construction of the road within the time limited.

The Assembly spent the whole morning in the discussion of the annual Appropriation bill, and proceeded about two-thirds through it, when the hour of adjournment came, and it went over till to-morrow. The bill would have been completed had it not been for Gen. Spinola, who proposed amendments to nearly every paragraph, one and all of which were voted down. A bill was introduced by Dr. Hayes to-day, under the title of "An act in relation to proceedings, whether in courts of record, or otherwise, to ascertain and provide compensation to owners of private property taken for public or private use as contemplated by section 7, article 1, of the Constitution of this State." The purpose of the bill is supposed to be to prevent the construction of any elevated railroad or the operation of any such road already constructed. It authorizes any person whose property, real or personal, corporate or incorporate, is, or may in his opinion be, injured by the construction of such a road, to bring an action for damages in any Court of Record in the State, and requires such action to be tried by jury. It also compels the Judge of the court in which such action is brought to issue an injunction, stopping all further work on the road until the trial is concluded, and the damages, if any, are paid in full.

The Senate Committee on Commerce and Navigation will have a hearing on the subject of the Newburg and Fishkill Bridge on Wednesday afternoon, the 28th inst. The joint meeting of the Senate and Assembly Committees on Cities was held this afternoon in the Senate Chamber, Senator Woodin, Chairman, and Mr. Fish, Secretary. There were present Controller Kelly, Police Commissioner Erhardt, Mr. Seth Hawley, Chief Clerk of the Police Department; Commissioner or Public Works Campbell, Mr. John H. Strahan, Mr. Rush Hawkins, and other gentlemen. Mayor Ely was unable to be present, owing to official engagements. The proceedings were opened by Senator Woodin stating the object of the meeting and the purpose of the two bills already passed relating to the office of Coroner and of Commissioner of Jurors, and of the third bill of the same series not yet passed, which relates to the office of Register of Deeds. Mr. Fish gave an outline of the Salary bill introduced by Mr. Langbein, the Woodin Charter bill, the Street-cleaning and the Police bills, and Mr. Cowdin's bill for the Advisory Council. Controller Kelly was then called upon for his views on the matters with which these bills dealt. Taking up the Woodin Charter bill first, he referred to the subject of assessments, saying that there were uncollected assessments to the amount of $10,000,000 or $7,000,000 of which probably never could be collected. He recommended that $15,000,000 be made a permanent debt of the city. It was impossible, in the present depressed condition of business, to collect these assessments, and he thought it would be well to change the short to long term bonds at a lower rate of interest. In respect to the proposed reduction of the salary of the County Clerk, Mr. Kelly thought the salary should not be less than $10,000. It would make a man indifferent if his compensation was too low. He is responsible for large sums of money. If the office of Register of Deeds should be made a salaried one it should be at a fair rate, for he has the care of most important documents. This matter of salaries required much care in dealing with it. He was rather in favor of allowing the Board of Apportionment to fix them. As to the Coroners, Mr. Kelly did not think that three could do the work. They also should be allowed a fair compensation and reasonable amount for clerk hire. He did not believe in too low salaries. A Coroner ought to have $6,000, or perhaps $7,000, as he has many necessary expenses. Mr. Kelly then spoke of the bill to reduce all salaries 10 per cent., and said that if it passed much injury would be done to some of the most useful servants the City had. In respect to the proposition to merge the Dock Department in the Department of Public Works he was in favor of it. The permission to issue bonds should certainly be revoked. The Building Department might be merged in the Fire Department, but he was not certain whether it would be advisable. He could not see how any expense would be saved by merging the excise in the Police Department, and could see no reason why it should go there. He did not think the Police Commissioners were over paid, and did not think two Commissioners were enough to do the work. Neither could one man administer properly the immense Department of Charities and Correction. He did not agree with Mayor Ely as to the advisability of single headed Commissions for all departments. There were some, as, for instance, the Police, Fire, and Charities, which should have more. The only point on which the Controller would directly commit himself as to the reduction of salaries was in respect to the Police and firemen. He thought they were overpaid, and should have no more than $1,000 per year. In respect to reducing other salaries he said he was willing to have his own reduced, but he qualified all his observation in respect to other reductions with so many clauses, and repeated so often that "much care, and great care, and the greatest care" should be taken in making reductions, that the impression seemed to be general among those who heard him that he was "whipping the devil around the stump" pretty thoroughly.

At last Mr. Woodin pinned Mr. Kelly down with the direct question whether he was in favor of the general policy which the Legislature proposed to adopt of cutting down all official salaries, reducing the compensation of employes and the running expense of the City? Mr. Kelly replied, "Yes; quite so," and added the usual provision about the necessity for care. On the matter of street-cleaning he said he was decidedly in favor of taking it from the Police and making a separate department of it. He was opposed to the system of having the street cleaned by contract, the experience of the City with this having been very unfortunate and very costly, too. He thought the complaints which had been made against the Police Department during the Winter were rather unfair. The work of cleaning the streets with such constant snowstorms as had occurred was enormous, and costly. The Commissioners had done the best they could. It may be added that Mr. Kelly considered many of the teachers in the public schools overpaid; but Senator Woodin remarked that the Legislature could not do anything with that. Mr. Allen Campbell was the next speaker. In answer to questions he said that he thought the Public Works Department could do the work of the Dock Department, and of that of Parks if necessary, but he should not like to express himself decidedly on the policy of merging those departments in it. He expressed himself unqualifiedly in favor of the contract system as against day work, and said that he saw when he took his present position that the greatest saving could be effected by dispensing with all day labor, and letting the work by contract. This is what he does now for all jobs except small repairs. In respect to street-cleaning, he was in favor of having the work done by contract, but the contracts should be for small districts, so that men of moderate means can take them. The failure of the contract system in the past had been because the work for the whole City was let to one contractor, and because of the large capital required, he had practically no competitors, and could do almost as he pleased.

Police Commissioner Erhardt being called upon, expressed himself as more than doubtful of the justice or wisdom of reducing the salaries of the policemen. Their clothes cost them, be they ever so careful, $225 a year, and this amount deducted from their present salaries did not leave a great deal to live and support a family upon. He urged with much force the necessity, on grounds of justice and humanity, that a bill to create a Police pension fund should be passed in order that old and faithful servants, who had been on the force more than 20 years, might be retired on half-pay, and not turned out to drag out the brief remainder of their lives in penury and want. The Commissioner was decidedly in favor of the system of grading which had been proposed, and wished it to be understood that he did not say that patrolmen should come on the force at a salary of $1,200. He thought the 3-cent-cleaning should not be in the Police Department. It was not Police duty; it has no business there at all; it is there, but he would be glad to have it out.

Mr. Seth Hawley, for 22 years Chief Clerk of the Police Department, said the Board of Police would certainly not object to any reductions in expenses at head-quarters. He gave some statistics showing the cost of policemen's clothing, and directed attention to the fact that clothes wore out rapidly in the exposure to all weathers the men were necessarily subjected to. He thought the board would be very thankful to get rid of the street-cleaning business, and pointed out the enormous and unnecessary cost of this work from the positive requirement of the law that the refuse should be taken out to the deep sea to be dumped. They had to go out 22 miles. This entailed a fearful waste of money. He thought refuse should be used to fill up sunken lots and low land, and was strongly in favor of the project for filling up Little Hell Gate. If street refuse could be dumped here a saving of $150,000 would be effected. He thought the system of letting contracts to clean small areas of the City was a good one. That was the proper way, but the districts should be laid out with a view to the convenience of each to the dumping places. The failure of the old contract system was owing solely to the large contracts. In the matter of merging the Excise in the Police, he was not specially anxious it should be done, but was very certain the work could be done for less money by the Police, and more thoroughly than by the Excise Commission. In fact, the greater part of the work was already done by the Police.

Mr. Rush Hawkins was the next speaker, and presented substantially the same facts which he had at the meeting of the Assembly Committee on Cities the other day. Since the adjournment of the joint meeting Mr. Kelly's remarks have been the one subject of conversation, and the comment is general on the fact that he could not see how the salaries of the heads of departments were to be reduced, but did see that school-teachers, firemen, and policemen were overpaid.

The bill to abolish the Marine Court will be favorably reported to the House to-morrow by the Judiciary Committee. It is pretty safe to say that the days of this institution are numbered. The Ways and Means Committee, in secret session this afternoon, heard Mr. Mullett, the architect, in relation to the new Capitol building. He is understood to have seriously disapproved of the new plans. Mr. Vaux, the architect of the Jefferson Market Court-house, was also before the committee, and favored them.

TILDEN'S FREE GARDEN.

HOW THE REFORM CANDIDATE SECURED THE IMPROVEMENT OF GRAMERCY PARK BY A GENEROUS CONTRIBUTION WHICH HE NEVER PAID — ANOTHER CHANCE FOR THE STATUTE OF LIMITATIONS.

When an indulgent and fond public discovers that it has a public spirited citizen dwelling in its midst it ought never to lose an opportunity to render homage to him for his public spirit and munificence. Four years ago, more or less, a number of citizens residing on the borders of Gramercy Park, desiring to improve the appearance of the inclosure before their dwellings, agitated the subject, and concluded to raise a fund for the purpose. A meeting was called, it is understood, to be held at the house of one of the Trustees, but Gov. Tilden, who seemed particularly anxious that the scheme of improvement should be carried forward successfully, and who was seized with a yearning to be identified, in some way, with "the true and beautiful and good," insisted that the meeting should be held at his house. The plans were unfolded and met with the approval of the rising reformer. Looking forward into the dim Presidential future, he smiled in his childlike and bland manner, and desired that his name should head the list of contributors for $1,000. The name was put down, and the amount which the opulent and generous Governor had mentioned was, as he had desired, set opposite to his name. Imitating his bright and illustrious example, the neighbors of the reformer put down their names, with sums set opposite to them, varying from $500 to $200, or less. Time passed, the services of gardeners, painters, and care-takers were employed, and in due time a wondrous change took place in the worn-out park. With dexterous touch the painters transformed the rusty old fence into a glittering barrier of black and gold. With the liberal use of fertilizers the hitherto plain garden blossomed as the rose, and parterres of fragrant blossoms gleamed from Spring time till nipping frost beneath the searching eyes and sensitive nose of the Presidential aspirant. All this beauty had to be paid for, and the money contributed was collected from time to time, in amounts sufficient to meet current expenses. That is, some of it was collected. The reformer who had been so eager to head the list with the proudest name and the largest amount proved to be a better promiser than fulfiller. Not only had he promised $1,000 to the fund, but he employed a landscape gardener to devise plans for his own special pleasure, and the architect, having made his plans, sent the Governor a paper in which it appeared that the ring breaker was the gardener's debtor to the amount of $500. The thrifty Samuel wanted to think over this demand, and he thought so long that the impertinent designer lost his patience and brought suit for the recovery of the debt he could not collect. This appears to have had a bad effect upon the great subscriber's temper, for, having paid $250 of the $1,000 which he had set opposite to his name for beautifying the garden before his house, the importunity of the landscape gardener seems to have had the effect of hardening his tender and susceptible heart, and from that time forward until this day his pocket-book has been closed against all appeals. All the subscribers except one, which one it is unnecessary to explain is the great economist and reformer, have paid their subscriptions without urging or repeated reminders. With the one exception the times have been hard indeed. Notes innumerable have been sent to him from time to time, informing him that manure and spades and the services of gardeners and paints and painters cost money, and that it would be agreeable if that $1,000 promised could be made available. All to no purpose, and while the park has been made to gratify the eyes of all the great reform candidate's visitors, and provoke them to dream upon his supposed munificence, the little subscription list remains dishonored, and the prospect is good that the burden which he should have borne will fall upon the shoulders of his less pretentious but more honorable neighbors.

INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21—1 A. M.—For the Middle and Eastern States, falling barometer, warmer southwest winds, cloudy or partly cloudy weather, except possibly in Maine and the Canadian Provinces, winds shift to cooler easterly, with rising barometer.

THE APPROPRIATION BILLS.

ALARM IN THE SENATE COMMITTEE OVER THE BACKWARDNESS OF THE LEADING BILLS—A STRONG EFFORT TO AVERT AN EXTRA SESSION.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—The Committee on Appropriations of the Senate is getting alarmed at the situation in which the appropriation bills now are, and fear they cannot be completed without extraordinary efforts. There will probably be some night sessions required, which, with the labors attending the Electoral count, will require pretty severe work. There is a general desire among both parties to finish the business of the session, so as not to have a called meeting of Congress. The Senate, rather than have a contest with the House concerning the appropriations, will probably be willing to accept almost anything that is offered, with the expectation of correcting deficiencies next Winter. The Sundry Civil bill is much less in amount than last year, and whatever jobs have been smuggled into it are said to be unusually small. It will be printed in to-morrow's Record and can then be examined carefully. The lack of attention that has been given to the bill, instead of being favorable to jobs, has probably been unfavorable, since the bill has been mostly prepared by Mr. Holman, and integrity is one of his few virtues. It is almost impossible to secure from him even a proper appropriation. Doubtless, however, he has admitted some matters for his party's advantage, when the amounts desired were not very large. The hope is that the bills will be passed, if it can be done safely, and if five or six men in either house will give their strict attention, this may probably be accomplished.

PRIVATE PAPERS AND ACCOUNTS.

MR. TILDEN'S BANK ACCOUNT NOT TO BE INQUIRED INTO—MUTUAL AGREEMENT BETWEEN TWO INVESTIGATING COMMITTEES.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—By mutual agreement, the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections and the Committee on the Powers, Privileges and Duties of the House in counting the Electoral vote have decided not to go into an examination of the papers and accounts of the leaders of either political party. In consequence of this agreement, Mr. Ellis, President of the Third National Bank, of New-York, will not be required to produce an abstract of the account of Samuel J. Tilden at the Third National Bank for examination by the former committee, while Hon. Z. Chandler, Chairman of the National Republican Committee, will be excused from appearing before the House committee with his account books, papers, &c. This harmonious agreement was brought about through the exertions of Senator Barnum and Mr. Ellis.

GOV. PALMER'S EXPLANATION.

HIS CONNECTION WITH THE MAN LITTLEFIELD—$100 LOANED A STRANGER—AMUSING DESCRIPTION OF A VISIT TO A NEW-ORLEANS BALL.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—The Senate Subcommittee on Louisiana, Senator Howe presiding, met at 11 o'clock this morning. Ex-Gov. Palmer, of Illinois, was sworn, and testified that he was one of the Visiting Committee that went to New-Orleans last November, at the request of the National Democratic Committee; was Chairman of that Visiting Committee; got acquainted with Littlefield while there; met him on an evening which has already been testified to here; also met Spearing; he told witness he was a clerk on the Returning Board; the first conversation that occurred between Littlefield and witness was that witness complained to him that the Republican Committee got more facilities than the Democrats did, and Littlefield replied he had no authority to do otherwise than he had done, but that he would endeavor to give witness all the papers the other side got; the next conversation was on another occasion, when witness saw Littlefield come out of Hale's room at the hotel with papers in his hand that looked like election papers; witness again complained to Littlefield of acting in bad faith toward the Democratic visitors; also spoke to Spearing about it; witness was never permitted to handle or see any papers except those witness obtained copies of made by the Returning Board clerks; in none of these conversations did witness ever hold out any money inducement to Littlefield or anything for a consideration; in the first visit of Spearing to witness Spearing expressed a strong desire to have the Hayes Electors returned and the Nicholls State ticket carried; witness never heard Spearing or Littlefield speak of alleged frauds or alterations in the election returns; the general impression among business men seemed to be that a change was necessary in the local government; on the 27th of December witness received a telegram from Spearing dated at Carlo, asking witness to meet him there; witness being unable to go telegraphed to him to come to Springfield; the next day witness went to the depot and met Spearing, Littlefield, and Judge Murphy, of Davenport, and made an appointment to meet them at witness' house after 10 o'clock that night; witness recollected the facts about that alleged return; they were substantially as Littlefield has already testified before the committee; he [Littlefield,] said the sub-returns had been destroyed, and that Wells had requested him to destroy this return; the interview lasted over an hour; never had any interview or correspondence with Littlefield after that; on the following day witness had paid the expense of the trip to Springfield, and wanted to borrow money to take them back; witness loaned him his indorsement on a note for $100; as an old lawyer, witness would always suspect a man who confessed his participation in a crime; there was no promise made that Littlefield expected some kind of reward in case his exposures resulted in breaking down the Returning Board and electing Mr. Tilden; in thinking over what might be done for Littlefield, in case his information should prove valuable, witness had an idea that something might be found away from Louisiana, some place in case of Mr. Tilden's inauguration; witness remembers that when the Vernon Parish returns were opened by the Returning Board, while he was in New-Orleans, there were affidavits with them or mentioned in connection with them; there were no papers contesting that parish return, or anything to impeach it in any way; in examining the tabulated return presented by Littlefield at Springfield witness made up his mind that Wells and the Returning Board had committed a crime, and that no exposure of it would impair their credit before the country; witness had no idea that the changes in the return made any difference in the general return for Electors, and never examined the erasures except so far as to ascertain, in corroboration of Littlefield's statement, that alterations had been made so as to elect certain State or parochial officers.

At the ball in New-Orleans witness met a number of local people, William D. Kelley, of Pennsylvania; Job Stevenson, of Cincinnati; Col. Ditty, of Baltimore, and Judge Trumbull. The whole establishment so far as witness could see, was neutral in politics. Judge Trumbull went there as an artist, to study a peculiar phase of Southern society. His gravity all through was the most amusing thing witness ever saw. He couldn't have been more solemn if he had been Bishop of the diocese. Mr. Kelley, of Pennsylvania, was going it very lively, cutting the double shuffle and throwing the other visitors in the shade. Witness here explained that the entertainment referred to is something peculiar to New-Orleans, and is universally visited by strangers there without unfavorable comment attaching necessarily thereto.

AFFAIRS IN NEW-ORLEANS.

A CALL ON THE PRESIDENT BY GENTLEMEN FROM LOUISIANA—THE GUBERNATORIAL STRUGGLE—A DISPATCH FROM MR. NICHOLLS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—Representative Ellis, Mr. Burke, and Mr. Cavanac, of Louisiana, waited upon the President to-day and assured him that the reports of turbulence and apprehended violence in Louisiana were untrue and made for political effect; that there was intense feeling growing out of telegrams received in New-Orleans from Louisiana Republicans in Washington asserting that Gov. Packard would be recognized by the President; but that Nicholls would cause the peace to be preserved in accordance with former assurances. Referring to the recent attempt of the demented Weldon to assassinate Packard, Mr. Burke assured the President that the act was condemned by every citizen of Louisiana, and that should the people of Louisiana ever be called upon to redress her wrongs it would be done in an open, manly way, and not by the weapon of the assassin. The President said he was satisfied from his advices that Nicholls was acting in good faith, and that intemperate expressions were attributable to individuals only. The President was firm in his determination not to interfere except to repress disorder, and deeply impressed his visitors by his kindly reception and discussion of Louisiana affairs.

A telegram received from Nicholls on Tuesday by Major E. A. Burke says: "The people of Louisiana not only refuse to pay taxes to any Government but that of which I am Executive, but have anticipated the appointment of tax collectors, and voluntarily paid to agents for the use of our Government, a percentage deemed sufficient for present purposes. Have delayed many appointments of tax collectors because awaiting legislation reducing the present extravagant compensation. Now collecting, and people not only willing, but anxious to pay."

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 20.—The remains of the late Rear Admiral Davis, escorted by a battalion of marines under command of Lieut. Col. Haywood, are being conveyed down Pennsylvania avenue on the way to the depot, from whence they will be taken to Cambridge, Mass., for interment. The funeral ceremonies took place at St. John's Church, and were numerously attended by prominent officials and other officers of the Army and Navy.

Acting Secretary of the Treasury Conant, in response to an inquiry, stigmatizes as false the statement yesterday made before the Real Estate Pool Committee that large amounts of currency returned to the department for redemption, instead of being destroyed, were from time to time reissued for political and other purposes. He further says that this is the reproduction of an old story, and emanates from a discharged clerk who was unsuccessful in his efforts to be reinstated.

Secretary Morrill's health is so much improved that he sat up in bed a short time to-day.

James M. Watmough, Pay Inspector United States Navy, has been appointed Paymaster General of the Navy, vice Bradford, whose term of office expires on the 27th inst., by retirement.

The President sent the following nominations to the Senate to-day: Edgar M. Marble, of Michigan, to be an Examiner in Chief in the Patent Office; Chief Engineer William H. Shock, to be Chief of the Bureau of Steam Engineering in the Navy Department, and A. W. Mullins, to be United States Attorney for the Western District of Missouri.

The following were the balances in the Treasury at the close of business to-day: Currency, $10,217,449; special deposit of legal tenders for the redemption of certificates of deposit, $37,930,000; coin, including $53,859,500 in coin certificates, $90,189,511; outstanding legal tenders, $346,984,812.

The Senate Committee on Finance to-day agreed to report a bill funding the new 4 per cent. bonds. It is not exactly the plan of the President as recently recommended by him, but is in that direction. It was the intention of Senator Sherman, the Chairman of the committee, to present it to the Senate for the purpose of being printed, but on account of the Electoral law, which forbids any legislative business pending the count of the Electoral vote, he was prevented from doing so. He did not consider it proper to communicate its contents to the press until it shall have been formally presented to the Senate.

The Mexican Minister will to-morrow appear before the Judiciary Committee of the Senate to present evidence showing the award in the Weil case to be fraudulent. It was the Law Agent of Mexico who filed the protest, under the advice and authority of Minister Mariscal, protesting against the payment of certain awards said to be illegal and fraudulent. Mexico does not refuse to pay these awards, but offers, in due course of time, to show their fraudulent nature, and will trust to the generosity of the American Government to see that it is not imposed upon by bad men with fraudulent claims.

A number of Ponca Indians from Dakota are expected here within a few days to confer with the authorities of the Indian Office upon the subject of their removal to the Indian Territory. The Indians wish to have a "big talk," and are averse to leaving their present quarters.

GENERAL MENTION.

Mr. Max Strakosch's Italian Opera Troupe, which includes Mme. Pappenheim, Mr. Louis Karl, Mr. Gottschalk, and other artists, are giving performances of "Faust" at the Athambra Theatre in Philadelphia this week.

In consequence of the illness of Mme. Essipoff no concert occurred at Steinway Hall last evening. Thursday afternoon's performance, however, is announced as positive, and the farewell concerts set down for Friday night and Saturday afternoon will also be given as intended.

The complimentary benefit to Mr. Edwin Adams, in San Francisco, gave to the bénéficiaire $2,600. Speeches were made by Mr. Sothern and Mr. Adams; "Auld lang Syne" was sung by the company of the San Francisco Theatre, assembled on the stage; tears were shed, and general kindliness of feeling prevailed.

The sale of tickets for Miss Abbott's operatic performances at the Academy of Music progresses briskly, and the indications that the two representations of "La Figlia del Regimento," to occur respectively on Friday night and on Saturday afternoon, will be numerously attended, are unmistakable. Miss Abbott has given concerts this week in Hartford and in Springfield.

COLLAR AND ELBOW HOLD.

COL M'LAUGHLIN WINS ANOTHER VICTORY—HIS OPPONENT PRONOUNCES HIM INVINCIBLE—WHICH OPINION A PERSON BY THE NAME OF SMITH SEEMS TO DOUBT.

UTICA, Feb. 20.—About 1,500 people witnessed the wrestling match for $500 a side between Col. J. H. McLaughlin, of Detroit, and John Cavanaugh, of Vermont, in the Utica Opera-house to-night. David E. Smith, of Little Falls, was chosen referee; A. D. Bentley, of Oriskany Falls, officiated as umpire for McLaughlin, and Frank K. Baxter, of Utica, for Cavanaugh. Both men were in good condition, McLaughlin weighing 222 and Cavanaugh 228 pounds. The first round lasted six minutes, and was won by McLaughlin by what is known as the "left drop." In the second round there was one "dog fall," both men going down evenly upon their breasts. The second round lasted 18 minutes. McLaughlin won this and the match by an inside cross buck throw, Cavanaugh going to the floor like a feather. McLaughlin says Cavanaugh is a very good man but lacks in training. Cavanaugh says McLaughlin is invincible. Silas D. Smith, of Mohawk, Herkimer County, who had challenged McLaughlin through the Utica Herald of Wednesday, for a match according to established rules, for from $500 to $1,000, to take place in Utica within 10 days.

A GREEN MELLON.

Joseph H. Calvert, alias "Button Joe," was arraigned before Justice Duffy at the Tombs Police Court yesterday, charged with conspiracy to blackmail A. J. Mellon, of No. 248 West Twelfth street. The complainant testified that on the 5th of January last, Calvert, who represented himself as a detective from Police Head-quarters, arrested him on a warrant purporting to be issued by Police Justice Charles M. Carpenter, of Philadelphia. Calvert told him that if he would go with him to a hotel and pay both their expenses the affair would be kept quiet and not allowed to get into the papers. Mellon, who, according to his own story, appears to have been extremely verdant, accepted this proposition, and the pair continued to board at the Stacy House on Broadway for some time, Mellon paying the bills. At the end of that period Calvert, who was ostensibly awaiting the issue of a requisition for his prisoner from the Governor of Pennsylvania, took Mellon to the Washington Place Police Court, where, on his representations, and those of a man named Davis, Mellon was held as a fugitive from justice, and sent to the Tombs. Mellon charges Calvert with being an ex-convict, recently released from the Eastern Penitentiary, at Philadelphia, and says that he has since become notorious as a confidence operator. Mr. Joseph B. Reed, of the Stacy House, says that he has recently ascertained from Philadelphia that no warrant has been issued against Mellon, and Superintendent Walling denies that Calvert has any connection with the Central Office. After a long examination and considerable recrimination on both sides, Judge Duffy decided to discharge the prisoner on parole, the case against him not having been clearly made out.

WELDON'S STAY IN MOBILE.

The Mobile (Ala.) Register of the 17th inst. says: "William H. Weldon, the would-be assassin of Pretender Packard, was, up to a fortnight ago, in the employ of Messrs. P. H. Pepper & Co., of our city, as a dry goods clerk. He came to Mobile some time in September or October last, with a letter of introduction from Mr. Spencer, of the house of H. B. Claflin & Co., of New-York, to Messrs. P. H. Pepper & Co. These gentlemen immediately gave Weldon employment in their large retail dry goods establishment, and retained him in their employ until a couple of weeks ago, when, on account of neglect of duty, he was discharged. His dismissal, together with trouble of a private nature, induced him to drink, and it is said by his former associates that for a week before he left Mobile he seemed wholly irresponsible, often saying and doing things that suggested a demented or 'half-cracked' state. Last Sunday he hired a room at John Maudich's, on Royal street, and told his friends that he was going to shut himself up in his room and commit suicide. He was reasoned with upon the subject, and promised to discard the thought. On Wednesday he called at Pepper's and obtained a settlement. He bade the cashier good-bye, and declared that he intended to leave the city. While under the influence of drink he has been known to be wild and extravagant in his threats, and it is supposed that, in such a condition, he planned and executed the deed on the spur of the moment. He is a Northern man, and has been in the South only four or five months. He was never known to talk politics while he was here, and no one knew what his political opinions were."

OBITUARY.

REAR ADMIRAL GOLDSBOROUGH.

A dispatch from Washington announces the death in that city early yesterday morning of Rear Admiral Louis Malesherbes Goldsborough. Thus, after living upward of 72 years, he departed this life in the city in which he was born in February, 1805. In December, 1812, young Goldsborough received an antedated midshipman's warrant, which was accompanied by the condition that he was not to receive any pay or emolument until he reported himself to the department ready for actual service. In July, 1816, he was given his first orders into service, which were to join the 74-gun frigate Independence, then at Boston, under command of Commodore Bainbridge. A year later Midshipman Goldsborough was ordered to the Franklin, destined, as the flag-ship of Commodore Stewart, for the Mediterranean Sea. At the end of this ship's cruise, and while she was at Gibraltar on her way home, he was transferred to the frigate Guerriere, in which vessel he returned to this country late in the Autumn of 1820. In 1821 he was again ordered to join the Franklin, once more the flag-ship of Commodore Stewart, but now bound to the Pacific. He remained on board of her throughout the cruise, and returned home in the Fall of 1824. Soon after he obtained permission from the Navy Department to avail himself of the schools of Paris, which he attended at his own expense, with the view of prosecuting his studies in the French language and in the scientific branches of his profession. He remained at Paris for two years, and in 1827, in accordance with orders, he joined the Mediterranean Squadron, then commanded by Commodore Rodgers. It was just at a time when piratical depredations in and about the Grecian Archipelago, were of such frequent occurrence that no merchant ship unprotected by a vessel of war could with safety venture eastward of the Island of Malta. Young Goldsborough's heart was gladdened by a transfer from the flag-ship to the schooner Porpoise, which vessel was then actively employed in keeping a good lookout for these piratical craft. Other nations also had vessels of war engaged in performing the same service, and a general understanding existed that protection should be given to any merchantman that might ask it, regardless of nationality, as the whole civilized world pronounced pirates enemies of the human race.

The sound thrashing administered to these pirates by young Goldsborough, who had by this time reached a Lieutenancy, was among the most cherished reminiscences of his busy life. In September, 1827, the Porpoise left Smyrna for Malta, with a convoy under her charge consisting of 11 merchant vessels, four of which were American. While becalmed in the Doro passage at night, one of the convoy—an English vessel called the Comet—was attacked and carried by some 200 or 300 Greek pirates, who had put out from the Island of Audros and Negropont for the purpose in five large boats, each arranged to pull some 40 or 50 oars. The Comet, owing to the calm, was at a distance from the Porpoise and the rest of the vessels of perhaps a couple of miles, but in the midst of the noise and confusion on her deck her mate and another of the crew succeeded in effecting their escape in the stern boat, and reaching the Porpoise, soon related the story of the attack. Although the firing of arms by the pirates as they approached the Comet had attracted the attention of those on board the Porpoise, yet up to the moment of the arrival alongside of the mate nothing definite was known of the affair. Strong efforts with the sweeps were made to approach the Comet, but it was soon found, that the pirates were towing her ahead of them, so that the vessel could move, and as the only remaining alternative the schooner's boats were resorted to. They were promptly prepared to assail the pirates, and all of them were placed under Goldsborough's command. Despite the disparity in numbers, the Comet was boarded, the pirates driven from her deck, and the vessel thus fully recovered. In the struggle from 80 to 90 of the pirates—or more than the entire number of the attacking force—were either killed or wounded. It is related of the ward-room steward, a mulatto of herculean strength, that he was with his own hand no less than 11 of the villains. Goldsborough's victory, accomplished in the face of great odds, taught the buccaneers a valuable lesson.

In 1830 Lieut. Goldsborough returned to the United States in the Delaware, and shortly afterward brought to the notice of the department the defectiveness of the implements of navigation generally furnished to our ships by the process of requisitions upon Navy agents, and urged as a remedy the establishment of a depot of charts and instruments. The suggestion was accepted, and thus was started the ancient and honorable present observatory. His after career was marked with ability and rapidity of promotion. In 1846, during the war with Mexico, he was on board the ship Ohio at the fall of Vera Cruz, and subsequently commanded a large detachment of her officers and crew at the attack and capture of Tuspan. In 1848 he commanded the naval rendezvous at Baltimore, and in 1849 was sent as the senior naval officer of a joint commission of three army and three navy officers to explore California and Oregon. In 1851 he returned to Washington from this service, and was ordered to command the frigate Cumberland, then the flag-ship of Commodore Stringham. He served in the Mediterranean until October, 1853, when he returned to take command of the Naval Academy, where he remained as Superintendent for nearly four years. In 1859 he was ordered to the frigate Congress, on the Brazil squadron, from which cruise he returned in time to proceed with his ship to Hampton Roads at the outbreak of the rebellion. Soon after, however, and greatly to his surprise, he was ordered to supersede Flag Officer Stringham in command of the North Atlantic Squadron. Not long after this he co-operated with Gen. Burnside in the expedition to the Sounds of Roanoke Island, the results of which are too well known to require further mention. Subsequently, in obedience to orders from the Navy Department, he returned to Hampton Roads, where his services were needed against the rebel ram Merrimac. Here he hoisted his pennant on the Cumberland, got down, with her colors flying and officers and men at their post of duty, and not a great while later he witnessed the signal victory of the iron Monitor over the boasted Merrimac.

At the time the Army under Gen. McClellan was approaching Richmond, Goldsborough kept several vessels of his squadron in the James River, to afford support, should it be required. After everything had been done that was necessary in the way of arrangements toward affording assistance to the Army, Commodore Wilkes, (recently deceased,) a junior officer, was ordered to report to Goldsborough, not to report to the latter and act under his orders, but to take command of the force and control it independently. The transfer of command was made, and Goldsborough, believing that this was an indication that what he had done toward the Army was not approved of by the department, asked to be relieved. In the course of a few weeks Acting Rear Admiral S. P. Lee was appointed his successor in command of the North Atlantic Blockading Squadron. Goldsborough, who had been constantly on board ship for three years, and had been promoted to Captain, was informed for the first time, and reluctantly, that the department was entirely satisfied with his conduct on the James River; but no satisfactory explanation was ever made for Commodore Wilkes' appointment.

He was then assigned to the important duty of preparing a code of regulations for the naval service. In 1865 he was appointed to command the European Squadron, and after serving out his full term he was relieved from it by the appointment of Admiral Farragut to take the position. He returned to the United States in his flag-ship, the Colorado, in August, 1867. Subsequently he was placed in command of the Navy-yard at Washington. In the course of his naval career, Rear Admiral Goldsborough, it will be seen, had been frequently called upon to perform duties of the highest responsibility. Very singularly, he is the sixth death among the Rear Admirals within five weeks, namely: Smith, Alden, Wilkes, Bailey, Davis, and Goldsborough. At the time of his death the last mentioned was the senior Rear Admiral in the Navy.

DETECTIVE JOHN S. YOUNG.

Capt. John S. Young, for several years Chief of the Detective force of this City, died at his residence, No. 133 West Twenty-first street, yesterday afternoon, aged 53 years. Capt. Young was a native of Troy, in this State. He joined the Metropolitan Police force in 1860, and in a short time showed himself to be possessed of such ability that he was made a member of the detective squad. When John A. Kennedy became Superintendent of the Police force, Young was made Chief of the Central Office. He was given no special office, but his position procured for him the title of Captain, which he ever afterward retained. He made a number of important arrests, and "worked up" numerous difficult cases with remarkable skill. His ability did not save him from punishment, however, when he infringed on the rules of the Police Department. About nine years ago he investigated the robbery of a Wall street bank, and procured the return to the institution of a large amount of bonds which had been taken from it. He was given $16,000 for his services, but did not report the fact to the Police Commissioners. Officers James Irving, Phil Farley, and others had aided him in his work, but he gave them a comparatively small reward. Irving became dissatisfied, and reported the matter to the Commissioners. They ordered Young to turn his reward over to the Treasurer of the Department, to await their disposition. He refused to do this, and was dismissed from the force. The most important of Capt. Young's arrests were those of Beale, the Confederate spy, who was afterward hanged on Bedloe's Island, and of Kennedy and Yates, who were members of the party of rebel incendiaries, who attempted to destroy New-York by firing its principal buildings, and who suffered the same fate as Beale. After leaving the Police force Capt. Young organized a private detective agency. At the time of his death he had an office at No. 291 Broadway, and was not in prosperous circumstances.

THOMAS HOLYOKE, M. D.

The prosperous little town of Grinnell, Iowa, has just lost one of its most prominent and useful citizens in the death of Dr. Thomas Holyoke, caused by a stroke of paralysis.

ESPANOLA CIGARS.

The subscribers have made arrangements for the exclusive sale of the cigars of this well-known and celebrated brand, manufactured in Key West, and invite the attention of the public to the full assortment of all the usual styles they are now prepared to offer.
Influenced by the high duties on imported cigars, the proprietor of the Espanola factory at Havana has established a
and is using there the same class of Vuelto Abajo tobacco as in the Havana factory, the pure quality and aromatic flavor of which have given this brand its present high credit among consumers. The prices are materially less than for those from Havana and a comparison will show that they are in every respect fully equal. They are offered in connection with our usual list of Havana Cigars.

THE DEATH OF KATY REIDEL

THE MYSTERY NOT YET CLEARED UP—WILLIAM WELDSPIEL TESTIFIES REGARDING HIS RELATIONS WITH THE GIRL—KATY'S ILLEGITIMATE CHILDREN—THE MURDER THEORY NOT PROVED.

The inquest to determine the manner of the death of Katy Reidel on Sunday, Feb. 11, in the old quarantine ground, was continued last evening in the Police station at Stapleton, Staten Island. Only one witness, the prisoner William Weldspiel, was examined. His testimony was clear, and the manner in which it was given was so straightforward that it disabused the minds of most of those present of the impression that the witness knew how the young woman came to her death. Still, the statements of the prisoner indicated a lack of regard for the propriety observed by the greater part of mankind, which aroused a sentiment of disgust in the minds of hearers who did not attend the inquest for mere amusement.

THE TESTIMONY OF WELDSPIEL.

William Weldspiel, the prisoner, testified: I live at No. 167 Eldridge street, New-York; have worked for Mr. Linderman as a piano maker, at No. 201 Mercer street, New-York City, for about two years; have been in this country since 1867; am a native of Germany; have been a married man since 1868; was acquainted in Boston with the Reidel family, and others, most of whom were Americans; the Reidels were Bavarians; there were five children in the family besides Katy—three brothers and two sisters; I was the last member of Katy Reidel I saw on Sunday night last; I first met Katy in 1869 in Boston; she was in my room with my wife one night when I returned from work; after this I employed her to help my wife, and she remained in my family for two years; I removed from Boston to New-York in 1870 or 1871; Katy Reidel left Boston before we did and went to Cherrytown, Mass., a watering-place; I was in New-York several months before I saw Katy; we met her at the Central New-Jersey Railway Depot while we were on our way to Phillipsburg; I believe she learned that we were going from New-York to Pennsylvania, and went to the depot to meet us; she did not accompany us to Phillipsburg, but asked us to write telling her how we liked that place; when we reached Phillipsburg I got work in the coal mines; we were about two months in Phillipsburg when my wife wrote to Katy, and she came at once, without answering a reply; she was in my house when she was delivered of a child; this was about Christmas, four years ago; she lived at my house from August until December before her child was born; she said nothing about being pregnant until just before her confinement; she afterward told me that the father of the child was a young man named Johnny Bass, a fresco painter, whose father kept a dry goods store in New-York. Katy's child died suddenly, in the month of January, of inflammation of the lungs; in March following the death of the child, I had saved $10, which I gave to Katy to enable her to go to New-York to procure a situation as a wet-nurse; she procured a place with Mrs. Rosenberg, of No. 44 St. Mark's place. The witness here stated that in the following July Katy sent him $20 to come on to New-York, and, on his arrival here, gave him more money to buy tools; in the October following she left Mrs. Rosenberg, and then gave him $75 to furnish apartments for his family and herself; she agreed to pay him at the rate of $3 per week for board, and by this was to give her $5 per week until the whole amount of his indebtedness to her, $123, was canceled; she became angered at his failure to pay her the weekly sum mentioned, and left his house; Weldspiel saw her very seldom until December, 1875, when she called upon him and, saying she had a baby, asked him to give her some money; he gave her some, and went with her to Peter Wohlbert's, where they left the baby to be nursed; the child was afterward taken to Mrs. Young's, at No. 869 Second avenue, where it died; he dwelt in several boarding-houses, previous to going to Mrs. Wiener's at No. 134 Chester street; he went to that place at the request of Katy Reidel, who was about to leave her situation up-town, and wished some place to stay while looking for employment; there was a bed and a lounge in the room; although he represented himself as the husband of Katy, and gave their names as Mr. and Mrs. Weldspiel, witness declared he occupied this lounge, while she slept on the bed; Katy, he said, only lived at Mrs. Wiener's at intervals; she did not remain long in any situation, and Mrs. Wiener said to him, "No wonder she can't stay long in a place; she is pregnant;" he said: "No, it ain't so;" Mrs. Wiener said, "Yes, she has been four months that way." Witness then spoke to Katy about the matter, and she denied it; Katy then got the situation with Mrs. Pheips, and witness left Mrs. Wiener's house and procured a room in Mr. Ratzged's house, No. 167 Eldridge street; he visited her twice at Mr. Phelps' house, representing himself as her brother; on one occasion, while he sat in the dining-room, the basement door bell was rung, and Katy opened the window to see who the caller was; she cried out, "It's our George;" and turned pale as she looked at witness; then she walked out and dismissed the visitor; when she came back Weldspiel asked her who the visitor was, and she said he was the milkman; witness said, "If he is an honest man why did you not bring him in?" She said, "Oh, I did not want him to see you;" she lived at Ratzged's with the witness for six days, and during that time he slept on the floor; he caught cold from this, and on the afternoon of Saturday, Feb. 10, while engaged at some hard labor, became so sick he was compelled to leave the shop; on reaching home he went to bed and slept for several hours; he was awakened by Katy, who told him that she was going to leave the house, as she did not like Mrs. Ratzged; she asked him if he would accompany her to Newark, where she expected to procure work in a corset factory; he endeavored to induce her to stay until Monday, but she refused to do so; they went out together at 5 o'clock and took a Third Avenue car, on the way down the jolting of the car caused Weldspiel's head to ache, and he told Katy he could go no further; he left the car at Chatham square and Katy followed him out; on the sidewalk she said to him: "I hope you are not angry with me, William, I am sorry you are so sick; I am thankful to you, for you have done more for me than my own father and mother." Weldspiel asked her if she had money enough, and she replied in German, "I am prepared for war or peace." They parted and witness never saw Katy afterward. He accounted for his whereabouts that night and the next day; he did not know of the finding of Katy's body on Staten Island until Sunday morning last, when, in response to a message left for him in a restaurant, he called upon Mrs. Wiener; the latter asked him where his wife was, and he said he supposed she was "in health;" "Why," Mrs. Wiener responded, "Don't you know that her body has been found on Staten Island? two detectives have been here inquiring about her; she has been discovered to have been in the condition I told you." Weldspiel then told Mrs. Wiener that Katy told him she was not sncients, and the latter declared that Katy had asked her for aid to produce an abortion. In response, to questions of jurymen, he said solemnly that he never had improper intercourse with Katy Reidel, clinching his declaration with the remark that though he never told his wife that Katy lived with him at intervals; she was willing to trust him just as he was to trust her; Katy admitted to the witness that Bass was the father of her second child as well as of the first; Mrs. Rosenberg, with whom Katy lived for eight months after her return from Phillipsburg, told him that a drug clerk, employed in the drug store at the corner of St. Mark's place and First avenue, was very intimate with Katy, whose conduct in the latter days of her employment at Mrs. Rosenburg's was scandalous in the extreme. Weldspiel also declared that, as he was very poor, Katy always paid her share when she lived with him.

At this point the examination was concluded, and the inquest was adjourned until this evening. The father of the dead girl is expected to arrive at Stapleton this morning, and will be examined to-night as to his knowledge of the character of Weldspiel and the relations between his daughter and that person.

KINGS COUNTY DEMOCRATS.

Notwithstanding the large and to a great extent fraudulent majority obtained by the Democrats in Kings County last November, they are not happy. The bickering between the local leaders has been constant since the election, and at several recent meetings of the General Committee to settle the claims of rival contestants for seats, open hostilities of a hearty, vigorous kind have been developed. The disputes as to the representation of the Fifth, Eleventh, and Twelfth Wards in the General Committee have not been settled, nor are they likely to be for some time. At a meeting of the General Committee last evening, to elect officers for the year, a characteristic debate occurred. Mr. Michael Coffey, who leads one wing of the Democratic forces, opposed to the rule of "Boss" McLaughlin, charged Robert Furey, who is known among ward politicians as McLaughlin's "right bower," with selling out to the Republicans. One of the "Boss'" followers outside the rail informed Mr. Coffey that he was a —— loafer. Another inside the rail wanted to know if Coffey was a member of the committee. The Secretary said he was not; that his seat was contested. Coffey said he was a member of the committee, and was proceeding to use some exceedingly plain language in reference to the Boss' followers, when he was commanded in stentorian tones by Major Gen. James B. Craig to be seated. Major Gen. James B. Craig belongs to the Swallow-tail wing of the Boss' adherents, and was temporary Chairman of last night's meeting. Coffey said he would not take his seat, whereupon he would not take his seat, whereupon Major Gen. James B. Craig with commanding dignity ordered the Sergeant at Arms to put Coffey out. A row was imminent. The Hon. Michael Coffey hails from the Twelfth Ward, (Red Hook Point,) and has among his adherents many lusty men, who would be quite willing to resent the insult put upon the honorable Michael by the valiant Major General. Wise counsels however prevailed, and the "Twelfth Ward's favorite son" consented to take his seat. The business transacted by the committee consisted of the re-election of last year's officers.

THE MURDER OF MAGGIE BAUER.

CONTINUATION OF THE TRIAL OF FRANK M'CONNOCHIE—TESTIMONY OF CATHERINE HOFFMAN AND OTHERS.

The trial of Frank McConnochie for the murder of Maggie Bauer, was resumed at the Queens County Court of Oyer and Terminer, yesterday morning. Mrs. Maggie Bauer was first placed on the stand, and produced the clothes which had been worn by her daughter when she left home on the day of her murder. These were a little green and white striped dress, a little red fan and some underclothing; there were bloodstains on the dress, but none on the underclothing. Catherine Hoffman was the next witness: She resided at the County Poor-house in Hempstead; her husband, Leonard Hoffman, was living at Bauer's, where he was employed; on Monday, Aug. 14, 1876, witness went from Hempstead on the 8 o'clock train; she stopped at Bridgeport, where she got out; she went on her way to Mr. Bauer's house; she saw nobody, and met nobody on the route; witness had not previously been at the house of the Bauer's for some six or seven months; after remaining a few moments she asked to be shown the way to Valley Stream, and her husband requested Maggie Bauer to show witness the nearest way to that village; Maggie consented to go, and witness having obtained $2 from her husband took her leave; the pair walked along the lane leading to the highway which led to Valley Stream; the child prattled in an artless manner, and on arriving at Mr. Hummel's barn witness gave a 10 cent silver piece with a large hole in it to Maggie, and told her to run back home, as her mother would want her to help her to get dinner; Maggie then returned on her way home, and witness started on her way to Valley Stream.

Ex-Judge Busteed conducted the cross-examination: Witness said she had been in prison at the Alms-house Jail once, and had been committed to jail by Justice Bernardus Hendrickson, at Jamaica, on another occasion; she positively denied having ever uttered any threats against the Bauer family; had never drawn a knife or other weapon upon her husband or other person; at the time of the Coroner's inquest a pair of her gaiters were in possession of the Coroner; he also had a basket containing some other articles of her wearing apparel, which were restored to witness before she was indicted by the Grand Jury; she was first arrested by Officer Hamer upon suspicion of having murdered Maggie Bauer: she was then on the way from Mr. Anthony Wright's to Valley Stream; on Aug. 14 witness was at Mrs. McLaughlin's at Hempstead; she had slept there on the previous night, and left at 8 o'clock on Monday morning, taking the train for Bridgeport, where she alighted, as it was nearer to the farm of the Bauer's than the station at Valley Stream; when she left Hempstead on that morning she had only 50 cents in her possession; in changing one of two silver quarters which she had received the 10 cent piece with a hole in it, which she subsequently gave to Maggie Bauer.

Dr. Julius Auerbach testified that he had assisted in the post-mortem examination of the body of little Maggie. A wound was found near the left ear, and the left side of the face was bloody; a piece of black ribbon was twisted around the neck of the body. The witness proceeded to detail the various wounds and evidences of murder, as published at the time of the Coroner's inquest.

Dr. Philip N. Wood testified that he had assisted Dr. Auerbach and Dr. William B. Wood in the post-mortem examination of the body of Maggie Bauer on Aug. 17, 1876. His testimony developed nothing materially different from that adduced from the previous witness. In cross-examination witness stated that the dead child weighed about 90 or 100 pounds, and as the prisoner weighed only about 120 pounds, he "thought it possible that the latter might have carried the body of his victim from the place where he killed her to the spot where the body was found," but left the inference to be drawn that he did not think it "probable." Witness could not say positively that the brown stains upon the dress of the murdered girl shown him were spots of blood.

Henry L. Onderdonk, editor of the Hempstead Inquirer, was the next witness. He had attended the Coroner's inquest, and had personally examined the premises where the murder had been committed. Witness gave in detail the confession made by the prisoner to him and other gentlemen, including the District Attorney and Detective Payne. In cross-examination witness admitted having written and published editorials in which he might have attributed the murder to Kate Hoffman.

David Henderson, an old man who had attended the toll-gate on the Hempstead road for many years, testified to having seen the prisoner on the road leading to Springfield, on Aug. 13.

Mrs. Mary Baker, of Springfield, testified that the prisoner came to her house on Aug. 14; "he begged a drink of water, and something to eat;" the prisoners face was badly scratched at the time.

Coroner John R. Hicks, of Rockaway, detailed the circumstances attending the inquest. In cross-examination Judge Busteed took the witness to task for allowing the articles of clothing belonging to Kate Hoffman, and other things supposed to throw some light on the murder, to pass out of his possession.

Sophia Downs and Mary Kiesel testified in relation to the disposition of Maggie's body after the inquest, and Charles Maher, a barber, swore to the marks of finger-nails on the face of the prisoner a few days after the murder. Edwin McCaffery, a track walker, on the Hempstead branch of the Long Island Railroad, gave similar testimony.

Peter Petersoh, of Hempstead, had seen the bloody shirt said to have been discarded by the prisoner after the murder, "while he was boiling water for the milk to take to New-York;" witness was in the employ of Mr. P. C. Barnum. The testimony of Cornelius Lawrence was taken to verify the confession made by McConnochie, after which the court took a recess until this morning.

REPUBLICAN CENTRAL COMMITTEE.

ITS ORGANIZATION COMPLETED—APPOINTMENT OF THE STANDING COMMITTEES FOR THE YEAR.

The Republican Central Committee met last evening at Republican Hall in Thirty-third street, near Broadway, and completed its organization. Hon. Benjamin K. Phelps, who was at the last meeting unanimously elected Chairman of the committee, presided. In taking the chair he made a few appropriate remarks, accepting the position to which he had been elected with thanks, and promising, with the help of the committee, to discharge the duties devolving upon him to the best of his ability. He then announced that he had appointed to serve on the standing committees of the organization for the ensuing year the following named gentlemen:

In accordance with an amendment of the Constitution of the committee providing that the Chairman of the German Republican Central Committee shall be elected annually a member ex officio of the General Committee, ex-Judge A. J. Dittenhoefer, who is now the Chairman of the German organization, was so elected, the roll being called for the purpose, and only two votes appearing in the negative. The meeting then adjourned.

THE NEW SUPERINTENDENT OF PRISONS.

Louis D. Pillsbury, the newly-appointed Superintendent of State Prisons, arrived at Sing Sing yesterday and visited the prison. The Superintendent was accompanied by ex-State Prison Inspector B. S. W. Clarke, of Franklin County, who, it is understood, will be appointed Warden and Agent of Sing Sing Prison in place of the present incumbent. It is believed that a great many changes and needed improvements will be speedily made by Superintendent Pillsbury, and in consequence, the keepers, guards, and other officials, feel considerable anxiety as to their prospects for retaining their positions. There are several aspirants for the principal positions, and it is expected that those of principal Keeper, Physician, Chief Clerk, and Storekeeper will be filled the latter part of this week or the beginning of next. Yesterday the Superintendent merely passed through the different workshops, and conversed informally with the officials on the present condition of the prison.

THE ELECTION IN THE FIRST DISTRICT.

The Aldermen met yesterday as a Board of County Canvassers, and canvassed the returns of the election held last week for member of Assembly from the First District, in place of the late James Healey. The vote, as announced by the Clerk of the board, is as follows: John F. Berrigan, 1,553; John Moore, 885; John H. Grimes, 877; Hugh McManus, 130; William H. Crumie, 100; Frederick H. Jurgea, 63; John Hub, 15. The board will meet again to-day, when an official declaration of the above vote will be made.

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

THE CONTINENTAL LIFE COMPANY.

THE HEARING BEFORE THE REFEREE RESUMED—THE FORMER VICE PRESIDENT OF THE COMPANY ON THE STAND—HOW HIS LIFE ANNUITY WAS COMMUTED EVERY YEAR—COMPLICATED LITIGATIONS.

The hearing before Mr. William Allen Butler, the Referee in the matter of the Continental Life Insurance Company, was resumed yesterday at No. 20 Nassau street, when Mr. L. V. Stiles, the Cashier, furnished a list of items which were called for some days ago relating to payments that had been made out of the funds of the company. The janitor of the Continental building was then placed upon the stand, and testified to having seen Luther W. Frost, Rufus C. Frost, and J. P. Rogers, the Secretary of the company, visit the office on a Sunday, the date of which he could not fix positively; witness was of opinion that it was the last Sunday in January or the first in the month of February; Mr. Rogers took away with him a small bundle, but witness did not know what it contained; at another time the witness said he remembered having seen Mr. Rogers enter the office with a bundle after everybody had gone away for the day. Mr. Raphael J. Moses, of counsel, questioned the witness closely, but without effect, for the purpose of showing that this bundle contained the three books that were missing from Oct. 25 to Jan. 23.

George W. Crofut, the former Superintendent of Agencies, was then called, and testified that, since the appointment of Mr. Anderson as Receiver, while carrying on negotiations for the purchase of the capital stock, he had twice examined the envelopes in which the certificates were contained, and had not seen the name of Walter R. Blake during the examination. One of the envelopes containing the stock of M. B. Wynkoop was shown witness, upon which was an indorsement in lead pencil as follows: "W. R. Blake, loan $10,625 45. shares Continental Life Insurance Company's stock." Inside of the envelope was a certificate for 45 shares of stock, and a promissory note, signed "W. R. Blake," for the above amount; witness had not seen this note before, and thought it was not there when he examined the stock. The witness was put through a long examination relating to the stock of the different stockholders, but nothing pertinent was elicited. He stated that he knew Daniel J. Noyes; had free access to the vaults of the company during the month of December last, and that he came there almost daily; he would enter the vaults whether Mr. Anderson was present or not; he brought Mr. Noyes carry away any bundles or documents. Mr. Robert Sewell, counsel for Mr. Anderson, then cross-examined the witness with a view to showing that he could not swear as to what was or was not in the certificate envelopes at the time of his examination, and Mr. Crofut said there had been so much changing around the place that he was not prepared to swear to anything.

The next witness was Mr. M. B. Wynkoop, who was the Vice President of the company until May last, at which time he resigned. He testified that some time before his resignation there was a purchase of stock made which had been deemed advisable, three of the Directors agreeing to assume, for the time being, the liability of the purchase; witness borrowed over $10,000 on the line of stock made to him; this amount was repaid when he sold out all his stock in the company, by the latter agreeing to take the obligations of R. C. Frost instead of witness' obligations, which at that time amounted to something over $10,000; this agreement was signed by Luther W. Frost, Rufus C. Frost, and J. P. Rogers, and was entered into early in May last; when witness sold his stock he received for 65 shares their par value, $6,500, and a release from the liability of the advance made on the 45 shares mentioned in the testimony of Mr. Crofut. The witness was shown a certificate for 44 for 15 shares, which has figured somewhat prominently in the hearing, that being the stock purchased by John O. Hoyt before he brought the action for the Receiver's appointment. Mr. Wynkoop said that the 15 shares mentioned had been transferred by the witness in blank to Rufus C. Frost a short time prior to his resignation. The witness was asked the amount of his salary, and if he received any other moneys from the company. His salary, he said, was $2,000 per annum, and besides this he received a life annuity amounting to something over $1,000. The cross-examination on this point brought out the fact that the annuity was commuted every year, for what reason witness was unable to state, but he thought it was in accordance with the custom of the company. The stockholders, he said, received an extra dividend of 7 per cent, which did not appear on the annual statement, and this was at one time increased to about 18 per cent.

The hearing was then adjourned until Friday.

In the suit of John O. Hoyt against the Continental, under which the above reference was ordered, Justice Pratt has granted an order joining in the suit the people of the State of New-York and William Smyth, Superintendent of the Insurance Department.

An order was also made by Justice Gilbert yesterday that the franchises of the Continental Life Insurance Company be declared to be dissolved and extinguished as to all the world, except solely for the purposes of winding up; Attorney General of the State to prosecute an action auxiliary to this, in order to reach the funds belonging to the company.

The papers in the suit brought by Mr. William R. Grace, as Receiver of the Continental Life Insurance Company, against the New-Jersey Mutual and the National Capital Life Insurance Companies and Benjamin Noyes, President of the latter corporation, to prevent them disposing of the assets of the plaintiff, alleged to be in their possession, were yesterday served on Mr. Henry D. Walker, the Treasurer of the National Capitol.

A COUNSEL'S SELF-ACCUSATION.

At the opening of the Court of Oyer and Terminer yesterday morning, the jury, who had been locked up during the preceding night to induce them to agree on a verdict in the case of James Rice, brought in a verdict finding the latter guilty of manslaughter in the third degree, but recommending him to the mercy of the court. A. Oakey Hall, the prisoner's counsel, asked for a suspension of judgment until Friday. He added: "I desire to say, and I must say that I know this man to be absolutely innocent. With the indulgence of the court, I desire to say that, so believing and so knowing, I desire in this public manner to declare my unalterable determination never again as a lawyer to appear in a homicide case. If I cannot demonstrate to a jury, under circumstances like these, the absolute innocence of a man that I know to be innocent —while I have no fault to find with the jury—I have a right to find fault with myself, and, therefore, I give the best evidence of my earnestness when I say, after many hours of reflection, that such is the lesson this case has taught me that I never will again appear in a homicide case, and I state it because I desire to attest my absolute belief in my assertion that this man is innocent. The jury have recommended him to mercy. Your Honor has no alternative but to sentence him. If he did the deed, as the jury believe, he must be guilty of manslaughter in the third degree, but believing him to be innocent, I earnestly appeal to your Honor to make inquiries, to give him the lowest sentence that the law allows." Mr. Hall also said he would make application to the Governor in the case.

Judge Brady thought it a most unfortunate thing, if the prisoner was not guilty, that the defense were not able to prove his innocence. He thought, however, Mr. Hall did himself great injustice in thinking the jury were not warranted in bringing in the verdict they had. He suspended sentence until Friday.

THE HEAD-MONEY TAX ON IMMIGRANTS.

The annual meeting of the Emigration Commissioners was held yesterday afternoon in Castle Garden. There were present Commissioners Forrest, Lynch, Starr, Maujer, Quintard, and Kauffman, and Bishop Quintard, of Tennessee, brother of the Commissioner of that name, who attended as an invited guest. Commissioner Forrest was re-elected President of the Commission for the ensuing year. An answer to a communication from the Board of Managers of the Produce Exchange, inclosing another from the Boston Board of Trade, and asking for information relative to the bill now pending in Congress, entitled "An act to regulate immigration," was adopted. The Produce Exchange people are fearful lest a re-imposition of the head-money tax will drive immigration away from New-York by diverting the steam-ship lines to other ports, which would naturally take away from this City a large share of imports also. The answer, which is very long, gives a recital of the causes which led to the imposition of the head-money tax, explains its workings, and tells how it was abrogated by a decision of the Supreme Court declaring State laws on the subject unconstitutional. It says that the last Legislature adopted a resolution calling upon the Commissioners to take steps to secure the needed legislation from Congress.

The enactment of the law, it is claimed, will be of much benefit to the emigrants by providing a quasi insurance fund against accident or disease. No treaty obligations of the United States with foreign Governments will be violated. Persons unable to support themselves, lunatics, and criminals, are frequently shipped to this port by persons abroad interested in relieving themselves of the burden of their care and support. The tax is not an unreasonable imposition, as a quarter of a century's experience shows. There is no interference with commerce contemplated. The bill is not local in its bearings, but applies equally to all ports where emigrants arrive. The assertion that the imposition of a capitation charge, as provided for in the bill, would have the effect of increasing the rates of passage from European ports to New-York is not true, and was so acknowledged, they say, by Mr. Gustav Schwab, representing the steam-ship companies, when before the Committee on Commerce of the House of Representatives, the rates of fare being entirely governed by the competition among shipping companies.

The remainder of the answer is an elaborate argument in favor of the bill, and a defense of the Commissioners of Emigration, whose functions, it claims, are widely misunderstood.

After the transaction of routine business the meeting adjourned.

The immigration for January to this port was 300 less than for the same period last year.

THE TROUBLES OF THE PURITAN CONGREGATIONAL CHURCH, BROOKLYN—A COUNCIL OF CHURCHES ADVISES THE ABANDONMENT OF ITS PROPERTY.

The congregation of the Puritan Church, corner of Lafayette and Marcy avenues, Brooklyn, have for several years been under a grievous and apparently immovable burden of debt. It began its existence in a store, and in time undertook to build a handsome church, which the architect employed assured the congregation could be built for $40,000. It was constructed in war times, by day work, and much of it was paid for at prices two or three times higher than they ought to have been. The original designs contemplated a very large building, to cover the eight lots to which title had been obtained, but before the ostentatious wing was finished the society was found to be deeply in debt. A number of persons were compromised seriously, and the 500 or 600 attendants were unable to raise even the current expenses of the church. Its Pastor, Rev. Charles Hall Everest, has remained with the congregation, until the present time, but having resigned, because he saw there was no prospect that the congregation would be able to lift its load of debt, and his letter having been accepted by the congregation, an invitation was sent to the Congregational churches of Brooklyn, asking them to meet the Puritan Church in a council to be held to consider what should be done. This council was convened yesterday afternoon in the Puritan Church. There were present representatives of the following churches: Plymouth, New-England, South Congregational, Central, Union, Bedford Avenue, Tompkins Avenue, Rochester Avenue, and Woodhaven. The church was represented by Rev. Dr. Budington, Pastor declined to take part in the conference. The meeting having been called to order, Rev. Edward Beecher was chosen Moderator. A statement of the condition of the society was read, showing that its debt is $93,000, and that there is no prospect that the congregation can remove it. A committee consisting of Gen. Heath, Rev. Mr. Wilde, and Rev. Mr. Lockwood, was appointed to consider and report on the statement of the church committee. The committee reported after a brief consultation, recommending the adoption of a resolution to the effect that the entire church property should be relinquished to the creditors and the corporation dissolved, but that the society should be maintained and efforts made to secure another place of worship. The resolutions were adopted. It is said that the balance of $800 due Rev. Mr. Everest, the Pastor, will be paid to him before he leaves for Chicago.

INDEPENDENT ORDER OF ODD-FELLOWS.

The annual encampment of the Independent Order of Odd-fellows of the State of New-York was begun yesterday morning in Odd-fellows' Hall, corner of Grand and Centre streets. The meeting, which was largely attended, was presided over by J. P. Murphy, G. P. Among the Past Grand officers present were J. P. Sanders, D. W. C. Langdon, George Haskins, Meyer Stern, W. H. Barnes, Abram Lent, James Terwilliger, J. W. Stebbins, T. P. St. John, E. S. Ralph, George Gardner, D. P. Gardiner, George Snyder, Charles Pinckney, J. C. Aitken, and J. Fonda. The forenoon was devoted to examining candidates for admission and conferring the degree of the Encampment upon new members, forty of whom successfully passed examination. The annual election, which took place at the conclusion of this ceremony, resulted in the choice of the following officers: G. P., Richard L. Hadleigh; G. H. P., Elias Geesman; G. S. W., George E. Craft; G. J. W., William B. Monroe; G. Scribe, G. V. Clark; G. Treasurer, George Smith; R. G. L. U., George Haskins; G. Sentinel Joseph Patterson; D. G. Sentinel Edward, Worthelmer; G. Marshall, W. W. Tully. The reports of the retiring officers were then read, and showed the financial affairs of the order to be in a favorable condition. The ceremony of the installation of the new officers completed the business of the day, and at its conclusion the meeting adjourned. In the evening the members attended Booth's Theatre and witnessed the performance there of "Fifth Avenue." To-day the Encampment will hold another session for the purpose of considering the new constitution and by-laws, and for transacting other general business.

THE LATE CARROLL DUNHAM, M. D.

The funeral of the late Carroll Dunham, M. D., took place yesterday at Irvington-on-the-Hudson, and was largely attended by the medical profession and by the lay friends of the deceased. Dr. Dunham was one of the most prominent of the Homeopathic physicians of this country. For many years he was untiring in his efforts to elevate the standard of medical education, and was a constant contributor to the Homeopathic literature of the day. He was President of the American Institute of Homeopathy. The cause of death was excessive nervous exhaustion from the great labors attendant upon his services in connection with the World's Homeopathic Convention held in Philadelphia last Summer. For a year prior to the meeting he was actively engaged in its behalf, and from that time to the last of December his entire time was devoted to compiling and arranging the proceedings of the convention for publication. For many years the Doctor was Dean of the New-York Homeopathic Medical College, and to his efforts in its behalf the present high standing of that institution is largely inuebted.

TOO MANY POSITIONS FOR ONE MAN.

While Commissioner Campbell was at Albany yesterday, the Aldermanic Committee on Public Works, of which Mr. Thomas Shiels is Chairman, was occupied in making arrangements for an investigation of the charge, preferred by Alderman Tuomey, that he had neglected his official duties. Mr. Tuomey appeared before the committee, and said that Mr. Campbell could not attend to the duties of the two positions he now holds. He was Commissioner of Public Works, and also President of the Consolidated Coal Company. He was running for a second term for the latter position, and the election would be held at noon to-day. Mr. Tuomey then expressed the belief that Mr. Campbell would resign the Commissionership of Public Works if he was re-elected President of the Consolidated Coal Company. The committee decided to commence the investigation on Tuesday next, and directed Mr. William H. Moloney, their clerk, to summon such witnesses as Mr. Tuomey might suggest—the list to include officers of the Consolidated Coal Company.

THE "GOLD WATCH" SWINDLE.

Mayor Ely yesterday received a communication from Charles E. Quimby, of Augusta, Me., stating that he was a victim of "a swindling practice that is being carried on at No. 37 Bond street, by a firm purporting to be Russell & Co." Mr. Quimby then states that a great many people in his town, and also in Gardiner, have been swindled by the firm, and that they have another office at No. 5 Bond street. The firm notified him that he had drawn a prize worth $200, the prize consisting of a gold watch and chain, which were included in the articles to be drawn from the Laramie City Lottery, and that they would be forwarded to his address on payment of $20. Quimby then states that one of the prize watches is on exhibition in an express office in Gardiner, Me., and that it is not worth 200 cents. Many other letters of the same character have been received by the Mayor, but it appears that he has no power to interfere with the alleged swindling operations of the firm.

GENERAL BUSINESS INTERESTS.

Breadstuff and provision interests here were very unfavorably affected yesterday by the reports of the decidedly bearish temper of speculation at Chicago, which led to a sharp decline in our market on No. 2 Chicago Spring wheat of 2 to 3 cents a bushel, and on mess pork and Western steam lard, especially the latter, the depression was extreme, the lowest quotation ruling at the close. The dealings in lard were extensive at the materially reduced figures; but in wheat, comparatively unimportant. Corn sold quite freely at irregular figures; and rye, at somewhat firmer rates, this grain chiefly for export. Petroleum was also quite brisk, but at lower and unsettled prices, with more call for tonnage on charter suited to this interest, chiefly for London and the principal German ports. Rumors of further offerings of wheat to arrive from Europe were current, but without any authentic particulars, and as far as yet indicated not deemed of any special significance as to the legitimate course of trade.

SENDING A LIGHTER ADRIFT.

Charles Dunn, aged 19, and William Eagan, aged 16, well known to the Police of the east side as members of the notorious "Hook gang," were taken yesterday morning before Justice Murray, at the Essex Market Police Court, charged with stealing the hawser of the lighter Oak, at Pier No. 54 East River, and sending the vessel adrift. Early on Monday afternoon the two young thieves, it is alleged, walked on the pier, and, while the crew were at dinner, deliberately cut the line. When the Captain of the craft, George Courtier, ascended to the deck a few minutes later, the Oak was drifting rapidly with the ebb tide. The prisoners were arrested on suspicion by an officer of the Thirteenth Precinct, but the stolen hawser was not found in their possession. They were committed to answer.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

Capt. Brackett's force seized 1,000 cigars yesterday that the owners were attempting to smuggle from the steamer Clyde. They also captured in a Broadway store a package of brunella cloth, believed to have been shipped by McClaunaghan, the Montreal smuggler.

Humphrey Stevens, aged 61, an inmate of the Old Men's Unsectarian Home, No. 521 East One Hundred and Twentieth street, died suddenly yesterday morning. The fact of the finding of a vial of laudanum in his bed partly establishes the belief that the old man, for some unknown motive, committed suicide by poisoning.

The semi-centennial anniversary of the English Lutheran Church of St. James, Fifteenth street, between Second and Third avenues, was celebrated last evening. The occasion was observed by a pleasant reunion of all the living resident members of the church. During the evening an interesting paper was read, giving a condensed history of the Lutheran Church in this City.

A meeting of the American Philological Society will be held this evening in Room No. 36, Cooper Union, when Mr. Charles Sotheran will deliver a free lecture on the subject of "The Recent Verification of the Akkadian and Earliest Semitic Traditions." The lecture will discuss the cuneiform inscriptions, Sir Henry Rawlinson's discoveries, the corroboration of the labors of Grotefend, Oppert, and others, by George Smith, and will be illustrated by diagrams.

BROOKLYN.

The Law Committee of the Board of Supervisors agreed yesterday to send to the Legislature a bill providing for the deficiencies in the appropriations for the poor. The passage of a Deficiency bill at the solicitation of the Charity Commission is an event of yearly occurrence.

Many complaints have recently been made of the tardiness of the street-cleaning contractors in removing ashes and garbage. The President of the Board of City Works has invoked the aid of the Police Department, and in the future contractors will be held to a strict accountability.

The hearing of testimony in the suit brought by Kingsley & Keeney to recover from the city $178,000 for extra work done on the Hempstead Reservoir was resumed yesterday, in the Corporation Counsel's office, by the Referees. A number of contractors were examined as to the value of the work, the testimony being altogether of a technical nature.

The funeral of the late Charles Lowery, Secretary and counsel of the Dime Savings Bank, took place yesterday from the Church of the Holy Trinity. The services were conducted by Rev. Dr. Hall, assisted by Rev. Mr. Chadwell. The pall-bearers were Judge McCue, Alderman Burnett, A. L. Husted, ex-Mayor John W. Hunter, John Halsey, Daniel Chauncey, and J. T. Marcellus.

About a year ago, Anton Lambai, a shoe dealer, said of Rev. Adolph Meicuzney that he was a thief. Both parties are Poles and the latter is Pastor of the Polish Roman Catholic Church in New-York. The clergyman sued his defamer for $50,000 last Fall, and the jury disagreed. The case was again tried yesterday. It was given to the jury last evening with instructions to bring in a sealed verdict during the night, if they came to an agreement. The trouble between the plaintiff and defendant arose out of some church accounts.

NEW-JERSEY.

The ladies of the Methodist Episcopal Church at Westfield will give a Lady Washington reception, in the church, to-morrow (Thursday) evening. There will be old time singing, readings, and refreshments. The proceeds will go toward the fund for the purchase of a new organ.

George Weber and Jacob Weden had just completed a 90-day term in the Hudson County Penitentiary yesterday morning, when they were rearrested by Detective Francis on a charge of having committed a burglary at Gottfried Kuevert's shoe store, in Newark, in November last. They were taken to the First District Police Court in Jersey City, and delivered over to the Newark authorities.

A dispatch was received by the Jersey City Police yesterday that a man named Slinger was wanted in Paterson for fraud, and that he had started from that city on the 9:45 train. The only description given of him was that his hands were deeply stained, his trade being that of a dyer. Officer Purcell arrested him on that description, and he was detained to await the arrival of the Paterson authorities.

The cities of Jersey City and Hoboken are confronted with a new difficulty in relation to their water supply. It has been noticed for some time that the water has a brackish taste, and seems to be slightly impregnated with salt, and it has been discovered that owing to the recent removal of obstructions in the Passaic River the salt water from Newark Bay now reaches within a short distance of Belleville, the source of supply. Several plans for obviating the difficulty have been suggested, but nothing of a practical nature has yet been decided upon.

John Hufnagle, a farmer, residing on South Orange avenue, near the Newark city line, met with a singular accident a day or two ago which resulted in his death. He was going down into the cellar when he accidentally slipped on the stairs and fell, his head striking a projecting key with so much force that it penetrated his skull. He fell unconscious on the floor and remained undiscovered until morning, when he was found lying in a pool of blood. Medical

OREGON BEFORE THE COMMISSION.

ARGUMENTS BY SENATOR KELLY AND REPRESENTATIVE JENKS ON THE PART OF THE DEMOCRATS, AND SENATOR MITCHELL AND REPRESENTATIVE LAWRENCE ON THE PART OF THE REPUBLICANS—AN EVENING SESSION—ARGUMENT OF JUDGE HOADLEY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—Shortly after the two houses separated the Electoral Commission went into session, and it was announced that Senator Kelly and Representative Jenks would appear as objectors on the part of the Democrats, and Senator Mitchell and Judge Lawrence, of the House, on the part of the Republicans. Then, after some preliminary discussion of no importance, a recess was taken for half an hour. At the end of that time, before an audience the meagreness of which testified forcibly to the waning interest in the Presidential question, Senator Kelly took the floor on behalf of the Democrats. He made an incoherent and blundering argument against the counting of the votes cast by the Hayes Electors, and curiously enough, in view of his telegrams from Oregon to Tilden and Pelton, talked a great deal about honesty, truth, justice, &c. The principal, indeed the only point made by him, was that each State in the Union had the right to appoint Presidential Electors in its own way and according to its own laws. When it is remembered that this very fact was fully proved by the Republican counsel in the Louisiana case, it will be seen that Mr. Gobble Dispatch Kelly's one point was not a very original or important one. Mr. Jenks was the next speaker on the part of the Democracy. Mr. Jenks is a small, thin man, given to Biblical quotations, and not at all fitted for active association with the party in which Mr. David Dudley Field is such a shining light. When he commenced to speak he put his hand on his heart, looked up to heaven, and spent 10 minutes in assuring the Commission and the public that he intended to argue in the name of truth, justice, and right. He would not have a decision on any technical ground, he said. All he wanted was justice. Then Mr. Jenks went on to prove that in spite of the plainly expressed will of the people of Oregon, it would be justice to give the vote of that State to Tilden. He said that in all cases where there was a dispute as to the eligibility of an Elector, the certificate of the Governor must be conclusive evidence, and even if he issued his certificate to persons not entitled to it, the certificate would have to stand, and the vote of the Elector could not be questioned or disputed. After advancing this startling doctrine, Mr. Jenks, with great bad taste, imitated the example of his friend Senator McDonald, in the Louisiana case, and tried to frighten the Commission into looking at the case under discussion in a way which would result in the success of the "great reformer." He warned them that they had taken an oath to do their duty faithfully and impartially, and that they were watched by the people of the whole country. They must do no wrong, he continued, or they would be forever despised by all good men. After this, Mr. Jenks sat down.

Senator Mitchell was the first speaker on the part of the Republicans. He made a very clear argument as to the facts of the case in question, and advanced several new and important points. He showed, among other things, that while the Governor had power to issue certificates, or at least had that duty to perform, he had no right and no power to determine as to the eligibility of Electors. There was no place in the Constitution of the United States or the Constitution of the State of Oregon in which provision was made for such action on his part.

Mr. Lawrence, of the House, was the next speaker on the part of the Republicans, and closed the preliminary case on that side. His speech was principally devoted to a consideration of the legal points in the case, and his argument was a clear and conclusive one. He showed that the Governor had no power to make a selection as between two contesting Electors, and he cited numerous legal authorities to show that Cronin was clearly ineligible to the position of Elector. He contended that even if Cronin had been legally elected his absence from the meeting of the Electors and his failure to act with them, disqualified him. He further argued that as two Republican Electors were chosen beyond all question, and had received the certificate of the Governor in due form, they, as a majority of the college, were authorized to select and appoint the one member about whose eligibility there was a dispute.

At the close of Judge Lawrence's argument, there was a short debate as to the time which should be allowed counsel on each side to make argument. The Democrats were exceedingly anxious for an extension of time, while Mr. Evarts, representing the Republicans, was content with that which had been allotted by the ruling of the Commission. It was finally decided that three hours and a half should be allowed to each side, and with this understanding a recess was taken until 7:30 o'clock.

After the recess Judge Hoadley, of Cincinnati, who is the managing counsel in the Oregon case on the Democratic side, began his argument and spoke until almost 10 o'clock, consuming two hours and a half. Judge Hoadley's argument was a rather curious statement of his peculiar theories about ineligible Electors, and he claims to have cited everyo ase that has been decided in courts of the United States which bear upon the proposition which he advances, that where an ineligible person is voted for the candidate having the next highest vote is elected. Judge Hoadley claims that Watts, being Postmaster, was ineligible for appointment; that Grover had the right and that it was his duty under the laws of Oregon, to take notice of that ineligibility; that Cronin, having received the next highest number of votes, was properly certified as an Elector, and that the vote of Cronin and the College which he organized should be counted for Tilden. Hoadley made a strong point upon the assumption that Cronin was de facto Elector, because he had the certificate and that Watts, even if de jure an Elector, had no means of contesting his right. Hoadley, in his argument, shifted the Democratic position completely and took up ground not occupied by them either in the Florida case or the case of Louisiana. His argument in one particular sustained fully the action of the Commission in the cases already decided, but upon this he made the claim that the same course would give to Tilden the vote of Cronin in Oregon. He assumed that the Commission had declined to exercise any judicial powers whatever, and on that assumption claimed they had no power except to count the returns certified by Gov. Grover. Judge Hoadley's argument was filled with points which had been impressed upon the Commission by the Republican counsel in cases heretofore decided. His argument was ingenious and curious, but unfortunately for him it all proceeded upon the ground that Watts was ineligible for appointment, and the Commission in the Louisiana case has held that the appointment was regular and the vote of a Federal officer was valid as Elector if he resigned his office before the meeting of the Electoral College. He claimed from first to last in his argument that the Commission could act only with the narrowest ministerial powers, and that they had no judicial authority whatever.

The closing part of Judge Hoadley's argument was a proper ending for an appeal to a jury, and he read it from manuscript, which looked as if it had been written for a long time, and frequently read and studied. He actually claimed that Grover's action was right and honest, and drew a most enchanting picture of the future renown of the Commission and the reverence in which they would be held by posterity, if they would only count the vote of Cronin for Tilden. The Democratic counsel, as well as their legal positions, change with every new case. Mr. Merrick is the only one of them who has appeared in all their cases. Black, O'Conor, Trumbull, and Carpenter have all disappeared. Carpenter was engaged for the single argument in Louisiana, and for that work he received, according to report, $1,500, certainly a small fee when it is remembered how much he got out of Gov. Kellogg without rendering any return. The Republicans have held the same legal positions from the beginning, and Mr. Evarts and Judge Mathews remain as counsel. The legal path marked out by Mr. Kasson, who was the first Republican speaker before the Commission, has been followed in every particular. There will be no departure in the case of Oregon. That case hardly needs argument on the Republican side. It is not probable that the Democratic Commissioners will contend for counting Cronin's vote. Mr. Thurman, particularly, is on record against the legality of such a vote, but they are likely to vote together, that there was no election, and that there was no legal filling of the vacancy, which would be the same in effect as counting Cronin's vote, because it would throw the election into the House. A partisan vote on the Democratic side to take advantage of the Oregon fraud by throwing out one of the votes to which the State is entitled, is to be expected. The time which will be consumed in getting the Oregon case decided and counted cannot be foreseen. If the House is honest in its intention to proceed without delay, it will be counted day after to-morrow, and South Carolina will be sent to the Commission the same day. It cannot be hoped, however, that the end of the Electoral count will be reached before Tuesday of next week.

SUMMARY OF THE PROCEEDINGS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—The Electoral Commission, after several formal meetings and immediate adjournments on account of the delay in Congress in reaching Oregon, met at 1 o'clock today to hear the objections to the certificates in the Oregon case. The court was full at the hour of opening, with the exception of Mr. Garfield. The Clerk read the certificates Nos. 1 and 2. Senator Kelly, and Mr. Jenks, of the House of Representatives, were announced as the objectors on the Democratic side, and Senator Mitchell and Representative Lawrence on the Republican side. Senator Kelly, before proceeding to present his objections, stated that it might be necessary to have certain testimony obtained as to the certificate of appointment of J. W. Watts as Postmaster, and also the certificate of appointment of his successor. He had applied personally to the department, and they declined to give the papers, unless ordered by the Commission. He asked, therefore, for that order that they might be produced, and would also desire a subpœna for two witnesses, Mr. Watts and Senator Mitchell, the latter of whom was present.

Mr. Justice Clifford inquired if it would not do as well for counsel to present this testimony later, to which Representative Jenks responded that it was not important whom it came from, and that it was only to save time that the application was made now, so that the papers and witnesses might be present when wanted.

Senator Edmunds moved that the Commission issue a subpœna, and Senator Mitchell stated, in reference to the witnesses that both were here in the court-room, and would respond at any time when the Commission thought proper that they might be called.

Mr. Jenks, therefore, stated they should not want a subpœna.

Senator Kelly was invited to proceed with his objections, but asked a recess for half an hour, in order to collect certain books and papers that had not arrived. The recess, on motion, was granted for half an hour, and at 2:15 the Commission again assembled, and Senator Kelly proceeded with his argument in objection to certificate No. 1, under rule 4, substantially as follows:

MR. KELLY'S ARGUMENT.

MR. PRESIDENT AND GENTLEMEN OF THE COMMISSION: The first objection which has been made to certificate No. 1—and it is the first one that I shall dwell upon—is in these words: "The said J. W. Watts, who claimed to be one of the said Electors, was, in the month of February, 1873, appointed a Postmaster at Lafayette, in the State of Oregon, and was duly commissioned and qualified as such Postmaster, that being an office of trust and profit under the laws of the United States, and continued to be and act as such Postmaster from February, 1873, until after the 13th day of November, 1876, and was acting as such Postmaster on the 7th of November, 1876, when Presidential Electors were appointed for the State of Oregon; and that the said J. W. Watts was ineligible to be appointed as one of the Presidential Electors." Citing the prohibition in the Constitution on this point, he continued: The question occurs, Is this an office of profit and trust? If so, the Constitution is as clear as the English language can make it: "No person shall be appointed an Elector who holds an office of profit or trust." On the point whether it is an office of profit or trust, the speaker referred to the fifteenth volume of California Reports, in the case of Grow, pages 120 and 121. He called attention to the distinction between a person who is ineligible or incapable of being appointed, and one who may hold the office. If, said he, a person may hold office, then he may be elected while he is under disqualification if he is qualified at the time of holding, citing the case of Senators. That was a very different case from one where the prohibition was to the appointment. The Constitution gives the right to Congress to appoint the time for holding the election. They must be appointed on that day, and it not on that day, they are not appointed at all. The speaker, therefore, contended that the appointment of Mr. Watts, if not made on the 7th day of November, could not be made at any other time by a canvass of votes. He referred to the result of the elections in the States of Vermont and Rhode Island to sustain his view. In addition, he referred to what was said by a committee appointed by the Senate and House of Representatives in 1837, of which Mr. Grundy was Chairman, and his associates were Henry Clay and Silas Wright. It appears that certain persons had been elected who were Postmasters in the different States, and it made no difference at that time whether their votes were allowed, as it would not change the result, but he would call their attention to this clause of the committee's opinion: "A disqualification relates to the time of the appointment, and a resignation of the office of deputy after his appointment as Elector would not entitle him to vote under the Constitution." I contend, said the speaker, that the State has the power to enforce the Constitution, if the Government does not; that a State has a right to exclude Federal officers when the mandate is so clear. The next question presented is, if those gentlemen were not eligible then was Cronin, who received the next highest number of votes, eligible? He argued in support of the view that the next highest took the election. The Constitution of the State of Oregon, he said, says: "When an election is held by the people under this Constitution, the person or persons who shall receive the highest number of votes shall be declared duly elected." There is a positive injunction in the law that the Electors shall be elected on a particular day, and there is no authority to elect at another time. But I hold that the first election should decide the whole matter, because it is impossible to convene the Electors at a subsequent time to hold a new election to supply the vacancy. Here the power of the people has become exhausted. The highest candidates must be chosen or the State will have no representation. There is a positive injunction that the State shall do that. This law is mandatory, and it says the election shall take place on that day.

The next point, and the one which will be most strenuously contested, is this, that the Governor had no right to decide this matter, that it was a judicial question and not a question for the Executive. There is nothing more fallacious. In every department of the Government of the United States, as well as the Government of the States, every officer, whether executive, legislative, or judicial, is counselled to exercise judgment in certain cases. The speaker referred to the case in 14th Indiana, which was a mandamus to compel the Governor to issue a commission where the court said the Governor might determine whether a candidate was entitled to receive a commission or not where his right rests upon the ground that the constitutional inhibition is in force. If the Governor has ascertained that he has issued a commission to a person ineligible to the office, he may issue another commission. The Speaker also referred to 39th Missouri, where it says that the Governor must have a discretion in appointing Commissioners. He may go behind a certificate. The issuing of a commission is an act of the Executive in his political capacity, and not his judicial. In all these cases he exercises a political discretion for the use of which he is alone answerable to his country. Why, then, is his discretion taken away or destroyed when his duty refers to the issuing of a commission? It certainly is not. Mr. Kelly here cited an unreported case in Oregon. Ex-Gov. Gibbs was elected District Attorney for the State, and shortly after entering upon the discharge of his duties received from President Grant the office of United States District Attorney, holding both offices at the same time. The Governor, knowing that fact, and knowing that the Constitution of the State of Oregon prohibited any person who was holding any office under the Federal Government to hold a State office, appointed C. B. Bellinger Prosecuting Attorney for the State. Ex-Gov. Gibbs refused to recognize that appointment. Mr. Bellinger presented his certificate of appointment to the Chief Justice of the State, [Upton,] who refused to recognize it, because he said the Governor had no right to ascertain that matter. It was a question for the judiciary. On the other hand, Mr. Bellinger, believing himself right, brought a writ of quo warranto. It was decided adversely to him on the same ground, that it was a matter of judicial inquiry. On appeal the Supreme Court unanimously decided that the Governor had that right.

Now, the votes of the Electors shall be given, received, returned, and canvassed the same as they are given, received, and canvassed for members of Congress. Now, another duty in addition to that is imposed upon the Secretary of State, "He shall prepare two lists of the names of Electors elected and affix the seal of the State to the same. Said lists shall be signed by the Governor and Secretary, and by the latter delivered to the College of Electors at the hour of their meeting." This is the evidence of their appointment. This is their right to act. I contend that the Governor of Oregon and the Secretary of State are the persons to canvass these votes. There is no evidence that there was a canvass by any other person. This is for them, and them only, and they have decided. They have given their certificate that these three gentlemen are eligible, one including Mr. Cronin. It matters not how they came to that decision. The presumption of law will always be that it was upon sufficient evidence. They had evidence of the ineligibility of one of the candidates, and they decided that it was sufficient to exclude him, and therefore a certificate was given, in the language that was read here. These two officers are the only medium of communication between the State and the Federal Government. What right have these gentlemen to say they are Electors because they want to get the certificate? Any person can send a cable that by paying a fee. You cannot tell whether the signatures are genuine except they have the certificate of the Governor, which is required by the law of the United States, and I contend that the United States have a right to prescribe how these votes shall be certified.

By Commissioner Thurman—Does the law of Oregon require the Secretary of State to give any decision at all, or does it require the Governor to give the evidence of the fact?

Senator Kelly—Let me read: "The votes for the Electors shall be given, received, returned, and canvassed as the same are given, returned, and canvassed for members of Congress. The Secretary of State shall prepare two lists of the names of the Electors and affix the seal of the State to the same. Such lists shall be signed by the Governor and Secretary and delivered to the College of Electors at their meeting on said first Wednesday of December."

By Commissioner Thurman—Does the Secretary of State make out that list, including the name of Watts?

Senator Kelly—No, Sir; it did not include the name of Watts. The decision upon the facts and upon the law was upon the interposition of a protest, by a number of gentlemen, to the counting of the vote of Watts. The Governor undertook to decide that matter, as he had a right to decide it, under the decision I have stated.

Commissioner Abbott inquired whether the certificate which was presented here was not in exact accordance with the provisions of the law of Oregon in every respect.

Senator Kelly replied that it was in direct accordance with the law of Oregon and the law of the United States.

Commissioner Abbott inquired whether there was any other board in Oregon except that constituted by the Governor and Secretary of State who could certify to the election of Electors.

Senator Kelly replied that there was none.

ARGUMENT OF MR. JENKS.

Representative Jenks next addressed the Commission on behalf of the Democratic side, substantially as follows: The first question necessarily is a question of evidence. What evidence is there before this tribunal, or what evidence can or will be received by it? In answer to that, if we are to judge by the precedents established by this tribunal in the past, we infer that there is to be no evidence submitted except the papers which came with the several returns from the President of the Senate. This narrows the inquiry considerably, and in that view we propose to discuss it; not that we differ from what we said before on this question, for we would invite you, as before, to go down to the bottom of the facts of the case and look into the whole matter. With reference to the papers before the Commission, the question arises which are to be considered legal evidence? The evidence offered with the return by the President of the Senate was, first, the certificate of the Governor of Oregon, attested by the Secretary of State, which is offered as evidence on the part of certificate No. 2. The evidence on the part of certificate No. 1 consists of the affidavits of three persons whom we know not, for there is no evidence to identify them as having been any of the persons voted for at that election. In their affidavits they state that they went to the Governor and asked for a certificate; but I ask you whether it was not his duty to judge to whom he should deliver the certificate. Identification of Electors was necessary, but the only evidence on the point offered is their affidavits. These men have no recognition that this tribunal can take cognizance of, and if this tribunal does not the same principle as heretofore it is simply a nullity. The next evidence of authentication which they attempt to originate is the statement of the votes cast in that State with the Secretary of State; that it is a true statement of the votes as cast with the Electoral vote of the persons therein claiming to be elected which is attached. To refer to this we stand upon the legal proposition that, where there is a statutory mode of authentication, it can be received as legal evidence in a court of justice. He then quoted authorities and the laws of Oregon and the United States on this point, and claimed that unless a change is made, the certificate of the Governor and Secretary of State must be taken as complete and conclusive evidence that Cronin and the two other Electors were elected. The object of the certificate of the Secretary of State is to identify the person as the person voted for. The next question would be the effect of that evidence in case of error or mistake, if it was shown that the error was willful and fraudulent. We assert now, as we always have, that fraud vitiates the whole proceedings, but not otherwise. We assert that the granting of the commission is a political act, and as such cannot be inquired into, except for willful fraud, by any other tribunal than that whose duty it is to exercise political functions. Mr. Jenks then argued that even if Watts had received a majority of the votes he was not elected, because the Constitutional prohibition is against his appointment. It does not say that any person holding an office of trust or profit shall not be an Elector, but the time of appointment is the all-important thing in reference to that. The citizen who votes is as much bound to regard the requirements of the law as the person who is voted for, and if he disregards those provisions you must treat his act as a nullity—it is to be treated as though it was not done. Mr. Jenks quoted authorities to show that the legal votes are to control the votes that are cast illegally. In reply to an inquiry from Commissioner Edmunds, Mr. Jenks said that it puts the question independent of the knowledge of the voters.

Commissioner Thurman—Your proposition is that where a man cannot be voted for, then knowledge on the part of the voter is of no consequence.

Mr. Jenks—It is of no consequence whatever. The English authorities do not pretend that the voter should know the disqualifications of the candidate. It is only as to whether the next highest candidate is elected. The next question is, was Cronin elected? If Watts was not elected, and Cronin was not elected, would there be a vacancy? We assume to establish that there would not be a vacancy, and he went on to argue that there was not. Electors, he held, are privileged to perform certain acts. It was a privilege, and this man's declining would not authorize the filling as a vacancy. He then called attention to cases which he held sustained this view, and continued: Now with reference to the statutes of Oregon as to vacancies, if there be no provision of its statute to fill any vacancy, and if there was a vacancy to fill—which we deny, because where there is no incumbent it has been decided there is no vacancy, and if there is no vacancy there can be nothing to fill, but the statutes of Oregon define what shall constitute a vacancy, and it confines it to office.

Commissioner Edmunds inquired how that would apply to the action of the Governor in declaring the place vacant?

Mr. Jenks—The act of the Governor was in pursuance of a duty conferred by the Constitution upon him, in which he was to exercise an honest discretion, and which was conclusive as a political duty. After having sworn he would not commission one who was disqualified, he could not do that, and he had the right to decide the question as to whether there was an election or not.

Commissioner Edmunds—Had this been an ordinary State office, for the term of a year, for instance, and the Governor had done the same thing, would it have been competent for the courts to have reversed his judgment and decided the other way?

Mr. Jenks—In conformity to the law of the land it would, but without that conformity and without that express statutory enactment it would not. In the first instance it was controlled by express statutory provision.

Mr. Morton inquired whether, in counsel's opinion, it would be competent for a State Constitution to regulate in any way the appointment of Electors.

Mr. Jenks replied that the Constitution of the United States conferred that power in some instances upon the Legislature of the State. The Constitution of the United States becomes a part of and incorporates itself into that of every State. The Legislature of the State, in conformity to this double instrument, and the power conferred by both, may so regulate, if it does not infringe upon either. Mr. Jenks, resuming, recapitulated the propositions they had attempted to show, and proceeded: Then the case stands in this way: Cronin comes and votes; two others come and vote, but you do not know whether they are the persons voted for or not, because they do not come identified as the law says they shall come. But, assuming that they were the same persons who were voted for and properly identified, which of these votes should be counted? Cronin's vote should be counted as cast, and the other two as they are cast, would be the conclusion I should come to from these several propositions.

SENATOR MITCHELL'S ARGUMENT AGAINST THE BOGUS ELECTORS.

Senator Mitchell presented the objections on behalf of the Republican objectors, and in his argument said: In Oregon there was no law authorizing the Governor to certify a minority candidate elected. The Legislature of Oregon might have provided that the Electors should be appointed by the Governor, the Supreme Court, or the Secretary of State, but it did not, but did direct that the people, the qualified Electors, shall, by a plurality of votes to be cast in the different precincts, choose Electors. The manner of appointment necessarily includes, not merely the way in which the votes shall be cast, but also a means of determining what votes were cast, and the result of such votes. Hence, the Legislature of the State has provided, as a part of the means necessary to an appointment, the mode of determining and declaring the result of the election. This in Oregon prescribes returns from precincts to county boards, from county boards to the Secretary of State, whose final duty it is to canvass the votes and ascertain who has the greatest number of votes. This is the last act in the process of the appointment of a Presidential Elector by the State. What follows is no part of the appointment but simply matter of evidence of the fact. All that precedes enters into and constitutes a part of the manner of appointment. Gov. Grover, in the matter of issuing his certificate, he tells us, ignored the State statutes and followed those of Congress. If Congress had the power to prescribe the form of a certificate—and I believe it had—then such certificate is no part of the manner of appointment, and in issuing it the Governor could not change the appointment as made by the State and officially determined by the Secretary of State, as the final and conclusive act in the process of appointment. Behind this ultimate determination of the Canvassing Board, neither the Governor of the State nor the tribunal whose final duty it is to count the votes for President and Vice President, whether it be the President of the Senate, the two houses of Congress, or the Electoral Tribunal, can rightfully go. If Watts' appointment was merely voidable, and might have been declared void under the statute, by a competent tribunal, but was not so declared, then he could rightfully act in the College of Electors, either under his original appointment by the people as an Elector, or by virtue of his appointment by the Electors present when they accepted his resignation. Or again, should it, for the sake of argument, be conceded that Watts was not appointed, and that Cronin was, and it is also conceded, as it must be as a matter of fact, that they—Odell, Cartwright, and Cronin—did not act together as an Electoral College; but that Odell and Cartwright, a majority of the college, acted together with Watts, whom they elected to fill the vacancy, and Cronin, a minority or one, acted by himself; which, in such a case, is the legally constituted college? There can be but one College of Electors in a State, and under these circumstances the former must be held to be only that one. This is not merely the only record, but is, I confidently insist, conclusive upon that subject, and Odell and Cartwright being a majority of the Electors constituting the Electoral College in Oregon, whose title is indisputable, questioned by no one, not even by the Governor in his certificate, but by it approved their certificate as to the fact that there was a vacancy, and that such vacancy was filled by them, is conclusive, not only against Cronin, but all other persons, the State, the General Government, Congress, and the Electoral tribunal as well. Though the law of your creation may not authorize you to look into or consider this record of intrigue, corruption, and fraud, it will stand, nevertheless, as a part of the history of the times—a changeless and palsied plague-spot upon the record of the Democratic Party that time cannot obscure or repentance condone.

ARGUMENT OF MR. LAWRENCE.

Mr. Lawrence was invited to proceed with his objections. The first point discussed by him was as to the evidence of title to the office for the Hayes Electors. Those Electors presented, first, a "list of the Electors elected" for Oregon, duly certified and signed by the Secretary of State, with the seal of the State by him affixed thereto. This has every formality required by law, except only that the Governor has failed to comply with a directory and immaterial provision of the statute, requiring that it "shall be signed by the Governor;" second, a certified abstract of the popular vote for Electors as canvassed according to law by the Secretary of State, dated Dec. 6, 1876, showing that the Hayes Electors are "the persons having the highest number of votes," on which fact the statute says "they shall be deemed elected;" third, the certificate under the seal of the State, signed by the Governor and Secretary of State, dated Dec. 6, 1876, by which the Governor of Oregon certifies that W. H. Odell, J. C. Cartwright, and E. A. Cronin received each a given number of votes at the election Nov. 7, which, "being the highest number of votes cast for persons eligible," they "are hereby declared duly elected Electors." 4. The record of the proceedings of Odell, Cartwright and Watts as Electors, dated Dec. 6, showing that Odell and Cartwright met, accepted the resignation of Watts, and they two only being present they reappointed Watts, who accepted, and all three voted for Hayes and Wheeler and made the proper return. Thus, as the Constitution requires, is certified by the Electors, made absolutely certain beyond contradiction by any other evidence. The counsel next presented the evidence of title to the office for the Tilden Electors. The entire record showed as their evidence of title (1) the certificate of the Governor, attested by the Secretary of State, for Odell, Cartwright, and Cronin, already referred to, showing not that Cronin, as the law requires, "received the highest number of votes," but only that Cronin received 14,157 votes, "being the highest number of votes cast at the said election of Nov. 7 for persons eligible," and he, with Odell and Cartwright, are "declared duly elected." (2.) The record of proceedings of the so-called Tilden Electors, showing that Cronin assembled on Dec. 6, "solitary and alone in his glory"—or shame—declared that Odell and Cartwright "refused to act," whereupon Cronin appointed Miller an Elector, and these two then appointed Parker, when all voted one vote for Tilden for President and Hendricks for Vice President, and two for Hayes and Wheeler for the same offices. The title of Odell and Cartwright is clear beyond question and undisputed, and as to the Electors there are five provisions of law relating to their evidence of title, and the speaker quoted the acts of Congress and the statutes of Oregon as already referred to, and added that Odell and Cartwright came with evidence of title which satisfied all these provisions. He then stated as his first proposition—and he declared that the whole controversy might be disposed of in favor of the Hayes Electors by a single proposition—that if the monstrous proposition could be maintained that Cronin was legally appointed, yet he "refused to act," "cannot be found" with Odell and Cartwright. His place became vacant, and Watts was duly appointed to fill it.

The Electoral College is charged with three duties: First, to fill all vacancies; second, to vote for President and Vice President, and third, to make a transmit to the President and to Senate distinct lists of all persons voted for as President and and Vice President, which lists they shall sign and certify." The Electoral College is a deliberative body; as much so as is Congress. The major part of the Electors present is a quorum. The acts of a quorum are valid to decide when a vacancy has arisen and to fill it. He then stated his second proposition, that Cronin was not elected, and on the whole record presents no sufficient evidence of title to the Electoral office. 1. His ambiguous evidence of title is disproved by evidence of equal dignity, free from ambiguity. If it should be conceded that the "Governor's certificate of election" unexplained could give a prima facie title to the office, yet it is not conclusive. It does not certify that Cronin, as the law requires, received "the highest number of votes," or that he 14 duly appointed, but only that he "received 14,157 votes, being the highest number for persons eligible." The averment of ineligibility is a stamp of suspicion which opens the certificate to examination. This is shown by a note to page 319 of Brightly's Leading Cases on Elections, where it is said that, "If, however, the certificate upon its face recites facts upon which the canvassers rely as their justification and authority for giving it, and these facts show that the holder of it was not duly elected, it may be disregarded." (Hartt against Harvey, 32 Barbour 61.) To this I add that if there be two certificates of election, as in this case, to two different persons for one and the same office, and one is sufficient in form and free from suspicion, it must take effect as against one which on its face carries doubt as to the fact it certifies. That is precisely the case before us. Cronin's certificate is contradicted by the certified abstract of votes. To summarize, then. The objections to the votes given by the Tilden Electors, all resting on Cronin's assumed evidence of title to the Electoral office, are these: (1.) Cronin refused to act with the other Electors and appointed, or neglected to attend, and if he was an Elector his office became vacant. (2.) The Governor's certificate of appointment is as to Cronin shown to be unauthorized and untrue by evidence of equal dignity and legal value, viz., the list of Electors certified to by the Secretary of State and also the abstract of the popular vote. (3.) While the Governor's certificate shows two of the Hayes Electors, Odell and Cartwright, duly appointed, and the certified abstract of votes proves the certificate as to them to be legal and authorized, it is shown from the same evidence that as to Cronin the Governor's certificate on its face gives no title to office, because it does not certify, as the law requires, that he "received the highest number of votes," but only that he received the highest number "for person eligible." (4.) Cronin fails to produce any certificate from the Secretary of State showing a list of the Electors duly appointed. In the Governor's certificate the Secretary of State certifies nothing; he merely, as a subscribing witness, attests the act of the Governor. There is escape from this conclusion unless two principles be resolved in the affirmative. The first is that the Governor had power to ascertain and declare the alleged ineligibility, and the second is that this would render the election of Watts void, and elect Cronin, a minority candidate. Neither of these positions can be maintained. My third proposition is this: That upon the law and evidence Watts was duly appointed as an Elector. His appointment by Odell and Cartwright is regular in form. It is attacked upon the ground that there was no vacancy to fill, that the ineligibility of Watts rendered his election void, that he was not an incumbent of the office, and that, therefore, there was no vacancy, but a case of non-election, and that the statute of Oregon does not provide for the filling of such a place by appointment, I maintain, first, that the Oregon statute does provide for a case of non-election, and second, that in law and in fact no such case has arisen, and that Watts was duly elected. The Oregon statute provides for filling a vacancy caused by non-election. The act of Congress in January, 1845, passed before Oregon was a State, declares that each State may provide for the filling of any vacancy which may occur in its College of Electors when such college meets to give its Electoral vote, and I contend that the word "may" is imperative. The Constitution had already given the power, and as Congress had fixed a day for the appointment of Electors, it was necessary to provide for a vacancy by a failure to elect on that day, and for a vacancy occurring thereafter. The law says, "If there shall be a vacancy by reason of death, refusal so act, or otherwise," &c. The word "otherwise" is the same as if the words "or in a different manner" had been used, and there is no doubt but that it covers the case of a non-election. I conclude, therefore, that Watts was elected, and became de facto and de jure an Elector; that his resignation created a vacancy, which was properly filled by his reappointment. Finally, this result which we claim—the election of the Hayes Electors—has been sanctioned and sanctified by law, and it is still further sanctified by the gratifying fact that it carries out the purpose of our Republican institutions by giving effect to the will of the people of Oregon.

Commissioner Edmunds moved that the further hearing be postponed until 7:30 o'clock, and then proceed in the Senate Chamber, and that counsel have three hours and a half time on each side for the whole case, including offers of proof and everything, which, after some talk, was agreed to, and the Commission thereupon adjourned until 7:30 P. M.

EVENING SESSION.

The Commission reassembled in the Senate Chamber at 7:30 P. M. Mr. Merrick announced that Judge Hoadley and himself would appear for the Democratic side. Mr. Evarts said that Judge Stanley Mathews and himself would appear for the Republican side.

ARGUMENT OF JUDGE HOADLEY.

Judge Hoadley then addressed the Commission as follows: Our first proposition is whether on the admitted facts of the case the questions are not already solved by the decisions of the Commission in the Florida and Louisiana cases. We contend that the principles controlling this case have been already announced in those cases. Only such documents and papers as, if offered aliunde, would be competent to be received may be considered when found within the envelopes sent to the President of the Senate, and the decision of the Returning Board acted upon by the Governor of the State is final and conclusive. My proposition is that the State of Oregon, through her State officers has spoken, and the result of that speech is here in the certificates given to Cronin, Odell, and Cartwright.

The laws of the United States have provided but a single method by which the State can communicate to the two Houses of Congress; and this tribunal, standing in their place, may in this way hear the voice of Oregon.

Commissioner Thurman inquired who, by the laws of Oregon, has the custody of the great seal of the State.

Judge Hoadley said he could not answer that question.

Mr. Matthews said it was the Secretary of State under the constitution.

Judge Hoadley said that was probably correct, but he would add that there was nothing in the laws of Oregon, which authorized any such certificate or exemplification as is presented by the supporters of certificate No. 1. He then returned the assertion that the list signed by the Governor or Secretary of States was final. The next proposition was that a commission or certificate of election has been delivered to an officer, and he accepts it and enters upon the duties of the office he becomes an officer de jure et de facto, except when his title shall be impeached by a quo warranto, certiorari, or a contest pursued under the statute for contesting his title. The facts are, that Cronin having called in Miller and Parker to act with him in consequence of the refusal of Watts to act with him, he proceeded in conformity with the statute. He then reviewed the action of the Republican Electors, and held that Cronin had not refused to act with them. Cronin's action could only have been questioned by quo warranto. Counsel then presented two propositions: One, that the papers inclosed with the Certificate No. 1 are of no value as evidence by being in that certificate, nor otherwise, unless they are shown to be duly authenticated in conformity with the laws of Oregon.

When the counsel brought up the familiar case of Claiborne and Gholson in the House of Representatives, the counsel on the Republican side stopped him to ask whether or not the decision of the House of Representatives in admitting Claiborne and Gholson at the extra session was not that there was a vacancy in the representation of Mississippi in the House of Representatives in consequence of the expiration of the term of the previous members of Congress, and the fact that the election for the election for the members of the next Congress did not occur until the following November, and did not the Governor of Mississippi cause that vacancy to be filled by a proclamation in which he called upon the Electors to fill that vacancy? And was not the resolution admitting them as members of Congress rescinded at the regular session because they were elected only to fill a vacancy? The counsel replied quickly, "I will answer that. The whole statement is correct, except the cause. It was rescinded. Now rescinding means withdrawing the original proposition. It was not, by virtue of a vote that the vacancy having expired, the time having expired, therefore they were no longer members, but Mr. Bell's amendment was that the original resolution should be rescinded.

Mr. Justice Miller asked how he construed the words "refused to act," to which he replied that he construed the words to refer all cases which occurred after there had been a complete election just as section 133 of the Revised Statutes provided.

The next question discussed was the point that by Oregon law, as shown by the certificate of the Governor, who was obliged to act, the weight of authority, if not the fact of caucus in the United States—the mandate to elect was of such paramount authority that people could not disobey it by voting for a disqualified candidate. In the very first place the first great commandment of the Gospel of American Liberty, the Constitution is, "Thou shalt elect," and the second, "Thou shalt not elect a disqualified candidate." The counsel then claimed that Cronin was elected, tested by any process applicable to the case, and closed with a parting allusion to "frauds" and "Returning Boards," and a repetition of the assertion that the Commission had no judicial powers.

At the conclusion of Mr. Hoadley's argument the Commission adjourned until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—A call has been issued for a meeting of the National Executive Committee of the Union League of America, in this city, on Saturday, March 3.

Hon. William A. Wheeler, accompanied by Secretary Chandler and other gentlemen, was at the War Department to-day and made a social call upon Gen. Sherman.

It is reported to-day that five companies of infantry and three of artillery will be added to the garrison at this place next week, though as yet the information is not shown in the daily issued special orders from the War Department.

The President has signed the act to encourage and promote telegraphic communication between America and Europe.

A shooting affray occurred in the neighborhood of the court-house here to-day, which created a great sensation owing to the well-known circumstances attending the characters of two notorious roughs who were the principals. Charles Goodman was in attendance as a witness against Lem Weeden, who recently assaulted and seriously wounded Goodman, and finding Weeden on the sidewalk adjoining the court-house, in conversation with his counsel, without a word of warning drew a horse-pistol, fired and shot Weeden in the thigh, slightly wounding him. He then, throwing away the pistol, drew a revolver to renew the attack, but before he could use it was seized by officers, disarmed and arrested. Weeden, who was then awaiting trial for assault and battery, with intent to kill Goodman, was called as a witness before the Grand Jury to give testimony to the similar assault upon himself. This is the third rencontre between these notorious parties, in all of which, though one or the other was thought to be fatally injured, both survive, and seem to be determined to let no opportunity pass in which they can reap vengeance on account of their mutual attempts at assassination.

Hon. E. Barksdale, one of the Tilden Electors at Large, and a member of the National Democratic Committee, testified before the special Senate committee investigating the Mississippi elections as follows: Entire good feeling has been established under Democratic rule; he participated in the canvasses of 1875 and 1876, and has knowledge of how they were conducted; the Democrats promised the colored people protection in their rights, and to make impartial laws; the promise was kept by the Democratic Legislature as declared by the colored Republican members at the close of the last two sessions. Mr. Barksdale also testified that he is acquainted with G. J. T. Lester, of Hinds County, and he was consulted by Lester several times during the late campaign, but he never heard of duplicate keys for ballot-boxes until he read the statement made by Lester before this committee, and members of the Hinds County Democratic Committee deny the existence of such keys, and have expressed a desire to testify to that effect.

The Senate Sub-committee on Louisiana, Senator Howe presiding, met to-day at 11 o'clock. Mr. Honore, Secretary of State of Louisiana, was present with a large packing-case or carpet-bag containing the returns of the 22 challenged parishes of Louisiana, together with the papers and affidavits attached thereto. The committee-room was cleared of all spectators except the reporters and two couns

RESULT OF THE SENATE INQUIRY.

THE QUESTION OF THE ELIGIBILITY OF ELECTOR WATTS FULLY REVIEWED—THE RETURNS CERTIFIED TO ACCORDING TO LAW—GOV. GROVER'S ILLEGAL INTERFERENCE—HOW AND WHERE THE CONSPIRACY ORIGINATED—FINDINGS OF THE COMMITTEE—SENATOR KELLY'S EXPLANATION.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—The report of the Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections relative to the Oregon Electoral controversy was presented to the Senate to-day by Senator Mitchell. It is a voluminous document, and sets forth the main points of the testimony taken at considerable length. The committee summarize their conclusions of fact and law as follows:

First—That John W. Watts was, at the date of the election, (Nov. 7, 1876,) a Postmaster at Lafeyette, Yamhill County, Oregon, of the fourth class, the appointment of which is not Presidential, but exclusively in the power of the Postmaster General; that such office is one of trust and profit under the United States.

Second—That the whole number of voters receiving and forwarding their mail through this Post Office did not exceed 100.

Third—That the fact that he was a Postmaster was not generally known in the State, or in any part of it outside of his own precinct, until several days after his election; nor does it appear affirmatively that any voter, who voted for Watts knew that the fact of his being Postmaster disqualified him from being appointed an Elector.

Fourth—That the [illegible] majority in the State over Cronin was 1,049 votes.

Fifth—That Watts resigned his office as Postmaster on the 13th of November, 1876, and his successor was appointed on the 23d of the same month. Watts' resignation was accepted by the Postmaster General on the 14th of November, 1876, and on the same day J. B. Underwood, Special Agent of the Post Office Department, took possession of the office, under special directions from the Postmaster General, at which Watts ceased to discharge the duties of Postmaster.

Sixth—That on the 4th of December, 1876, the Secretary of State, who, under the laws of Oregon, is the Canvassing Officer, canvassed the votes for Presidential Electors in the presence of the Governor, as provided by law, and officially declared that Odell, Cartwright, and Watts, the Republican candidates, had received the highest number of votes.

Seventh—That Gov. Grover issued his certificates to Odell, Cartwright, and Cronin, instead of to Odell, Cartwright, and Watts, the persons whom the Secretary of State declared officially had received the highest number of votes.

Eighth—That the Governor placed such certificates in the hands of the Secretary of State in triplicate—each copy containing the three names, Odell, Cartwright, and Cronin, a short time before the meeting of the Electoral College, and on the same day, and he, the Secretary of State, delivered all three thereof to said Cronin, who refused, although repeatedly requested to do so by both Odell and Cartwright, to deliver such certificates, or any of them, to Odell and Cartwright or either of them, or exhibit them for inspection or otherwise.

Ninth—That upon failure and peremptory refusal upon the part of Cronin to either deliver or exhibit such certificates, or any of them, to either Odell or Cartwright, before or after the organization of the College, or to the Electoral College, after the same had organized—although repeatedly requested to do so by the individual members of the college, both before and after the same had organized, and also by the President of the college—in pursuance of a vote of the college, said Watts tendered his resignation as an Elector, which resignation was accepted by the college, been constituted by Odell, and Cartwright, thereupon, and upon the withdrawal of Cronin to another portion of the room to declare vacancies and organize a college of his own, the Electors present, Odell and Cartwright, filled the vacancy in the office of Elector, by a viva voce and plurality by ballot, by appointing John W. Watts such Elector; that the college thus organized voted by ballot for President and Vice President of the United States, resulting in three votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, for President, and three votes for William A. Wheeler, of New-York, for Vice President.

Tenth—That Cronin, after the refusal to deliver or exhibit the certificates of the Governor, and before Odell and Cartwright had appointed Watts to fill the vacancy in the office of Elector, withdrew to the further corner of the room occupied by the Electors, and declared, or attempted to declare, two vacancies in the office of Elector, and immediately filled them, or attempted to fill them by the appointment of J. N. T. Miller and John Parker, two Democrats, neither of whom had received any votes whatever for Elector at the election on the 7th of November; after which these three—Cronin, Miller, and Parker—claiming to be an Electoral College, cast two votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, for President, and two votes for William A. Wheeler, of New-York, for Vice President, and one vote for Samuel J. Tilden, of New-York, for President, and one vote for Thomas A. Hendricks, of Indiana, for Vice President, said Cronin voting for Tilden and Hendricks, and Miller and Parker respectively for Hayes and Wheeler.

Eleventh—That a conspiracy was entered into among leading Democratic managers in New-York, California, and Oregon, for the purpose of depriving the majority of the people of the State of Oregon of their choice for President and Vice President and securing one Electoral vote for the Democratic candidates for President by the refusal on the part of Gov. Grover to issue a certificate to Watts, and by issuing it to Cronin, regardless of law or the right of the case, which conspiracy was, so far as in their power, executed by the refusal of the Governor to issue to Watts a certificate, and by his issuing it to Cronin.

Twelfth—That in pursuance of this conspiracy large sums of money were sent to Oregon by the Democratic managers in New-York and at the request of the Democratic managers in Oregon, which money was used improperly and corruptly in furthering such conspiracy, the sum of $3,000, in gold coin, of such moneys having been paid to and received by said Cronin; $3,000 more of such money having been paid to John C. Dunbar, Thomson, of Portland, Oregon, ostensibly for their services as lawyers, but, in fact, to subsidize the Daily and Weekly Oregonian—the leading newspaper of the State, claiming to be Republican, and of which Mr. Lair Hill, one of said law firm, is the editor—in defense of the action sought to be accomplished through such conspiracy. That this conspiracy to defraud the people of a State and nation out of their choice for President and Vice President, marked as it was at every step by intrigue, corruption, and fraud, setting aside law and precedent, ignoring the exception and even question the grandest idea upon which our Government rests—the will of the majority as expressed at the ballot-box—had its origin in the family of Samuel J. Tilden, the Democratic candidate for President, and with a member of that family, W. T. Pelton, who was also at one time Secretary of the National Democratic Committee; and if Samuel J. Tilden was not himself a party to and had no knowledge of the scheme, then it must be said he was ignorant of what was transpiring in his own household in reference to a transaction which was intended to establish his title to the chief magistracy of the nation, as most, if not all, of the dispatches addressed to and sent by W. T. Pelton in reference to this matter passed in and out of the door of Mr. Tilden's residence, No. 15 Gramercy park, New-York City, to and from his own nephew, member of his own family, sleeping under his roof, and dining at his table. Besides, it must also be said, if he was not a party, that he was ignorant of a dispatch sent to him from Portland, Oregon, on Dec. 1, purporting to come from Gov. Grover, but which was in the handwriting of J. H. N. Patrick, in the same cipher used by Patrick, Pelton, and others, informing him [Tilden,] six days in advance that the action of Gov. Grover would be just what it proved to be when the six days had elapsed. As conclusions of law the committee find:

First—Conceding Watts to have been ineligible to be appointed an Elector, it is clear this fact could not under any possible state of circumstances, much less under the circumstances of this case, operate to elect Cronin, a minority candidate.

Second—That Gov. Grover, in assuming to determine this question of the ineligibility of Watts, acted without his jurisdiction, and his action was ultra vires and void.

Third—That the certificate of the Governor is no part of the appointment of an Elector; that it is simply evidence of an appointment, but not a conclusive one, and may be inquired into by the counting tribunal and disregarded in part or set aside, either in whole or in part, for mistake or fraud.

Fourth—That the College represented by Odell and Cartwright was the only and true Electoral College in Oregon, and the votes cast by it for President and Vice President should be counted.

Fifth—That the action of the Secretary of State in canvassing the vote of the Electors and declaring who had received the highest number of votes is in this case, under the laws of Oregon, conclusive as to the persons appointed Electors, and cannot be questioned either by the Governor in issuing a certificate or by any tribunal.

Sixth—That the record made to the President of the Senate through the certificate of the College of Electors represented by Odell, Cartwright, and Watts, the persons declared by the Secretary of State to have received the highest number of votes, is conclusive upon the point as to whether there was any vacancy in the college, and as to how and by whom and when such vacancy was filled, and cannot now be questioned by the President of the Senate, either House of Congress, or the Electoral Tribunal.

Seventh—That, admitting Watts to have been ineligible to appointment as an Elector, having received the highest number of votes, and having taken his seat in the Electoral College, participating in its proceedings, and having voted for Presidents and Vice President, the question of his ineligibility never having been raised or passed upon by any competent tribunal prior to that time, his act was that of an officer de facto, acting under color of title and being clothed with all the insignia of office is therefore binding and effectual as to third persons and the public, binding upon the people whose votes he received at the polls, binding upon the Electors present whose votes he received in his appointment to fill a vacancy, binding and effective to the candidates for President and Vice President, for whom he cast his vote as an Elector, binding upon the State and the nation, the Legislature and Congress, and cannot now be questioned by any power on earth.

Eighth—That the resignation of Watts as an Elector created a vacancy in the office of Elector, which could be legally filled, under the statutes of Oregon, by the Electors present and it was their duty, under the statute, to fill such vacancy, and it was so legally filled by them.

Ninth—That, conceding Cronin to have been an Elector, (which we deny,) his refusal to exhibit or deliver to the College of Electors his certificate from the Governor, or to deliver or exhibit to Odell or Cartwright their certificates, wrongfully retained in his possession, and his withdrawing and organizing a college of his own, was upon his part such a "refusal to act" within the meaning of the statute of Oregon, as to occasion a vacancy in the office, which Odell and Cartwright could, under the statutes of Oregon, legally fill, and which it was their duty to fill; and it is immaterial to inquire in so far as the effect of the action of Odell and Cartwright is concerned, whether the vacancy filled by them by the appointment of Watts, was occasioned in fact and in law by Watts' resignation or by Cronin's refusal to act. In either view of the case there was a vacancy, and it was the duty of Odell and Cartwright to fill it, and the fact that Cronin attempted to organize a college of his own in conclusive against him on this point; that the Electors present, Odell and Cartwright, in determining as to whether a vacancy existed in the office of Electors, and in filling such vacancy, were under no obligation in law to inquire as to whom the Governor had issued his certificate as the third Elector, whether to Watts or Cronin. It was enough for them to know that there was a vacancy occasioned either by Cronin's refusing to act or Watts' resignation, it is immaterial which, and there being such a vacancy, in any possible view of the case, whether Cronin or Watts was the one legally appointed, the Electors present had the right and it was their duty to appoint such person as they saw fit to fill it, and the record of their action in that regard is conclusive, and cannot be inquired into.

The following was also presented relative to Senator Kelly, of this committee: "In justice to Senator Kelly, the committee, with his concurrence, present herewith his statement, made in open Senate the 17th of February, 1877, in explanation of his connection with certain telegraphic dispatches; and, while the committee cannot approve the action of Senator Kelly in the part which he admits he knowingly took in reference to this controversy, they, in view of his high character, accept his statement as true when he denies that he knew the real character of the dispatch of Nov. 28, 1876, from Patrick to Pelton, which he indorsed." Following the above was the statement of Senator Kelly, which has been published heretofore. This report is concurred in by the following members of the committee: Messrs. Mitchell, Logan, Sargent, Wadleigh, Cameron, of Wisconsin; McMillan, Howe, Oglesby, Christiancy, and Teller, being all the Republican members except Senator Morton, who has taken no part in the actions of this committee since he was appointed a member of the Electoral Commission.

THE BOARD OF ALDERMEN.

LIMITING THE POWERS OF THE COMMISSIONER OF PUBLIC WORKS—PROVIDING FOR COMFORT IN PUBLIC VEHICLES—REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS OF ACCOUNTS.

In the Board of Aldermen yesterday Mr. Morris offered a resolution, which was adopted, requesting the Legislature to repeal all laws or parts of laws conferring on the Commissioner of Public Works the power to order the construction of sewers without any action on the part of the Common Council, and to amend the present laws so as to permit such work to be done only on the petition of the owners of one-half of the property on the line of such improvements. Under a decision of the Court of Appeals in the case of Martin Zbrouski against the City, Commissioner Campbell can order sewers to be built without having Municipal ordinances enacted authorizing the work. Mr. Morris then submitted the following letter:

DEAR SIR: I cannot see you about a proposal now before your board, (and, I believe, in your hands,) to pave Eighty-sixth street, from Eighth avenue to River drive, with Belgian pavements. I have the misfortune to own two sides of the street from Eighth avenue to 212 feet of Tenth avenue, and am entirely opposed to the paving. It is unnecessary, and I could not pay for it if it were necessary. I have now two assessments for grading the street, amounting to $52,000, to pay, both of them undertaken about the same time, and both lately confirmed. The whole of my land would not sell for enough to pay them, and I have besides $250,000 now to pay on the same and adjoining land for work, the whole of which I could and would, if permitted, have done, and done well—which is not the case now for $30,000.

I pray you not to permit this iniquity, and I will see you and give you such information about it as will clearly convince you. Yours respectfully,

MARTIN ZBROUSKI.

To J. J. MORRIS.

Resolutions were adopted requesting the Department of Parks to state why the lamps around the Franklin statue in Printing-house square are not lighted at night, and also requesting the same department to have the lamps around the Lincoln monument in Union square lighted.

Alderman Morris, at the request of Mr. Henry Bergh, who was present, submitted an ordinance designed "to protect the health, comfort, and property of persons traveling in the public vehicles" in this City. This ordinance provided that henceforth it "shall not be lawful to allow within or upon any railroad car, omnibus, or other vehicle used for carrying passengers, elsewhere than upon the front platform and top of same, any bundle, basket of soiled or other materials, beds, bed-clothes, parcels of merchandise, baggage, paints, oils, groceries, marketing, or any other substance whatever. Exception to the foregoing is allowed for clean, inodorous parcels not exceeding one square foot in volume, to be borne in all cases upon the lap of the person having the same in charge." The ordinance then provides that any conductor or driver who allows it to be violated shall be subjected to a fine of not less than $5 or one day's imprisonment for each dollar. The ordinance was referred to the Committee on Railroads.

A resolution was adopted, at the request of Mayor Ely and Postmaster James, providing for the renumbering of Broadway north of Twenty-third street, and Fifth avenue north of Fifty-seventh street. This course is deemed necessary in order to facilitate the delivery of letters.

The Commissioners of Accounts sent in a report of the operations of the Finance Department for the year 1876, a duty incumbent upon them by the charter. The report states that as the appropriations for the various purposes of the Government of the City are made each year, and as the officers of the Government are prohibited from incurring any expenses for any purpose beyond the amount appropriated therefor, the law ought imperatively to require that on the books of the Finance Department each appropriation account should at a fixed date (say June 30) be closed each year, and after setting an amount to pay claims upon the appropriations which may have been filed, the balance should lapse into the Treasury. After referring to the receipts and expenditures of the Treasury for the year, which have been published in annual reports, the report directs special attention to a payment of $4,600 from the Treasury on Jan. 27, 1876, to the counsel for the plaintiff in the action of quo warranto commenced in the relation of John A. Stemler against Joseph McGuire, to determine the title to the office of Judge of the Seventh District Court. The report then raises the question that the City should not be called upon to pay the counsel of successful litigants in such present case, and recommends that section 113 of the charter, under which the amount was paid, be repealed. Reference is next made to the sinking fund, which has a surplus of $9,281,545 05 of accumulations against which no claim exists, except the $2,748,000 of the floating debt, which will be brought into a regular anomaly will be continued of raising by tax each year an amount sufficient to pay the bonded debt as it falls due, while there is accumulating in the hands of the Sinking Fund Commissioners an amount every year sufficient to meet this debt, but which cannot be applied to the purposes, nor to any other purpose, so long as the present laws remain in force. These laws, continues the report, should be amended at once, making all the present bonded debt of the City payable from taxation a charge upon the sinking fund, after applying sufficient from that fund to pay all the bonds and stocks at present a charge thereon; and by continuing the payment to the fund of the present revenues, the accumulations will be sufficient to meet all the bonded debt and stocks payable from taxation, and thus relieve the annual tax levy of this special burden. The report next alludes to the assessment bonds outstanding amounting to $22,371,400. Of this sum there is at least $7,000,000 "which is represented by no assessment, and for which no assessment can be imposed." To classify, therefore, and continue this $7,000,000 of assessment bonds as a portion of the City's "temporary debt" secured by assessments to be recovered is not a correct statement of the facts. For this $7,000,000 the City must provide otherwise, and the present is a favorable opportunity, owing to the low rate of interest, for converting these temporary assessment bonds into long bonds, to be provided for by taxation, or from the accumulations of the sinking fund. The power to issue these long bonds should be at once conferred upon the proper officials.

The report then says that in the Finance Department there are on file four contracts entered into by the present Commissioners of the new Courthouse for work on the building, the total amount of the contracts being $381,478, but that the Board of Apportionment appropriated only $100,000 for the work. The charter expressly provides that no officer shall incur any expense in excess of the sum appropriated. The Commissioners of the Courthouse, however, have contracted for expenses exceeding $280,000 in excess of the appropriation made, and are proceeding with the work on the building. The report was ordered to be printed. The board then adjourned.

THE CAUSES OF RYAN'S DEATH.

Coroner Osborne, of Newark, yesterday continued the inquest into the circumstances surrounding the death of Thomas Ryan, one of the Newark murderers. The inquest was not concluded because of the fact that the chemical analysis of the stomach, now in progress in Princeton, had not been finished. Four witnesses were sworn. The testimony of the physicians shows that they proceeded in their treatment on a mistaken diagnosis of the case. The rest of the testimony threw no light upon the cause of death.

EXTRADITION WITH SPAIN.

LITTLE CHANCE FOR FUGITIVES.

RATIFICATION OF THE CONVENTION—THE AGREEMENT BETWEEN THE TWO COUNTRIES—THE CRIMES FOR WHICH FUGITIVES SHALL BE SURRENDERED—PRISONERS NOT TO BE TRIED FOR POLITICAL OFFENSES.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—The ratification of the extradition convention between the United States and Spain having been exchanged, the President has made proclamation of the same. It is agreed that the Government of the United States and the Government of Spain shall, upon mutual requisition duly made, deliver up to justice all persons who may be charged with or who have been convicted of any of the crimes specified in the convention, committed within the jurisdiction of one of the contracting parties while said persons were actually within such jurisdiction when the crime was committed, and who shall seek an asylum or shall be found within the territories of the other, provided that such surrender shall take place only upon evidence of criminality, as, according to the laws of the place where the fugitive or person so charged shall be found, would justify his apprehension and commitment for trial if the crime or offense had been there committed.

ARTICLE II.—Persons shall be delivered up, according to the provisions of this convention, who shall have been charged with or convicted of any of the following crimes:

1. Murder, comprehending the crimes designated by the terms of parricide, assassination, poisoning, or infanticide.
2. The attempt to commit murder.
3. Rape.
4. Arson.
5. Piracy or meeting on board ship when the crew or other persons on board, or part thereof, have by fraud or violence against the commander taken possession of the vessel.
6. Burglary, defined to be the act of breaking and entering into the house of another in the night time with intent to commit a felony therein.
7. The act of breaking and entering the offices of the Government and public authorities, or the offices of banks, banking houses, savings banks, trust companies or insurance companies, with intent to commit a felony therein.
8. Robbery defined, to be felonious and forcible taking from the person of another goods or money by violence or putting him in fear.
9. Forgery or the utterance of forged papers.
10. The forgery or falsification of the official acts of the Government or public authority, including courts of justice, or the uttering or fraudulent use of any of the same.
11. The fabrication of counterfeit money, whether coin or paper, counterfeit titles or coupons of public debt, bank notes, or other instruments of public credit; of counterfeit seals, stamps, dies, and marks of State or public administrator, and the utterance, circulation, or fraudulent use of any of the above-mentioned objects.
12. The embezzlement of public funds, committed within the jurisdiction of one or the other party by public officers or depositaries.
13. Embezzlement by any person or persons hired or salaried, to the detriment of their employers, when these crimes are subject to infamous punishment.
14. Kidnapping defined to be the detention of a person or persons, in order to exact money from them, or for any other unlawful end.

ART. III. The provisions of this convention shall not import a claim of extradition for any crime or offense of a political character, nor for acts connected with such crimes or offenses, and no person surrendered by or to either of the contracting parties, in virtue of this convention, shall be tried or punished for any political cause or offense, nor for any act connected therewith, committed previously to the extradition.

ART. IV. No person shall be subject to extradition in virtue of this convention for any crime or offense committed previous to the exchange of the ratifications hereof; and no person shall be tried for any crime or offense other than that for which he was surrendered, unless such crime be one of those enumerated in article second, and shall have been committed subsequent to the exchange of the ratifications hereof.

ART. V.—A fugitive criminal shall not be surrendered under the provisions hereof, when, from lapse of time or other lawful cause, according to the laws of the place within the jurisdiction of which the crime was committed, the criminal is exempt from prosecution or punishment for the offense for which the surrender is asked.

ART. VI.—A fugitive criminal whose surrender may be claimed pursuant to the stipulations hereof, who may be actually under prosecution, out on bail, or in custody for a crime or offense committed in the country where he has sought asylum or shall have been convicted thereof, his extradition may be deferred until such proceedings be determined, and until such criminal has been set at liberty in due course of law.

ART. VII.—If a fugitive claimed by one of the parties hereto shall be also claimed by one or more powers pursuant to treaty provisions on account of crimes committed within their jurisdiction, such criminal shall be delivered in preference in accordance with that demand, which is first presented in date.

ART. VIII. Neither of the contracting parties shall be bound to deliver up its own citizens or subjects under the stipulations of this convention.

ART. IX. The expenses of the arrest, detention, examination, and transportation of the accused shall be paid by the Government which has preferred the demand for extradition.

ART. X. Everything found in the possession of the fugitive criminal at the time of his arrest which may be material as evidence in making proof of the crime shall, so far as practicable, be delivered up with his person at the time of his surrender. Nevertheless, the rights of third party with regard to the articles aforesaid shall be duly respected.

ART. IX. The stipulations of this convention shall be applicable to all foreign or colonial possessions of either of the two contracting parties. Requisitions for the surrender of fugitives from justice shall be made by the respective diplomatic agents of the contracting parties. In the event of the absence of such agents from the country or seat of Government, or where extradition is sought from a colonial possession of the contracting parties, requisition may be made by superior consular officers. It shall also be competent for such representatives or such superior consular officers to ask and obtain a mandate or preliminary warrant of arrest for the person whose surrender is sought; whereupon the Judges and magistrates of the two Governments shall respectively have power and authority upon complaint, made under oath, to issue a warrant for the apprehension of the person charged, in order that he or she may be brought before such Judge or magistrate, that the evidence of criminality may be heard and considered; and if on such hearing the evidence be deemed sufficient to sustain the charge, it shall be the duty of the examining Judge or magistrate to certify the same to the proper executive authority, that a warrant may issue for the surrender of the fugitive. If the fugitive criminal shall have been convicted of the crime for which his surrender is asked, a copy of the sentence of the court before which such conviction took place, duly authenticated, shall be produced. If, however, the fugitive is merely charged with crime, a duly authenticated copy of the warrant of arrest in the country where the crime was committed, and of the depositions upon which such warrant may have been issued, shall be produced with such other evidence or proof as may be deemed competent in the case.

ART. XII. This convention shall continue in force from the day of the exchange of the ratification, (namely, Feb. 21,) thereof, but either party may at any time terminate the same on giving to the other six months notice of its intention so to do.

In testimony whereof the respective Plenipotentiaries have signed the same and have sealed it in triplicate, and have hereunto affixed their seals.

Done at the City of Madrid, in triplicate, English and Spanish, this 5th day of January, in the year of our Lord 1877.

TAXATION IN NEW-YORK CITY.

Controller Kelly yesterday transmitted to the State Assembly, in response to a resolution adopted by that body on Jan. 22, a statement showing the valuations of property in this City on which taxes were levied for the past five years, and the rate of taxation in each year, together with other information on City affairs. The following is a recapitulation of a portion of the statement:

Yr.	Valuations of Real and Personal Estates.	Rate of Tax on $100	Total Amount of Taxes.	Total Amount of Appropriations.

*Estimated.

The Controller also refers to the bonded indebtedness of this City, and gives a detailed list of the different classes of stocks and bonds, with the rate of interest on each issue up to Dec. 31, 1876. This information, however, has already been published.

BUSINESS TROUBLES.

Meetings of creditors were held before Register Fitch yesterday. The creditors of Kingsbury, Abbott & Hulett, hat jobbers, at No. 554 Broadway, proved claims amounting to $50,000 and elected Charles H. Lowerre Assignee in Bankruptcy. The creditors of S. & B. Lissner, ribbons, at No. 446 Broome street, accepted a composition of 30 cents on the dollar.

Sanford, Truslow & Co., proprietors of the National Stove Works, at Nos. 239 and 241 Water street, and at Peekskill, N. Y., have temporarily suspended, with liabilities of $100,000. Mr. Sanford said yesterday that the embarrassment was due to real estate transactions, and the creditors had granted an extension by, which he expected to pay in full. The creditors have taken the real estate in their charge.

S. Jacoby & Co., manufacturers of cigars, at No. 200 Chatham street, have failed, with liabilities of $50,000. The business has been transferred to Mr. Max Abenheim, as Assignee, who will conduct it for the benefit of the creditors. The nominal assets are much greater than the liabilities, and it is expected that an extension will be granted, as the heavy claims are held by a few creditors who are willing to accede to such a course.

THE BOARD OF EDUCATION.

A REQUEST BY SENATOR GERARD FOR A SANITARY SUPERINTENDENT—A PRINCIPAL FOR THE TRAINING DEPARTMENT, NORMAL COLLEGE — THE REDUCTION OF TEACHERS' SALARIES.

A regular meeting of the Board of Education was held yesterday afternoon, in the board rooms, in Grand street. The Superintendent of Truancy reported 936 cases investigated in January, by the agents, of which 584 were not classed as truants, leaving 359 truants and non-attendants, 848 of whom were returned and placed in school and four were sent to the New-York Catholic Protectory. A letter from Senator Gerard was read in answer to resolutions recently forwarded to him by the Board of Education protesting against the passage of a bill looking to the appointment of an Assistant Superintendent for sanitary purposes. Senator Gerard replied that his object was to act intelligently, and that he desired to hear the objections to, as well as the reasons for, proposed measures. He would, he says, have been better satisfied with the reasons of the board than with a simple protest. "There is," he concludes, "a general public demand for such an official as he proposes to have for the protection of life and health, quite as important as education. As many of the schools now are they are breeders of pestilence. The action of the District Inspectors on health matters never amounts to anything—they have no power, and their annual reports receive no consideration."

The Normal College Committee offered a report and resolutions relative to the position of Principal of the Training Department, which was recently made vacant by the death of Miss Doake. They recommended that Miss Isabella Parsels, a tutor in the Training Department, be appointed to the position made vacant by the death of Miss Doake, at a salary of $1,800, and that the vacancy made by Miss Parsels' promotion shall not be filled. The recommendation was adopted, by a vote of 13 to 1, Commissioner Halstead alone voting in the negative. The report of the Finance Committee on the division of the $610,250 appropriated by the Board of Estimate and Apportionment was received and adopted. On a motion to consider a proposition to suspend the by-laws, President Wood took the floor, Commissioner Halstead in the chair, and made a long, warm, and positive speech against the reduction of teachers' salaries. He considered them not overpaid, and a class not to be compared with speculators who had flourished in easier times and who now feel naturally the pressure of hard times. He would insist that the board should keep on paying the present salaries month by month until it is impossible to pay them longer, and then he would go to the Board of Estimate and Apportionment and say: You must give us more money or close the schools and dismiss the pupils and teachers.

Commissioner Watson replied to the remarks of President Wood—which were received with warm applause—entirely disagreeing with the position of the President of the Board, whose remarks he considered premature and uncalled for. He also considered the proposition to pay the teachers until the appropriation was exhausted and then to close the schools, as revolutionary and mischievous. He favored the reduction of salaries, and thought they should be reduced before the 18th of March.

Commissioner Hasseltine, of the Sub-committee on Salaries, said that the question had been considered, and that they would be ready to report on Saturday afternoon. It might then be considered wise to call a mee ing of the full committee to consider the report of the sub-committee on Monday, and that as soon as possible thereafter the full board should be called to act upon the report.

President Wood said, while not objecting to Commissioner Watson's criticism of his remarks, he would criticise the acts of either the Board of Aldermen or the Board of Estimate and Apportionment whenever he found that they were opposed to the true interests of the City. As for the suspicion that he courted the applause of teachers, those who knew him best would know better than to impute any such motive to him. He feared there was something under the delay of the report, and he did not wish to be compelled to do something in a hurry that ought to be done carefully. After considerable further discussion, a resolution was adopted, as follows:

Resolved, That the by-laws of this board be and they are hereby suspended so as to permit any amendment, suspension, or repeal thereof, or any part thereof, at any meeting or meetings of the board held in pursuance of an adjournment of this meeting.

The meeting was adjourned to meet on Monday afternoon at 4 o'clock.

SHOOTING AFFRAY AT A NEGRO BALL.

On Tuesday night a ball occurred in the hall at the corner of Thompson and West Fourth streets, which was attended exclusively by colored people. During the festivities a quarrel occurred between Charles Williams, a driver, living in Fordham, and James Jackson, of No. 148 Thompson street, but the disputants were separated before any blows had been exchanged, and Williams left the ball-room. The ball broke up at 3 o'clock yesterday morning, and when Jackson, accompanied by William A. Johnson, who also lives at No. 148 Thompson street, was coming down stairs, followed by Jackson's two sisters, he found Williams standing on the sidewalk at the foot of the stairs. As Jackson appeared, Williams drew from his pocket a five-chambered revolver and fired four shots in quick succession at him. Jackson escaped uninjured, but one of the shots took effect in the leg of Johnson, who, on being struck, fell, receiving a serious wound. The ball entered just below the knee-pan, and striking the bone, was deflected from its course, and passing downward, lodged in the muscles near the ankle. The noise of the firing attracted the attention of Patrolman Gilgar, of the Fifteenth Precinct, who hastened to the scene, and took into custody Williams, Jackson, and Johnson. Gibbon was attended by Police Surgeon Dorn, and subsequently taken to Bellevue Hospital. The prisoners were arraigned before Justice Otterbourg, at the Washington Place Police Court, yesterday. A complaint of felonious assault was made by Johnson against Williams, and he was committed to the Tombs in default of $2,000 bail. Jackson is the negro who killed his white mistress, Mary Jane Sullivan, at their home, No. 574½ Thompson street, on May 20, 1873, and then attempted to commit suicide by cutting his throat with a razor.

GOING TO THE BLACK HILLS.

The New-Haven Palladium of Wednesday says: "Last night a party of from 20 to 25 men left this city for the mining regions in the Black Hills. Many of them took this course because they despaired of gaining a fortune or even a competence here, while some left good jobs. Some have been there before and will guide the rest. In the number were John Schradey, sugar-maker; Charles Hewitt, blacksmith; Patrick Doherty, mason; Thomas S. Smith, gun-maker; S. H. Boughton, tool-maker; F. B. Munson, mason; A. M. Sands, machinist; R. M. Wallace, explorer and miner; Charles H. Hilton, machinist; D. Cook Lyon, joiner; Charles Kraigh, blacksmith; Z. Garvin, carriage trimmer; James Garriety, blacksmith; Charles Miller, molder; Charles Christy, tool-maker, a miner named Shannon, and a broker named Seeley. They went by boat to New-York, and expect to reach Yankton next Sunday. Thence they will go overland to Deadwood City. In Yankton they will get tools, cooking utensils, and tents. The most of them started from here with an equipment of two woolen blankets, one rubber blanket, two pairs heavy leather miners' boots, one pair long toe hip rubber boots, one Winchester rifle with ammunition, one Smith & Wesson revolver, and a navy revolver. Three leave the fire department."

WHEN HE WAS A BOY.

In an article on "The Historic Buildings of America," in Potter's American Monthly for June, Dr. Lossing tells a delightful anecdote, introducing us to the early boyhood of Washington and his friend, Richard Henry Lee. The anecdote is told in connection with an account of Stratford House, the family seat of the Lee family, and is as follows:

"It [Stratford House] is only a mile from the birthplace of Washington, and stood in the midst of a highly cultivated country, dotted with the mansions of people who formed a very refined society. There Washington and Richard Henry Lee undoubtedly often played together, and wishing that rule between the dwellings was the scene of the following correspondence when they were boys only nine years old, there being only a few weeks' difference between their ages. Little Lee wrote:

Pa brought me two pretty books full of pictures he got them in Alexandria they have pictures of dogs and cats and tigers and every thing you ever so many pretty things and pa says he will send you one of them it has a picture of an elefant and a little indian boy on his back like uncle joe's sam pa says if I learn my tasks good he will let uncle Jo bring me to see you will you ask your ma to let you come to see me.

RICHARD HENRY LEE.

To this note little Washington replied:

DEAR DICKY I thank you very much for the pretty picture book you gave me. Sam asked me to show him the pictures and I showed him all the pictures in it; and I read to him how the tame elephant took care of the master's little boy, and put him on his back and would not let anybody touch his master's son. I can read three or four pages sometimes without missing a word. Ma says I may go to see you and stay all day with you if it be not rainy. She says I may ride my pony Hero if Uncle Ben will go with me and lead Hero. I have a little piece of poetry about the picture book you gave me but I mustn't tell you who wrote the poetry:

G. W.'s commissions to R. H. L.
And likes his book full well,
Henceforth will count his friend,
And hopes many happy days he may spend.

Your good friend,
GEORGE WASHINGTON.

The "poetry" was written, it is said, by Mr. Howard, a gentleman who used to visit at the house of Mrs. Washington."

KEEPERS OF TRUST FUNDS.

THEIR SEMI-ANNUAL SHOWING.

ALBANY, Wednesday, Feb. 21, 1877.

The following semi-annual reports of trust companies of the counties of New-York and Kings have been made to the Superintendent of the Banking Department in compliance with chapter 394, Laws of 1874. There are but 10 of these institutions in the State, nine of them being located in New-York and Brooklyn, the remaining one being at Syracuse. The capital invested in the trust companies of this State aggregates nearly $10,000,000. For the purposes of comparison the aggregate amounts reported by the nine companies on July 1, 1876, and Jan. 1, 1877, are given, from which tables it will be seen that there has been a decided falling off in the business of these institutions during the past six months.

of Mr. Boey, so as to provide that the ships shall be built under the direction and inspection of some naval officer to be designated by the Secretary of the Navy, and said ships shall at all times be subject to the use of the Government at reasonable rates for charter. Agreed to.

The amendment of Mr. Boey as amended by that of Mr. Hamlin just mentioned, was then agreed to.

Mr. INGALLS, of Kansas, submitted as a substitute for the amendment of Mr. Hamlin, agreed to in Committee of the Whole, the following:

"And the sum of $500,000, or so much the reof as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated to carry the mails in Central Pacific States, China and Japan, upon the best attainable terms for monthly service; and the Postmaster General be and is hereby authorized to contract for such service, said mails to be carried in American built and owned vessels of not less than 2,000 tons burden."

Agreed to—yeas 27, nays 18—as follows:

The bill was then read a third time and passed.

THE LEGISLATIVE APPROPRIATIONS.

Mr. WINDOM, of Minnesota, called up the Legislative, Judicial, and Executive Appropriation bill, and the explanation thereof, accompanying the bill as it came from the House of Representatives, appropriated $14,979,345 50, and as amended by the Committee on Appropriations and reported to the Senate, it appropriated $16,737,895 95, an increase of $1,758,550 45. The Legislative bill for the current year appropriated $15,717,833 30. The Committee on Appropriations had adopted a general rule in considering the bill, which was to reinstate all salaries reduced by the House to what they are at present. The committee had taken the compromise measure of last session fixing salaries for the current fiscal year as their guide, and had not in a single instance increased the salaries that were determined by the compromise of last session. In a few instances the number of employes in the Executive Departments had been increased—as, for instance, in the Sixth Auditor's office, where the accounts of the Post Office Department were settled, there was not sufficient clerical force. There were 400 applications for money order offices, but they could not be granted on account of there not being sufficient clerical force to settle their accounts. The money order officers paid their own way and left a small profit to the Government. Therefore it was deemed advisable to increase the force.

All the amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations were agreed to. Among them were the following: Increasing the appropriation for salaries and expenses of Collectors of Internal Revenue from $1,675,000 to $1,840,000, and striking out of the House bill the clause reducing the number of Internal Revenue collection districts to 120, after 30th of June next. The amendment appropriating $639,410 59 to pay judgments of the Court of Claims was also agreed to.

The House bill, it will be remembered, appropriated $25,000 for compensation of the President of the United States, and provided that section 153 of the Revised Statutes be repealed so far as the same relates to the salary of the President. The Senate Committee reported an amendment increasing the appropriation from $25,000 to $50,000, and striking out the proviso in regard to the repeal of section 153. The question being on concurring in the amendment of the committee, Mr. WRIGHT demanded the yeas and nays, and it was agreed to—Yeas 23, nays 18—as follows:

The bill having been considered in Committee of the Whole was reported to the Senate, and the amendments made in committee were concurred in.

The Senate then, at 5:45 P. M., went into executive session, and when the doors were reopened took a recess until 10 o'clock to-morrow morning.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES.

The House met at 10 o'clock, but a full hour was consumed in ascertaining whether there was a quorum present and in the reading of testimony to sustain the objection made yesterday against the Electoral vote of R. M. Daggett, of Nevada.

Mr. SPRINGER, of Illinois, who made the objection yesterday, offered a resolution that the vote be counted, and explained that an error had been made in describing the office held by Daggett as that of United States Commissioner, while the testimony showed that he held the office of Clerk to the United States Court.

A rather miscellaneous argument followed, running over Louisiana, Oregon, the Commission, Nevada, President elect Hayes, and kindred subjects, when the vote was then taken on Mr. Springer's resolution, which was agreed to without a division.

THE JOINT SESSION.

A message was sent to the Senate to notify that body of the action of the House, and that the House was now ready to meet it in joint session. At 11:45 the Senators entered the hall and took the seats assigned to them. After all were seated, the PRESIDENT of the Senate called the meeting to order, and directed the reading of the resolutions of each house in favor of counting the votes of Nevada. The teller then announced that the State of Nevada had cast 3 votes for Hayes and Wheeler.

Then followed in succession the States of New-Hampshire, with 5 votes for Hayes and Wheeler; New-Jersey, with 9 votes for Tilden and Hendricks; New-York, with 35 votes for Tilden and Hendricks; North Carolina, with 10 votes for Tilden and Hendricks, and Ohio, with 22 votes for Hayes and Wheeler.

THE OREGON CERTIFICATE.

The Presiding Officer then opened and handed to the tellers a certificate received from the State of Oregon. It was read by Mr. STONE, of Missouri, and proved to be the sworn certificate of the three Hayes Electors—Cartwright, Odell, and Watts—executed before a notary public. The papers contain a full statement of the doings of the three Electors, the resignation of Watts as Postmaster, his subsequent choice by the other two Electors, the original ballots cast by the Electors, &c. They were read in full. The presiding officer then handed to the tellers the certificate of the three rival Electors—Cronin, Miller, and Parker—authenticated by the signatures of the Governor and Secretary of State, with the seal of the State attached. This certificate gives two votes to Hayes and Wheeler and one vote for Tilden and Hendricks.

Senator MITCHELL, of Oregon, presented objections to the certificate of Cronin, Miller, and Parker on the following grounds:

First—Because neither of said persons was ever appointed Elector by the State of Oregon in any manner whatever.

Second—Because it appears from the records and paper contained in and attached to the certificate of W. H. Odell, J. C. Cartwright, and John W. Watts that they were duly appointed Electors, and cast their votes as such.

Third—Because it does not appear from the face of the Governor's certificate attached to the returns of the votes of Cronin, Miller, and Parker, that such certificate was issued to three persons having the highest number of votes for Electors, but was issued by him to persons whom he deemed eligible, though one of them, E. A. Cronin, was not appointed thereto according to the laws of the State of Oregon.

Fourth—Because it appears from the certificate of S. F. Chadwick, Secretary of State, that Odell, Cartwright, and Watts received the highest number of votes, and that the Secretary of State, in pursuance of law, as declared, and that, therefore, the certificate of the Governor, in so far as it omitted to certify the name of J. W. Watts as one of the Electors appointed, and in so far as such certificate contained the name of E. A. Cronin as one of the Electors appointed, fails to conform to the act of Congress in such cases made and provided, and to the law of Oregon, and that such certificate is, as to said Cronin, without authority and of no effect.

Fifth—Because it appears from both certificates that Odell and Cartwright, a majority of the Electoral College, were duly appointed Electors by the State of Oregon, in the manner directed by the Legislature; that their record, presented to the President of the Senate, and by him to the two houses, shows that a vacancy in the office of Elector existed on the day fixed by law for the meeting of Electors, and that such vacancy was filled by the appointment of Watts.

This objection is signed by Senators Mitchell and Sargent, and by Representatives Lawrence, Burchard, and Medill.

Senator KELLY, of Oregon, then presented an objection to the certificate of Cartwright, Odell and Watts, which is signed by Senators Kelly, Boggs, McDonald, Stevenson, and Cooper, and by Representatives Field, Tucker, Lane, Jenks, Walling, Clymer, Wigginton, Poppleton, Vance, Hurd, and Luttrell. The grounds of the objection are:

First—The papers purporting to be the certificates or the Electoral votes of the State of Oregon have not annexed to them a certificate of the Governor of Oregon, as required to be made and annexed by sections 136 and 138 United States Revised Statutes.

Second—The papers have not annexed to them a list of the names of Cartwright, Odell, and Watts as Electors, to which the seal of the State of Oregon was affixed by the Secretary of State, and signed by the Governor and Secretary, as required by section 60 of chapter 14, Liber 9, of the General Laws of Oregon.

Third—It was the right and duty of the Governor of Oregon, under the laws of that State, to give a certificate of election or appointment as Electors to John C. Cartwright, W. H. Odell, and E. A. Cronin, they being the three persons capable of being appointed Presidental Electors who received the highest number of votes at the election held in Oregon on Nov. 7, 1876.

Fourth—Cartwright and Odell had no right or authority in law to appoint Watts to be an Elector on Dec. 6, 1876, as there was no vacancy in the office of Presidential Elector on that day.

Fifth—Cartwright and Odell had no right or authority in law to appoint Watts an Elector on Dec. 6, 1876, inasmuch as they did not on that day compose or form any part of the Electoral College of Oregon as by law constituted.

Sixth—Cartwright and Odell had no authority to appoint Watts an Elector on Dec. 6, 1876, because on that day Watts was still the Postmaster at Lafayette, Oregon, and was still on that day holding said office of profit and trust.

Seventh—Watts, who claims to be an Elector in the above described certificate, was, in February, 1873, appointed Postmaster at Lafayette, Oregon, and was duly commissioned and qualified as such Postmaster, that being an office of trust and profit under the laws of the United States, and continued to act as such Postmaster from February, 1873, until after Nov. 13, 1876, and was acting as such Postmaster on Nov. 7, 1876, when the Presidential Electors were appointed by the State of Oregon, and that he was ineligible to be appointed as one of said Presidential Electors.

Eighth—When in the canvass of Oregon caused the lists of the names of the Electors of the State to be made and certified such lists did not contain the name of said Watts, but did contain the names of Cartwright, Odell, and Cronin, who were duly appointed Electors of President and Vice President of the United States in the State of Oregon, on Nov. 7, 1876.

Mr. LAWRENCE, of Ohio, presented a further objection to the certificate of Cronin, Miller, and Parker, on the ground that neither of them had been appointed a Presidential Elector, and that Odell, Cartwright, and Watts had been duly elected, and had cast the only true and lawful votes of the State. This paper is signed by Senators Mitchell and Sargent, and by Representatives Lawrence, of Ohio; McCrary, of Iowa; Hale, of Maine, and Banks, of Massachusetts.

The PRESIDING OFFICER then stated that all the certificates from the State of Oregon, with the accompanying papers and with the objections, would be now submitted to the Electoral Commission for its judgment and decision, and that the Senate would retire to its Chamber.

The Senators having retired, (at 12:55,) the SPEAKER announced the commencement of a new legislative day, which was thereupon opened with prayer by the Chaplain.

Mr. HEWITT, of New-York, introduced a bill declaring Little Hell Gate not a navigable channel, and according the consent of the United States to the filling up of the same.

THE SUNDRY CIVIL BILL.

Mr. HOLMAN, of Indiana, Chairman of the Appropriation Committee, reported the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill, and it having been previously printed, the House, at 1:25 P. M., went into Committee of the Whole on that bill, Mr. Buckner, of Missouri, in the chair.

Mr. CONGER, of Michigan, raised the point of order on the paragraph which authorizes the purchase of the Congressional Globe building in Washington, together with the bound and unbound volumes of the Globe contained therein, on the ground that it was new legislation.

The CHAIR sustained the point, and the paragraph was stricken out.

Mr. HARRISON, of Illinois, offered an amendment appropriating $33,000 for improving the ventilation of the House of Representatives, to be expended under the architect of the Capitol. He explained that the amendment did not propose to change the system of ventilation, but simply to improve the present system.

After further discussion Mr. HEWITT, of New-York, said that he believed that the system of ventilation would be very much improved if the amendment was adopted, but if it was not improved he would not object to the present opportunity of his life if he should be allowed to perfect the ventilation of the hall at his own cost.

Mr. SPRINGER, of Illinois, moved to amend the amendment by ordering the expenditure to be made under the direction and according to the plans of Hon. A. S. Hewitt, but at the request of Mr. Hewitt he will withdraw his amendment.

Mr. Harrison's amendment was then agreed to.

After making some progress on the bill the committee rose, and at 4:45 P. M. took a recess until 7:30 o'clock this evening.

EVENING SESSION.

The House, immediately on reassembling at 7:50 o'clock, went into Committee of the Whole (Mr. Buckner, of Missouri, in the chair) on the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill.

Mr. BELFORD, of Colorado, offered an amendment increasing the amount for land surveys to $300,000, which was rejected, when Mr. Belford moved to fix the amount at $150,000.

A long time was consumed in endeavoring to find if there was a quorum present, Mr. Holman trying to effect a compromise on $100,000, and Mr. Lane, of Oregon, rejecting the proposition.

After two roll-calls the committee rose, and the House took a recess until 9:30 to-morrow at 10 o'clock.

THE CONSOLIDATION COAL COMPANY

CHARGES AGAINST THE MANAGEMENT OF THE COMPANY—A NEW BOARD OF OFFICERS ELECTED—MR. ALLAN CAMPBELL NOT RE-ELECTED.

The stockholders of the Consolidation Coal Company held a meeting at No. 71 Broadway yesterday, for the election of officers for the ensuing year. The election this year was vested with unusual interest, because of the action taken recently by the Board of Aldermen against Mr. Allan Campbell, Commissioner of Public Works, for holding at the same time the office of President of this company. Mr. Henry A. Mott drew attention to the following paragraph in the annual report of the company for 1876:

"The company also holds, as a cash asset, $100,000 of the first mortgage bonds of the Cumberland and Pennsylvania Railroad, redeemed in 1875 by the payment of $98,500 in cash from earnings, being the final installment for the purchase of the George's Creek Railroad."

By the report of 1875, Mr. Mott said it appeared these bonds had been paid for out of the earnings of the company in that year, while this year's report says that the Consolidation Coal Company in 1876 purchased the entire property of the Cumberland Railroad. Mr. Mott asked, "How could the Consolidation Coal Company hold as an asset a bond of a company now merged in it, when it had assumed to pay the indebtedness represented by $100,000 of bonds which were secured by mortgage now owned by itself? Could they do so any more than an individual could hold as an asset a mortgage upon property which he owned in fee?" He insisted that the mortgage to the extent of the $100,000 had merged in the fee now held by the company, and ought to be canceled for use.

Mr. Campbell replied that he differed with Mr. Mott, and held that the disposition made of the bonds was judicious and proper. They could be used as any other asset of the company, and if the Directors saw fit, could even be resold. He supposed that if there had been anything wrong in the transaction, Mr. Evans, one of the Directors, would have been as apt to see it as Mr. Mott.

Mr. Mott answered with some warmth that he, for one, did not intend to permit this matter to go by default. It had come up in another shape at last year's meeting, but no action had been taken to settle the difficulty. If the other stockholders were willing to allow their $71,000 second mortgage bonds to be reduced in value, which would certainly be the case if these bonds should be again sold, he was not. Neither was he willing to silently permit a fraud to be perpetrated on unsuspecting persons who, unaware of the real history of these bonds, might be induced to purchase them without inquiring into their character.

The voting for a Board of Officers then took place, and 71,659 shares were represented. The following were declared to be the Board of Officers for 1877:

President—Charles F. Mayer.

Mr. Campbell made no effort to be re-elected.

THE NEW STOCK EXCHANGE.

The New-York Open Board of Stock Brokers, recently organized, held their first annual election yesterday afternoon in Delmonico's, New street. The polls were open from 2 until 4 o'clock. Eighty-seven votes were cast, only those who had paid their initiation fee and subscribed to the constitution and by-laws being allowed the right of suffrage. The following ticket was unanimously elected:

President—B. M. Nevers of the late firm of Grinnell & Nevers.

Chairman—E. T. Bragaw, late Vice President of the New-York Gold Exchange.

Treasurer—J. H. Munson, of the firm of Munson & Ketchum.

Executive Committee—John F. Underhill, (late President of the New-York Gold Exchange.) Chairman; O. W. Joslyn; J. A. MacPherson, J. S. Edwards, J. N. Harriman, C. H. Bosher, E. R. Miller, L. W. Gillet, Charles Schwaquffer.

Committee on Admissions—G. I. Landon, Chairman; Joseph Jacobs, A. H. Allen, R. Eels, H. S. Taylor, Arthur Diefendorf, S. Von Destinon, A. M. Whitlock, Jr., C. A. Comstock.

Arbitration Committee—J. H. Tucker, Chairman; D. L. St. John, F. O. French, W. M. Whittemore, N. Dole.

Finance Committee—W. H. Phillips, Chairman; I. C. Meyer, C. P. Ealit, J. H. V. Cockcroft, Benjamin Hart.

Committee on Securities—D. C. Falls, Chairman; A. W. Dimmock, J. S. Cronise, Alonzo Follett, A. S. Rosenbaum.

A meeting was held subsequently at which the Committee on Building reported that they had secured the rooms formerly occupied by the old Open Board of Stock Brokers, Nos. 16 and 18 Broad street, for the permanent use of the Board, at an annual rental of $10,000, and that they are in negotiation for a temporary building until the other can be suitably altered. A number of new members were admitted, making the present membership 272, and the Committee on Admissions reported that they have 55 additional applications to pass upon. The meeting then adjourned.

THE OHIO PROHIBITIONISTS.

The Ohio Prohibition Reformers, as they style themselves, are to hold a State Convention in Columbus to-day, Feb. 22, to nominate candidates for State officers, and devise measures for securing the prohibition of the manufacture and sale of alcoholic liquors; secure the legalisation of woman's suffrage, and guarding against rings, popular ignorance, and Executive and legislative patronage. The call contains this clause: "If ever the temperance men and women of Ohio propose to make a united and determined movement for the enactment of a Prohibitory law against 'the crime of crimes,' this is the year for that effort. It brings purely a State canvass, in which none of the old national party issues can intrude, for only State and local officers are to be chosen by the people. Under the present Constitution, our Legislature has complete control

The Oregon case has gone to the Electoral Commission, and with its settlement will disappear the last element of uncertainty in the long wrangle over the Presidency. The Democrats expect nothing from their arguments over the vote of Oregon, and it remains to be seen whether any considerable portion of them will have conscience enough to manifest their disapproval of the infamous conspiracy by which the people of Oregon were to be cheated out of their choice for President. The Democratic members of the Commission will have the opportunity of showing their superiority to partisan considerations in dealing with the Oregon trick, and their friends in Congress will be subjected to a test calculated to reveal either their deliberate dishonesty or their disinclination to indorse one of the most disgraceful bargains of recent politics. But when Mr. JENKS, of Pennsylvania, points the way by laying his hand on his heart, and appealing for the reception of the Cronin vote, in the name of "truth, justice, and right," it would perhaps be too much to expect the faintest display of virtue from his less pretentious associates.

Mr. SHERMAN yesterday reported from the Senate Finance Committee a funding bill which, in its main feature, is good, and which is worth every effort to pass, though it does not go so far as could be wished. It authorizes the exchange of legal tenders at par for thirty-year four per cent. gold bonds, at the rate of not exceeding $4,000,000 in any one month, or $25,000,000 in any one year, to the total amount of $100,000,000. No commission in any form is to be paid for the exchange. The legal tenders exchanged are to be canceled and destroyed. The third section of the bill authorizes the issue of "silver coin" to an amount which, with that previously authorized, shall reach $80,000,000, to be exchanged for legal-tender notes, the notes to be destroyed and counted as part of the sinking fund. The effect of this part of the bill will be nil unless the silver coin goes above the price of paper, when the Government will have the privilege of providing it, though, of course, there can be no legitimate use for $80,000,000 of subsidiary coin or "small change."

Mr. TILDEN plays the part of hypocrite and trickster to the last. He "repudiates" the joint agreement of the Senate and House Committees to leave the bank accounts of the political managers of both parties unexamined, and "disclaims any immunity, protection, or benefit" from such agreement. Mr. TILDEN'S protestations come rather late. The bargain is closed, and he is perfectly well aware that there is no chance of reopening it. Why did he not instruct his friend and fellow-worker JORDAN to lay his bank account before the Senate Committee when summoned for that express purpose? The Cashier of the Third National Bank, doubtless, knew very well what he was about when he refused to give the needful information about TILDEN'S recent transactions with the bank, but the defeated candidate for the Presidency rather overrates public credulity when he attempts to get credit for either honesty or manliness in his tardy repudiation of the instructions on which JORDAN acted.

"I shall go to my people and shall tell them all," said the gifted WATTERSON, of Kentucky, in his speech on the Louisiana decision. As an installment of the revelations which he has in store, "H. W." sends the following to his newspaper apropos of TILDEN'S trusted henchman: "Mr. HEWITT, the official head of the party, appeared in the Capitol befuddled with self-mystification and vanity. Precisely what distinct plan, if any, this flighty, incapable person may have had, the world will never know or care to know. The country saw him chiefly as a bob-o-link; scudding, cloud-like, between the White House and the office of the Associated Press." From the favored organ of the nincompoops, from the TYRTÆUS who sang the virtues of TILDEN and the charms of the Gramercy Park circle in most melodious prose, this is exceedingly irreverent talk. "H. W." sorrowfully acknowledges that "the milk that is spilled was good milk" to mix Kentucky bourbon withal. But, "what of that? The milk is gone. The brass-hooped piggin is broken at the fountain." Still, "H. W." will not despair, nor beat his breast, nor saw the air with his hands, feeling rather relieved, apparently, after the foregoing mixing of fluids and metaphors. So he settles down to these two pieces of good advice to all who sympathize with his distress, "Suppress violent thoughts and extreme ejaculation;" "Treat HAYES like a gentleman until he proves himself a usurper by his acts." Even the New-York Sun might learn something from the Louisville Courier-Journal.

The glimpse we get of the returns supplied by life insurance companies in relation to expenses whets the appetite for fuller and more satisfactory information. In the first place, no attention has been paid by several of the more important companies to the request embodied in Senator BIXBY'S resolution. The companies to whom this remark applies cannot complain if an unfavorable construction is put upon their silence. In the next place, it is evident that of the companies whose returns are epitomized in our Albany dispatch, very few have complied with the spirit of the inquiry sanctioned by the Senate. They state salaries, but as a rule they are silent about the various devices which are known to be in operation for increasing the incomes of officers, and otherwise concealing disbursements which would invite unfavorable comment. We pointed out at the time of the adoption of the resolution that unless its requirements were more specifically indicated by the Insurance Department, it would not elicit the required facts, and the result sustains this view. Some of the figures obtained are startling, nevertheless.

The extradition treaty which has just been concluded between the United States and Spain contains some features which have evidently been suggested by recent complications in our foreign relations. The offenses for which an accused person may be extradited are carefully specified and described. The list comprises fourteen different crimes, each of which is recognized as such by all civilized nations. A person surrendered to answer the charge of having committed one of these crimes may be tried for any of those specified in the treaty, but not for any not included in the said list. Crimes and offenses of a political character, and those therewith connected, are distinctly excluded from the operation of the treaty. No person may be extradited under the provisions of this treaty for any offense committed prior to the exchange of ratifications. Therefore, American fugitives from justice now residing in Spanish dominions, and Spanish fugitives in this country, are secure from extradition.

GEORGE WASHINGTON.

The United States could not have a holiday more fit to be generally observed than the birthday of WASHINGTON. No name is more justly to be honored, whether for the value of the services which its bearer rendered to the country, or for the solid worth of his character and the intrinsic value of the example which he left to the study of future generations. It would hardly be safe to say that without WASHINGTON the war of the Revolution would have been a failure, or that, if it had succeeded, without him the Government would not have been organized on the sound principles and with the efficient machinery which contributed so much to its permanence. Much of the success of the war was due to the character of the people, to the skill, courage, and fidelity of WASHINGTON'S Generals, to the quarrel between England and France, and to the peculiar difficulties in the way of the British arms. Much of the successful organization of the Government was due to the talents and virtue of HAMILTON, MADISON, JAY, MORRIS, GERRY, and the other leaders in the various States. But it is not too much to say that without WASHINGTON the result would have been far more uncertain and the work would have been greatly more difficult.

It is not easy to define the sources of the powerful influence which WASHINGTON exerted, because they did not lie in any few qualities of commanding superiority. He did not have an imperious will, bending that of others to his purposes; on the contrary, nothing in his career is more remarkable than his constant submission, while in command of the Army, to the dictates of the civil power in the hands of men less able and even less devoted than himself. He did not have the supreme confidence in himself which is generally felt to be a condition of success; he was, instead, self-distrustful, formed his conclusions usually with great slowness, and always with great pains, invariably consulted his subordinates in both military and civil life, and held his plans always open for revision with a want of pride of opinion that is not often equaled. Nor could he at any time be said to be possessed of a consciousness that he had a lofty mission to be performed, from which he derived special inspiration; he rather went about his greatest duties, as about the least, with patient method, with industry, persistence, and healthy energy, but with an entire absence of any apparent heroic feeling.

Yet no man ever won more absolute confidence or deeper respect from those who were connected with him or dependent upon him, or swayed a varied, jealous, and scattered people with such great and lasting influence. These facts are the strongest proof of his great mental power, but they are not explained by that alone. It may be said that his command over his countrymen, as well as his great success as a General and a statesman, were due to the unselfishness and conscientiousness with which he did everything that was laid upon him. When he was named to command the "Continental Army," in 1775, he said in his place in the Congress: "I beg it may be remembered by every gentleman in this room, that I this day declare, with the utmost sincerity, I do not think myself equal to the command I am honored with." This perfect modesty was an outgrowth of unselfishness. While other officers, during the long war, were fretting about the honor rendered them, WASHINGTON never seems to have thought of weighing his own repute in the balance against his duty. He was the object of jealous and envious intrigue; there was a party both in the Army and in Congress formed to displace him; the basest slanders were used against him; he was crippled in his authority; a separate command was given to GATES, which was practically exercised over his head; efforts were made to discredit him with the French court and to estrange LAFAYETTE from him; but through it all he went about his work calmly, and gave no sign of wounded pride or of solicitude for his own fame, though his heart was often heavy with gloomy forebodings.

During his civil administration he did not escape distrust or animosity. Toward the last of his service especially, he was bitterly attacked by men whose mode of political warfare makes that of our own day seem mild in contrast. JEFFERSON, the rising and powerful leader of a passionate party, often felt harshly, and sometimes acted meanly, toward him. But WASHINGTON, though he had lost some of the patience of his earlier years, never stooped to use his great influence in resentment. His efforts to keep together the representatives of the parties then beginning to form in the country were almost pathetic in their simple sincerity, and in the spirit of absolute patriotism which they betrayed. That his views were large and sagacious; that he saw, more plainly than most of the public men of his day, the measures which were the conditions of an enduring national Government; that he had a clearer perception of the real tendencies and possibilities of the people of the country than even the greatest of his contemporaries, these are things which it is easy to gather from a study of his public career. But to his practical statesmanship, which he shared with others, he added a generous faithfulness, a complete self-surrender to his country, which no one else of his day equaled, and in which no one of later days can be compared to him except Mr. LINCOLN. It is a remarkable fact, and a very fortunate one, that in his greatest qualities WASHINGTON was a man whom the humblest citizen may hope in his own sphere to emulate, and no greater service could be done to the boys of the United States by their parents and teachers than by making these qualities well understood. His fidelity to duty, his painstaking efforts to form just conceptions of duty, his respect for the rights of others, his constant self-respect, his modesty, his want of any unworthy ambition, his scrupulous honor, his courage in time of trial and danger, his moderation in times of public excitement, the perfect purity of all his public relations—surely these form a standard in which every young American can be instructed by his example.

THE FUTURE OF THE SOUTH.

The Southern mind must be less acute than it has been supposed to be if it fail to comprehend the requisites of Southern prosperity in the future. The present lack of prosperity needs not to be proved, and the causes of a condition of things which is in many respects deplorable are scarcely less apparent than the fact itself. If there is to be any marked improvement, it must be preceded by a change in the political affiliations of a portion of the whites, and by their adoption of a policy of conciliation toward the North, instead of the policy of dictation and defiance which Democratic leaders have for their own purposes encouraged.

The true wants of the South have not greatly changed during the period which has elapsed since the war. Some time was required to enable the planters to discover that the abolition of slavery necessitated changes in the management of their estates. Their farms were too large to be profitably cultivated without more capital or credit than they were able to command. The evident remedy was the sale of a portion of their land to acquire the means of stocking and cultivating the remainder. It was not a pleasant remedy to a class who had prided themselves as much upon the extent of their plantations as upon the number of their slaves, and we cannot wonder that they were averse to its application. After they had learned to accept it as inevitable, other difficulties presented themselves of a still more formidable nature. Sales of land presuppose the presence of buyers. There were no buyers, however, among the Southerners themselves. All were impoverished alike. The only hope, therefore, of being able to cut up large plantations and to sell surplus land rested upon the attraction of strangers from the North and from abroad. From both sources a stream of migration continually flows. The problem before the South was, how to divert to its wasted fields, its stagnant industries, its neglected natural facilities, a portion of the enterprise, energy, and capital which have so quickly built up the prairie States. A misapprehension of the solution to this problem has entailed upon the South many of its embarrassments.

To emulate the West successfully, the secret of Western development must be studied without prejudice. With some of the advantages of the West the South cannot directly contend. It offers few facilities for colonization. Neither its exhausted nor its timbered lands compare with the fertile prairies. Against these drawbacks it may set certain recommendations. Its readier access to the great markets, its diversified mineral resources, its unlimited water power, are considerations which, other things being equal, can scarcely be overestimated. If the comparison of sections extended no further than these points, the South might have confidently claimed a full share of the migrating population, native or foreign. But there is one condition which the South overlooked. The man in search of a new home seeks a community in which there is absolute freedom of opinion and action in political matters. A citizen of Massachusetts or New-York will not care for cheap land or genial climate, if part of the price of either is a surrender of his political rights. Inconveniences and hardships he can submit to cheerfully, but he will not give up his independence. In the West it is assured to him; in the South it is denied. The mischief to the South has not ended here. The state of society which repels settlers also repels capital. The loss of Northern men implies the loss of the enterprise and skill which they carry with them. Therefore, the South remains poor, its lands unsold, its towns and villages in decay, its resources overlooked, its people soured and suffering by reason of circumstances which they seem unwilling to deal with fairly.

Push the statement of the case one step further, and the secret of the depressed condition of the South becomes apparent. It is shunned and distrusted because of the proscriptive party organization and the methods by which its party efforts are conducted. Both are traceable to the Democratic Party. Its managers have assumed that they have a special title to the votes of the South. They have predicated their plans upon the supposition that by persistent audacity they might acquire and hold the South as against the Republican Party. The despotism thus built up is, then, wholly the work of the Democrats, and they must bear a large proportion of the responsibility for the evils which the South endures. There can be no substantial improvement in its fortunes as long as its white people allow themselves to be coaxed and coerced into the maintenance of a policy which begins by asserting that Northern settlers are not wanted unless they renounce their Republican convictions, and which ends in alienating from the South the elements of prosperity that are coveted by its people.

The election of Mr. HAYES will have this effect, if it have no other, at the South—it will impose a check upon the violent Democratic managers, and will lead to a reconsideration of their position by the more reasonable of the whites. With local organization backed by Federal authority, the extremists would have been practically all-powerful. With Federal power in just and generous hands, men like VANCE in North Carolina, and BULTER in South Carolina, will be more than checkmated. Their hold upon the intelligent whites will be broken. Whether the latter will prove equal to the occasion, by using it to throw off Democratic dictation and to create a moderate opinion which, in essential matters, shall work in harmony with the Republican policy, is a question which must meanwhile remain unanswered. We would neither exaggerate the significance of recent Southern action at Washington nor compromise the essentials of Republican policy, by holding out inducements to Southerners who care more for their section than for their party. The quality most to be desired in them, and that which they may cultivate without any sacrifice of self-respect, is independence in the treatment of political issues. Out of this quality reform in Southern politics may most naturally come, and the effect will be as wholesome to the Federal Administration as to the Southern people. Let this point be gained, and the foundation will be laid for a new South, with a future brighter far than would be attainable under other circumstances.

A THRICE-TOLD TALE.

The report made to the Senate yesterday concerning the Oregon case is a fair statement of all the material facts. Moreover, its conclusions are decisive of all the matters therein involved. It is a recognized principle in law that the alleged ineligibility of a candidate is largely determined by the knowledge or ignorance of those voting for him as a candidate for office. Common justice, as well as common sense, would seem to provide that the suffrages of the people should not be inoperative because the candidate for whom they voted was ineligible and his ineligibility was not publicly known. The committee say that WAITS, on the day of election, held an office of trust and profit under the United States. The voters who, as frequenters of his office, knew that he was such an officer, did not number one hundred. Very few of these knew that he was ineligible as a candidate for Elector, and very few of the people in the State knew that he was a postmaster. The report, therefore, lays considerable stress on these facts. It was not generally known that he held any office. Even those who knew that he was a postmaster did not know that that appointment was any disqualification under the laws of the United States. And WAITS' majority over CRONIN was more than ten times as large as the number of voters who knew he was a postmaster.

The next step in the case was the resignation of WAITS. He resigned after the election, but before the assembling of the Electoral College and before the certificates could be issued to the Electors. The Secretary of State, who is the canvassing officer under the laws of Oregon, certified that ODELL, CARTWRIGHT, and WAITS, received the highest number of votes cast for Presidential Electors. The fact that Gov. GROVER issued certificates to ODELL, CARTWRIGHT, and CRONIN is not considered conclusive on the point as to whether WAITS or CRONIN was rightfully an Elector. The certificate of the Governor is not part of the "appointment," but the action of the Secretary of State—the canvassing officer—is conclusive. Therefore, GROVER simply exceeded his jurisdiction in assuming to decide upon a question of ineligibility. But, even if WAITS were ineligible at the time of the election, his resignation of the office of Postmaster restored his eligibility, and it was competent for the other two Electors to choose him to the vacancy created. This they did. His ineligibility has never been called in question by any competent tribunal, and he was, at least de facto, a member of the Electoral College, and as such exercised all the functions of such officer. The vacancy, if any, existed, had been lawfully filled.

But even if CRONIN were lawfully elected, and this is explicitly denied, his subsequent action defeated the purpose which he designed to execute. The certificates were given to him. These he refused to deliver to ODELL and CARTWRIGHT, who were already in possession of the official canvass of the Secretary of State. He withdrew from any concert with ODELL and CARTWRIGHT, and organized a college of his own. This was plainly a "refusal to act," which, under the laws of Oregon, created a vacancy. It is immaterial, therefore, whether the vacancy in the Electoral College, of which ODELL and CARTWRIGHT constituted two-thirds, was occasioned by the withdrawal of WATTS, or the "refusal to act" of CRONIN. The vacancy existed, and could only be filled by a majority of the members of the college. ODELL and CARTWRIGHT constituted such a majority, and they filled that vacancy by choosing a person who was eligible to the position. The fact that CRONIN forcibly kept possession of all the certificates, and pretended that he thereby controlled the official existence of those to whom they rightfully belonged, cuts no figure whatever in the case.

The fatal weakness in the Democratic case in Oregon was CRONIN'S failure to get a lawfully elected Elector to act with him. The burden of the infamous dispatches which passed between PATRICK and TILDEN'S house in New-York was "money is needed to buy a Republican Elector to act with one Democrat." The committee's report very properly dwells on the fact that a conspiracy was formed in this City and Oregon to procure this result by corrupt means. They have proved that CRONIN was paid $3,000 for his share in the nefarious business; and a similar amount was paid to one HILL, a Republican editor, to subsidize his newspaper, though this sum was ostensibly paid him as a retaining fee in the pretended legal case. But, after all, it is clear that the failure of the conspirators to buy up one of the Republican Electors was a defeat of all their plans. GROVER secretly informed them that he would give a certificate to one Democratic Elector. CRONIN was the most eligible man, as he had the largest vote on the Democratic ticket. He had publicly said that he would not contest WATTS' right to the certificate. His scruples were silenced subsequently, and he carried out his part of the conspiracy. In default of the countenance and co-operation of one of the Electors whose title to the office was undisputed, he arrogated to himself the right to fill an Electoral College of which he claimed to be the single member. The preposterous nature of his claim is beneath the dignity of argument. It should not receive the serious consideration of Congress, except as a bold attempt to seize an Electoral College by stratagem, or to corrupt it, in default of other means of capture.

OUR PASSION FOR SPEECH.

"Speech is silvern, but silence is golden," is a proverb we hear perpetually, and usually from those to whom silence is impossible. We Americans may believe in its truth, though we seldom act as if we did. If we do, we are not unlike THOMAS CARLYLE, who has been telling his readers for half a century of the beauty, wisdom, and excellence of silence, and has published some forty volumes to prove his sincerity. We ought to admire and appreciate silence, for, as a people, considering our race, we have very little of it. As a nation we are troubled with innumerable opinions, with views on almost every subject, and our trouble grows serious unless we have an opportunity to express ourselves by word of mouth or pen. Opportunity lacking, we make it. We will and must have our say. What we have to say may not be of any importance in itself, but it is of the greatest importance to us that we should say it. We are inclined to think the fact that it is our opinion, rather than the opinion merely, gives our utterance weight.

This is conspicuously a country of opinions. We expect everybody to have opinions; we like to hear them, particularly when they agree with our own. Even if they do not, we prefer to hear them; for then we have a chance to argue, and argument is the delight of the American mind. Go where you may, you will find men in discussion on some topic or other. Nothing is too great or too small to be debated. Politics has precedence in cities and towns; but this is readily and repeatedly exchanged for theology, morals, law, medicine, social obligations, finance, the state of one's digestion, or the tendency to premature baldness. In the rural regions, in sparsely-settled districts, where few newspapers circulate, and where the roar of the great world falls only in faint echoes, agriculture and the crops are mooted, and all the trifles of a narrow life. These may not be handled with remarkable skill or variety, but you can be sure that they will be steadily turned over and over. The most insignificant thing will answer to found an argument on, and to argue is to exercise the right of a freeman, and not unfrequently the privilege of a bore. While a man argues, however badly or drearily, he imagines that the spirit of liberty is strong within him, and that in this way he mysteriously discharges some abstract species of patriotic duty.

Private talking may be very wearisome, but it can never become so unendurable as talking in public with a view to be reported, the desire for publicity being in an exact ratio to the absence of ideas. Every State, county, city, or village of the Union is superabundantly supplied with men constantly uneasy lest they may miss some opportunity to distinguish themselves. They delight in committees, conventions, meetings of every kind; they are among the first to attend and the last to depart. Even when they have a small audience—when they know they shall not be reported—they love to talk. Ignorance of the matter in hand rather stimulates them than otherwise. They wished to show how much information an uninformed understanding can display. They possess words; they hold that words are things; and they have learned by experience that the multitude can not discriminate between words and ideas. If it could, where should they look for reputation? what hope could they cherish of approval or toleration? They are enamored of their own voices—a wild, unnatural affection, in which they have few rivals—and its emptiness has a peculiar charm for them. The more they hear it, the deeper their passion grows, and, as it would seem, the shallower their wit.

When they take up politics, they are stimulated to do their best—or worst. Fancying their field to be enlarged, and their consequence elevated, they feel that they are addressing a nation; that the eyes of the world are upon them. In ordinary times, they are simply tedious and harmless; but in extraordinary times, when the public mind is disturbed or excited by any cause or combination of causes, they are apt to become mischievous by their anxiety to attract attention. Such men are generally prone to demagogism; they cannot expect to influence the intelligent and thoughtful part of the community, and therefore they appeal to the prejudices and passions of the unreflecting. Their great vanity, not their capacity, renders them to a certain extent dangerous; just as any person, however weak or contemptible, may be dangerous, if he be permitted to carry firebrands where there is inflammable material. The suspicion that they can be considered dangerous arouses all their conceit, and to be called dangerous assures them of their transcendent ability. They never suspect that it is only the privilege, the entire freedom, they enjoy which makes it possible for them to do harm. By abusing both they exalt themselves in their own estimation. They assume the air of men of high principle; they pretend to be guardians and defenders of the rights of the people; they prate grandiloquently of their patriotism, and beneath all their rant and fustian is only a porous quantity of wretched egotism.

It is hard, sometimes, to be patient with such blatherskites, or indeed with any men or class of men who either talk for mere love of talking, or from a desire to gain notoriety at any price. But it is the best way to be patient, to let them gabble on until they tire everybody, and demonstrate their own shallowness, as they must ultimately do. We are a speaking people; we will have our views, and many of us our grievances. Our ready speech may be a safety-valve which, as we run on high-pressure principle, preserves us from explosion.

THE NEW-JERSEY LEGISLATURE.

FINAL ADJOURNMENT FIXED FOR MARCH 9—THE DISTRICT COURT BILL PASSED—A BILL MAKING ANOTHER GRADE OF MURDER—ANOTHER BATCH OF NOMINATIONS FROM THE GOVERNOR—THE DIVISION OF THE PRINTING JOBS.

TRENTON, Wednesday, Feb. 21, 1877.

The House this morning agreed to the concurrent resolution of the Senate calling for final adjournment on Friday, March 9.

The committees of the House reported adversely this morning on several bills. Among the more important of them were that of Egans limiting horse-car fares to four cents for the first two miles and one cent each additional mile, and that introduced by some one at the instance of one J. R. Freeze, fixing the rate of interest at 6 per cent. In both cases the adverse reports were sustained.

Among the bills introduced in the House is one which practically makes another grade of murder. It directs the Judges in case a verdict of murder of the first degree is accompanied by a recommendation to mercy to sentence to imprisonment for life.

Mr. Harris introduced a bill authorizing cities and towns to issue 20-year local improvement bonds for the improvement of any street when the majority of resident property-owners apply for it. The tax-payer shall pay 7 per cent. interest on his assessment, and 5 per cent. of the principal annually. The bonds shall bear 6 per cent. interest, leaving 1 per cent. as a contingent fund. The bonds shall be first assessment liens on the property, and in the event of failure to pay the assessment when due, the Collector may, on 10 days' notice, advertise the property for sale, and 30 days thereafter sell it. The bill is designed to make possible much needed improvements in the condition of the streets in all the cities of the State.

The District Court bill was called up on final passage in the House this morning. Mr. Van Renselaer combated the motion that the courts entail an additional burden on the cities which sustain them. He wanted the bill laid over till Monday, but it failed. After some debate, it was put on final passage, and passed by a vote of 37 to 20.

Mr. Dayton introduced, at the instance of the Morristown Asylum Commissioners, a bill appropriating an additional $15,000 to that institution. Mr. Hill introduced into the Senate a bill providing that hereafter no more appropriations shall be made to the support of the schools from the revenues of the State.

In executive session the Senate received the following nominations from the Governor:

Judges of Common Pleas.—Joseph Vliet, Warren County; Alexander Wurtz, Hunterdon; John H. Mecker, Essex; David Mulford, Union; D. W. Bellicker, Morris, and Elias Doughty, Cumberland.

Prosecutors of the Pleas.—Thomas W. Middleton, of Ocean, and F. A. De Motte, of Morris.

The nominations were all referred.

The Printing Committee have agreed on their division of the printing spoils, and have introduced a bill awarding contracts as follows: John Carpenter, Jr., of Clinton, Hunterdon County, who was dismissed from the House Clerkship two years ago in disgrace, the printing of the State Treasurer's, Controller's, State Board of Education, Normal School, and State Prison reports; Naar, Day & Naar, of Trenton, the Senate and Assembly bills and such reports of State officers as are not otherwise provided for; Mr. Mullone, of the Jersey City Argus, 1,000 copies of the Assembly minutes; S. W. Miller, of Salem, 1,000 copies of Senate Journal; Frank Patterson, of the Newark Courier, the volume of legislative documents; Charles B. Wills, of Mount Holly, 3,000 copies of the Laws of 1877. The printers of the State who are omitted by this arrangement will doubtless make an effort to break the combination.

The House killed a bill which ought to have been passed. Some property-owners are in the habit of borrowing large sums of money for the purpose of evading the payment of personal tax for just that amount. Mr. Howell's bill merely required that every man claiming deduction on account of debt must swear that the debt was not contracted for the purpose of evading the tax. The members thought it would lead to confusion, and the bill was defeated.

The general law for the government of counties was recommended in the Senate, which kills it. Assemblyman Drohan withdrew the bill making the Finance Board, of which he is President, the controlling Board in Jersey City's local government.

BUSINESS FAILURES IN CHICAGO.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHICAGO, Feb. 21.—The heavy decline in the market rates of provisions and grain in this city within a day or two past has had a demoralizing effect on dealers. The firm of D. Kreigh & Co., packers, was forced yesterday to suspend owing to its deals in pork and lard, its heaviest creditors being in New-York. To-day the firms of R. B. Murphy & Co., M. S. Kingsland & Co., and N. H. Warren & Co. were forced to suspend. All had been carrying heavy margins, and the decline in pork alone, which has been from $18 75 Jan. 10, for April option, to $14 45 on yesterday, had the effect to force two of these firms to the wall. The others lost in grain transactions, deals in which are exceedingly feverish just now.

THE ICE IN THE HUDSON.

POUGHKEEPSIE, Feb. 21.—The ice in front of this city broke up to-day, and is now moving with the tide. Reports from all points below show that boats could easily come to this city.

INSURANCE MATTERS.

THE GOVERNOR'S APPOINTMENTS—A REPORT FROM THE OUTGOING INSURANCE SUPERINTENDENT—THE SALARIES PAID TO INSURANCE OFFICIALS—COMPANIES WHICH HAVE FAILED TO REPLY—INSURANCE IN THE ASSEMBLY—GENERAL BUSINESS.

From Our Own Correspondent.

ALBANY, Wednesday, Feb. 21, 1877.

This was the day for a regular executive session of the Senate, the rules requiring that such a session shall be held on the first and third Wednesday of each month at 12 M. But a joint resolution having been adopted yesterday that both houses adjourn at 12 M. to-day till next Tuesday, the executive session was prevented. Two or three attempts were made to get into executive session before 12 o'clock, but it could not be done except by unanimous consent, and Democrats objected. Had a session been held, a motion would have been made to reconsider the vote by which John F. Smythe was confirmed as Superintendent of Insurance, and Hezekiah Sturgess as Canal Appraiser. The motion would not have prevailed, however, and the only thing gained would have been to put Senators squarely on the record in this business of trafficking in public offices. The time during which these nominations can be held in executive session after being confirmed expires to-day, and they will be returned to the Governor as duly confirmed. Their commissions will be made out immediately, and they will enter upon the duties of their offices to-morrow. Mr. William Smyth, the retiring Superintendent of Insurance, will not continue his connection with the department in any capacity. He could probably remain as Deputy Superintendent, if he desired, but he regards the change that has been brought about in the head of the department as the work of the insurance companies, whose manner of doing business was being subjected to a rigid investigation, and as indicating a change in the policy he was pursuing toward them. Having taken a firm stand in favor of this policy, and believing it to be necessary and proper, he says he could not consistently remain in the department and see the work that he had commenced abandoned.

In answer to the resolution introduced on the 16th of January by Senator Bixby, requesting the Superintendent of Insurance to call upon the life insurance companies of this State to report to him a list of salaries paid to officials in each company, Mr. Smyth to-day transmitted the reports of the companies so far as they have been received up to the present time. Senator Bixby presented the reports to the Senate and called attention to the fact that the most important companies, and those specially charged by him with extravagance in their management, had failed to respond to his resolution. Among those failing to respond are the Mutual Life, the Equitable Life, the Globe Mutual, the Guardian Mutual, the Knickerbocker, the Metropolitan Life, and the World Mutual. Those who complied with the resolution, made reports as follows:

The North America Life Insurance Company pay their President, Henry J. Furber, $12,000 salary; the Vice President $6,000, the Secretary $6,000, and other officers and clerks $52,228 20.

The New-York Life Insurance and Trust Company pay their President $12,000 salary, and other officers an aggregate of $24,950.

The Home Life Insurance Company pay their President, George C. Ripley, $10,000 per annum; the Secretary $8,000, and the other officers the balance to make up the total expenses, $31,876 26.

The Universal Life Insurance Company pay their President $9,000 salary, their Vice President $20,967 75, their Secretary $14,234 01, their Actuary $13 394; the total amount paid for salaries is $116,428 15.

The United States Life Insurance Company report the expenses of running the company last year at $181,693 32, the President receiving a salary of $15,000, the Superintendent of Agencies $10,000, and the Secretary $3,500.

The expenses of the Empire State Life Insurance Company last year were $3,200.

The Manhattan Life Insurance Company pays $10,000 salary to the President, Henry Stokes, and $3,887 57 in fees and donations; $6,000 salary to the Vice President, and $2,335 03 in fees; $6,000 salary to the Secretary, and $2,355 03 in fees; $5,000 salary to the Actuary, and $2,355 03 in fees. The total amount paid out to officers and agents was $83,040 11.

The Homeopathic Life Insurance Company, $16,550 75; $2,500 salary is paid the President, D. D. T. Marsnall; $5,000 to the Vice Presidents; $335 to the Secretary, Frank B. Mayhew.

Provident Savings Life Assurance Society of New-York, $18,934 10; salary of the President, $6,550.

Brooklyn Life Insurance Company, $33,310 30; $7,000 salary is paid to the President.

As respects the subject of insurance in the Assembly, it may be said that all attention is now directed to the Insurance Committee. Mr. Purdy's resolutions calling for the appointment of a special committee to investigate the condition of insurance companies, and to report in 30 days what remedial legislation was needed to protect policy-holders, were really adopted by the House, though in the form of Mr. Gilbert's substitute. All the change made from the original was to instruct the standing Committee on Insurance to make such investigation and inquiry as were necessary to ascertain what remedial legislation was needed, and to report by bill within 30 days. A number of gentlemen were disappointed with this, but it seems the best course which could have been adopted. The idea of any committee being able to investigate "the condition of the insurance companies of the State" in 30 days is preposterous. It could not be done in as many weeks. Then there is a strong prejudice against special committees of investigation, founded on past experience with them. On the other hand, the Insurance Committee is one of the best we have had at Albany for years, and it has the confidence of the House. Though the limit of time given for their report is 30 days, the expectation is general, as it is just, that the committee will report a bill within 15 days; and further, that it shall be a measure of a character satisfactory to those whose only desire it is to secure such legislation as will protect the interests of policy-holders. The test of the sincerity of the House in the matter will be made when this bill comes before it for action. Meantime Mr. Graham, of Orange, the Chairman of the Insurance Committee, is the gentleman to whom the attention of all classes of members is directed.

Senator Morrissey to-day introduced a bill, sent to him by ex-Mayor Tiemann, permitting assessments for street improvements in New-York to be paid any time in five years, provided interest is paid semi-annually at the rate of 7 per cent. It prohibits sales of property for unpaid assessments until after the expiration of that time.

Senator Gerard's resolution for an amendment to the Constitution consolidating the Common Pleas and Superior Courts of New-York City with the Supreme Court came up on their final passage, when Mr. Kennaday moved to recommit to allow parties in New-York opposed to the consolidation opportunity to be heard. The motion was carried.

Mr. Wagstaff's bill continuing the payment of the percentage of the foreign insurance fund to the widows and orphans of members of the old Volunteer Fire Department was ordered to a third reading.

The House spent the whole morning in the discussion of a single clause in the Annual Appropriation bill, that making an appropriation for the National Guard. Rather unwisely, the Ways and Means Committee had considerably increased the amount over that appropriated for the same purpose last year, and the result has been a prolonged controversy, which will probably end in a considerable reduction being made. The further consideration of the bill went over till next week.

THE SHADOW OF THE SWORD.

RUSSIAN GENERAL AT PERSIAN HEAD-QUARTERS—TURKISH TROOPS ON THE ASIATIC FRONTIER—REPORT OF THE SULTAN'S ILLNESS UNFOUNDED—THE DATE OF RUSSIA'S ATTACK—THE TURKISH PROVINCES.

LONDON, Feb. 22.—A Vienna dispatch says advices from Tiflis to Feb. 8 have been received. Twelve Russian officers were about to leave for Teheran. A Russian General has been appointed to represent Russia at the Persian head-quarters Turkey is concentrating troops on the Asiatic frontier in consequence of the belief that Persia is concentrating men in accordance with an understanding with Russia. Two hundred movable axletrees have arrived at Kisheneff to be used on the Russian wagons, to adapt them to the gauge of the Roumanian railways.

The Vienna correspondent of a morning paper says the powers continue their efforts at St. Petersburg to induce Russia to discontinue her armaments. These efforts do not progress rapidly in consequence of the delay in answering the Russian circular.

A dispatch from Berlin represents that in consequence of reports of the Sultan's illness, anarchy is prevailing in Government circles at Constantinople. The war party is in the ascendent at St. Petersburg. The date of Russia's attack will mainly depend on the progress of events in Turkey. It is believed that England and Austria, while delaying a formal reply to the Russian circular, will again urge the Porte to carry out the recommendations of the conference. A Vienna dispatch says the British Government seems to have pointed out to Russia, through Lord Loftus, that the precariousness and uncertainty now prevailing make the present moment unfavorable for answering the Russian circular. It has at the same time promised a formal answer when the situation is clearer, and especially when the issue of the negotiations with Servia and Montenegro is ascertained. The other powers, recognizing that that answer, in whatever form it may be given, will be of decisive influence on Eastern, and not unlikely on general European affairs, seem disposed to leave the initiative to England. Russia also appears to recognize the difficulty in which she would be placed if by receiving the answer of the powers immediately she were compelled to decide for peace or war at the present stage of uncertainty and transition.

A letter in the Cologne Gazette from South Russia says a forced loan will probably soon be decreed. A further extension of naturalization has been determined on, but will scarcely be carried out until milder weather. The commanders of the Southern Army have been ordered to victual their corps up until the middle of March at least No movement will be made until then. The future will show whether it is a forward or backward movement, but everything pointed to the former. The War Minister has ordered a large quantity of shrapnel shell for the Western fortresses.

A morning paper says considerable doubt exists whether the debate on the treaty engagements will be resumed in the House of Commons on Friday night. A dispatch from Vienna reports that a fresh Russian circular is expected, showing rather warlike propensities, although at present several Russian papers have been officially cautioned to stop publishing warlike articles. It is rumored that England has confidentially hinted to various Governments that she might change her attitude if Armenia should become the seat of war, and Turkey's territorial integrity in Asia be endangered.

The correspondent of a morning paper telegraphs from Pesth: "If the accounts which I hear are true, that the majority of the officers of the Army on the Pruth have engaged quarters at Jassy, war can no longer be averted."

A dispatch from Vienna states that the Prince of Montenegro claims as a minimum the territorial cession proposed by the Conference. He also desires two fortified islands on Lake Scutari, the port of Spitza, free navigation through Lake Scutari, and along the Bojana to the sea, and the establishment of direct diplomatic relations with Turkey through agents residing in the capital of each country. He offers to pay within 12 years for all the forts and public buildings in the ceded territory, and to secure the return to their homes of all Herzegovinian refugees, whose number he estimates to be 90,000, if the Porte will grant complete amnesty, maintain them until the next harvest, and give them the means of rebuilding their houses and churches and of cultivating the fields.

BELGRADE, Feb. 21.—The elections for the Great Skupitschina have been held throughout the country. The majority of the delegates elected favor peace.

BRUSSELS, Feb. 21.—Le Nord draws attention to the fact that the Porte has not yet answered Roumania's note of Jan. 20, demanding a written declaration that Roumania is not to be included among the Ottoman provinces mentioned in the Turkish Constitution.

CONSTANTINOPLE, Feb. 21.—The Porte has notified its representatives abroad that the health of the Sultan is perfectly satisfactory, and that the rumors of an impending change in the Grand Vizierate are untounded.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

LONDON, Feb. 21.—Finzel's sugar refinery at Bristol will close on Saturday in consequence of the scarcity of raw material and the influence of the French bounty system. About 2,000 persons will be thrown out of employment.

India council bills were allotted to-day at about a penny per rupee reduction. The market for silver to-day was uncertain and flat. The quotation was about 56 pence per ounce.

Earl Fortescue gave notice in the House of Lords to-day that on to-morrow he will call attention to the outbreak of rinderpest in Essex and Yorkshire, and ask the Lord President of the Council what steps have been taken to prevent the spread of the disease.

The Privy Council has issued a notice to-day, stating that the cattle plague has been detected at Bow and Stepney, both within the metropolis, and also at Hull. A fresh outbreak is reported at Hull during the night. It is among stock in the vicinity of the first outbreak, though the entire herd, when the latter occurred, were immediately slaughtered.

PARIS, Feb. 21.—President MacMahon has sanctioned the dismissal of 42 Sub-Prefects.

MADRID, Feb. 21.—A royal decree is published, permitting the return of Carlist refugees. None will be prosecuted unless they offend against the common law. It is stated that the Ministry intend to recommend the King to proclaim general amnesty.

LONDON, Feb. 22.—A morning newspaper says several leading Home Rulers have refused to assist at the funeral of John O'Mahony on the ground that their co-operation would be inconsistent with the Home Rule programme. If the demonstration is to be regarded as in favor of the principles represented by the deceased, none of the Home Rule leaders will take part in it, although prominent men of the party from the principal English towns will attend, but simply as delegates from the Irish population of their districts. Two Irish members of Parliament at least have promised to be present.

BRITISH-AMERICAN POSTAL SERVICE—THE PAPACY.

LONDON, Feb. 22.—The Postmaster General has under consideration the present unsatisfactory arrangements for the conveyance of the mails between Great Britain and the United States. The associated chambers of commerce have strongly represented to him that serious loss will be sustained by merchants in consequence of the non-conveyance of the mails by the swiftest steamers. Post Office officials are now in Liverpool investigating the subject.

A special dispatch from Rome states that in consequence of the decision of the Cardinals that the reassembling of the Vatican Council would be inopportune, the Pope has distributed to them the questions left unsolved by the previous meeting of the council, with the view of determining whether he cannot solve them by his own authority.

THE AUSTRIA-HUNGARY BANK.

LONDON, Feb. 22.—A Pesth dispatch says the differences between Austria and Hungary on the bank question have been finally settled. The Ministers will make this announcement in the Chamber before the end of the week. The general bank council is to consist of three Hungarians and three Austrians, the eight remaining Directors to be freely elected by the shareholders. The Emperor nominates the Governor; the Austrian and Hungarian Governments nominate each a Deputy Governor.

The Standard's Vienna dispatch states that the Vienna Ministry yesterday informed a conference of the Constitutional Party that the definitive conclusion of the compromise negotiations depended on the party's agreement to the foregoing arrangement.

THE MEXICAN ELECTIONS.

ARRIVAL OF GEN. DIAZ IN THE CITY OF MEXICO — ELECTION FRAUDS REPORTED — A COUNTER REVOLUTION CERTAIN.

HAVANA, Feb. 21.—The steamer City of Mexico arrived here from Vera Cruz this afternoon, and brings the following intelligence from the City of Mexico, under date of Feb. 11: Gen. Diaz, arrived here to-day amid great rejoicing. He will probably reorganize also the Ministry. Demitez, Oogazon, and Tagle, three of the most prominent members of the Cabinet have resigned, but acting President Mendez has refused to accept their resignations. Outrageous frauds were committed at an Electoral College organized for Congressional elections. The Tuxtepec-plan partisans now in power formed themselves into a sort of a Returning Board, and counted more votes for their candidates than there were electors, the Chairman stealing 106 votes from the opposite party. The Chairman refused to allow discussion, and the opposition sent for the Governor. Fraud was proved by the Governor calling the roll, whereupon he immediately dissolved the College. A pistol was fired and the Police took possession of the building. Vice President Mendez ordered the reassembling of the College, where the Opposition's charge of fraud was established, although Esperson, a prominent Government leader, was defeated. The Church party is looming up; moderate men retrain from action, and the result will be that either the Church or the lower strata will come into power. Liberals accuse Diaz of leaning toward the Church party. A counter revolution is certain. It is possible that Diaz may prevent disintegration and the ruin of his party by remaining in the capital.

Many prominent politicians are named as candidates for the Chief Justiceship. The Voz de Mexico, the organ of the Catholic party, denounces strongly outrages recently committed on Protestants in different sections. The Diazists rejoice because the United States have received the first installment of the money awarded by the Mixed Commission.

MAJOR GEN. AMOS B. EATON.

A dispatch from New-Haven announces the sudden death last evening from heart disease of Brevet Major Gen. Amos B. Eaton, of the United States Army, while visiting his son, Prof. Eaton, of Yale College. Gen. Eaton was born in New-York, and at the time of his death was 71 years of age. He entered the Military Academy at West Point as a cadet on July 1, 1822, and was graduated No. 36 in a class of 41 on July 1, 1826, at the same time being promoted in the Army to Second Lieutenant of the Second Infantry. In the same class at West Point were a large number of officers who have since distinguished themselves, among them being Gen. Albert Sydney Johnston, Gen. S. P. Heintzleman, Gen. A. J. Pleasonton, Gen. Silas Casey, and E. Kirby Smith. Gen. Eaton was on garrison and recruiting duty at various points until 1834, when he was made First Lieutenant of the Second Infantry. From 1835 to 1837 he was on Commissary duty, and was engaged in the Florida war from the latter year until 1841. On July 7, 1838, he was appointed Commissary of Subsistence with the rank of Captain. During the Canada border disturbances he was on duty on the Northern frontier. From 1841 to 1846 he was in New-York City. When the Mexican war broke out he was appointed chief Commissary of Subsistence of Gen. Taylor's army, being engaged in the battle of Buena Vista. For gallant and meritorious conduct in this battle he was promoted to the rank of Brevet Major. He continued on commissary duty at St. Louis, San Francisco, and New-York until 1861. From the outbreak of the rebellion until 1864 he was Depot Commissary and Purchasing Commissary for the armies in the field, in New-York, and during this time was promoted successively to the ranks of Major, Lieutenant Colonel, Colonel and Brigadier General. On June 29, 1864, as Commissary General he took charge of the Subsistence Bureau at Washington, and on March 13, 1865, "for faithful, meritorious, and distinguished services" during the rebellion he was appointed Brevet Major General. On May 1, 1874, he was placed on the retired list.

AMUSEMENTS.

GENERAL MENTION.

A matinée-concert will be given by Mme. Eastnoff at Steinway Hall, to-day.

The annual performance for the benefit of the Société Française de Bienfaisance occurs at the Academy of Music, Saturday evening, when a delightful opéra comique in three acts, called "Les Dragons de Villars" will be sung by Mlle. Aimée and her associates.

Mr. and Mrs. Feininger gave an interesting concert at Chickering Hall yesterday evening. A delightfully fresh and melodious sonata for violin and piano—Opus 21—by Niels Gade, was the first number on the programme, and afterward Mr. Feininger played with considerable effect, if not with absolute maestria, Bach's Chaconne and Wieniawski's "Légende," and Mme. Feininger sang tastefully several songs by Schubert and Kalliwoda.

INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22—1 A. M.—For Thursday throughout the Atlantic States, warmer south-east to south-west winds, stationary or higher pressure, and clear or partly cloudy weather.

ANOTHER OF MR. HEWITT'S CHARGES.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—Mr. Hoar, since the announcement that Mr. Hewitt intended to make a public attack upon him as a Commissioner, charging a breach of pledges made when the Joint Committee was framing the Electoral bill, is said to have seen every member of that committee, save Springer, and they all deny that there is any foundation for Hewitt's charges as announced. Mr. Hewitt has not seen fit to make the attack, of which notice was given, and probably for the reason that he has discovered it to be a case similar to the New-York Post Office charge, in which he received so much ridicule.

THE CHARLESTON PARADE DEFERRED.

CHARLESTON, Feb. 21.—Preparations had been made here by the Washington Light Infantry to celebrate the 22d with great éclat. There was to have been a parade of the battalion and many escorting companies, an oration, and other exercises at the Academy of Music, and a banquet in the evening, but in deference to Gov. Hampton's proclamation, issued in consequence of the President's order, the whole celebration of the day has been postponed.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 21.—The reason given for the President's interference to prevent a military observance of Washington's birthday in Charleston, S. C., is that official and other representations were made to him that serious disturbances from such demonstration were apprehended, owing to the excited state of the parties, which might extend to other localities.

STOCK GAMBLING A PENAL OFFENSE.

HARRISBURG, Feb. 21.—Two bills providing for the prevention of stock gambling were introduced in the State Senate to-day. These proposed measures make jobbing in stocks a penal offense in cases where the parties so dealing cannot show a certificate signed by the President of the Board of Brokers, testifying to the actual possession of the stocks; or where the stock itself is not transmitted when offered for sale.

THE FRENCH JUDICIARY.

A POLITICAL QUESTION OF UNUSUAL IMPORTANCE.

RESULT OF A LIBEL SUIT AGAINST A PROVINCIAL NEWSPAPER—A MEMBER OF THE MIXED COMMISSION INVOLVED—INTERFERENCE OF THE MINISTER OF JUSTICE—LAW MAKERS AND THOSE WHO INTERPRET THEM—A CAMPAIGN AGAINST THE MAGISTRATES.

PARIS, Monday, Feb. 5, 1877.

A month ago no one dreamed that the suit for libel entered against the Avenir de la Haute-Saône would lead to a political incident of the first importance, for at the moment, relatively speaking, it appeared to be a minor affair of no great significance. The President of the Besançon Court of Appeals brought a suit against this journal for defamation, and at first the matter did not seem of sufficient consequence to warrant a paragraph. The Avenir attacked Judge Willemot in violent terms, and he made no reply. For some time he paid no attention to the articles written about him. Emboldened by this, perhaps, the journal charged him with being incompetent to sit upon the bench, he having been an accomplice in a very great crime. The crime in question was the Coup d'Etat, and M. Willemot was an accomplice because he was a member of the Mixed Commission for his department after the event. When order was restored, after the 2d December, 1851, the Emperor hastened to consult the people by plebiscite. He gave his reasons for the act—the main being the discovery of a plot to restore the Monarchy, he himself having been approached by the Orleanists with splendid offers if he would aid them in another attempt like that which put Louis Philippe upon the throne. The people were asked to give their approval to it, and 7,000,000 out of the 9,000,000 of voters responded by voting in the affirmative. Since 1798 every change in the Government of France has been by violence or through illegality. The Emperor declared after the plebiscite that he had gone beyond the limits of legality, but had gone back to it. A large majority of the people had given him absolution; a small minority refused to accept the new order of things. What was to be done with them? The entire country being under martial law, the fire-eaters replied: "Shoot the most of them, send the rest to Cayenne." The courts-martial would have made short work of them, in fact, if the Emperor had not interfered, and from this interference came the Mixed Commissions. A commission of military men and officials was formed in every department, and to them were joined the leading magistrates, the idea being that they would restrain the hotheads, and see impartial justice done. Such was the case, in fact, and it was owing to the interference of these legal men that so few were exiled and that so many of those exiled were allowed to return to France in a few months' time.

M. Willemot was a member of the Mixed Commission for Besançon, and if he had acted badly he would certainly have won the resentment of all his fellow-citizens. But owing to his pleas before this tribunal, and to his interference in behalf of persons when appeals were made to him, nearly every prominent man was going about his business in a few days' time. At the first election he was chosen a member of the Conseil General, a position equal to a member of one of your State Legislatures, and from that day to this he has been regularly rechosen, and has been constantly honored with the confidence of his fellow-citizens. This would not have been the case, assuredly, if the people had regarded his action in the Mixed Commission as a criminal act. M. Willemot was greatly moved by this charge against him, and could not pass it by as he had the other attacks. He entered suit against the journal, and it was acquitted. Such a judgment was a serious matter, and the magistracy was deeply involved, for a large number of the men now on the bench were also members of the Mixed Commissions in 1851. M. Willemot appealed to the tribunal of Besançon, and there the first judgment was entirely reversed. This caused an excitement in the republican ranks, and the Procureur General, who concluded in favor of M. Willemot, was dismissed by order of the Minister of Justice. Thenceforth the affair of M. Willemot became a party question, and entered the political domain. An appeal to the Cour de Cassation was then made, and an interpellation was presented in the Chamber respecting the measure taken against the Procureur General. It became, in fact, one of the burning questions of the day.

But this was not the first time since the fall of the Empire that the question of the Mixed Commissions came up. On the 25th of March, 1871, M. Dutaure, then Garde des Sceaux, pronounced in the tribune of the Assembly the following words:

"The magistrates of the Mixed Commissions judged without knowing, they condemned without hearing, and they—men charged to defend the law—invented penalties for crimes unrecognized in the Code. * * * It was in the Cabinet of the Prefect that these men—all three functionaries—pronounced secretly, mysteriously, all the odious condemnations, against which there was no appeal. I pause to ask if such a thing was ever before seen in the history of our magistracy? And these same men now come here to invoke the principle of immovability for the magistracy."

This speech was made in defense of the very principle in question, but M. Dufaure took occasion to make an attack upon the Mixed Commissions. On the 12th of January last, when the case in question came before the Assembly, M. Martel, Garde des Sceaux, spoke as follows:

"To approve of the conduct of these magistrates, who are charged with the execution of the law, and who violate it, is a thing that I can never permit. We can never forget, in the midst of the misfortunes of our country, the evils wrought by the Mixed Commissions. They tore thousands of innocent men from their families; they invented new penalties; they took from their victims every means of defense. It was simple commission justice—the most odious, the most abominable of all."

The Chamber highly approved the words of M. Martel, and voted an order of the day associating the sentiments of the Chamber respecting the Mixed Commissions with those expressed by the mouth-piece of the Government. M. Martel, the Minister of Justice, declared, therefore, that he would not allow any one to defend the members of the Mixed Commissions, declaring them detestable institutions, which had been judged and condemned by the public conscience. This was said in defense of the Minister's conduct in the case of M. Bailleul, the Procureur General dismissed for his defense of M. Willemot. And to this the Supreme Court of France replies in its judgment of Saturday last:

"There can be no manner of doubt about the legality of the Mixed Commissions and of their acts, expressly consecrated by decrees having all the force of law.

That the law does not permit Judges to consider as a crime participation in acts prescribed, authorized, and maintained by it."

It will thus be seen that the case of M. Willemot has raised a very pretty political quarrel. The Court of Cassation has approved the judgment of the Besançon tribunal against the Avenir, and also the conduct of M. Bailleul, who was dismissed by the Minister of Justice for that very cause. It says that the Mixed Commissions were perfectly legal, that they were instituted and ordered by decrees having the force of law, that the magistracy cannot permit participation in their acts to be qualified as criminal. M. Martel, the Minister of Justice, says that he can never permit the defense of these acts. But what can he do? Will he break up the Supreme Court, or will he bow before its rendering? The Republicans take a ground that suggests to my mind a possible analogy with that of certain members of the Congressional Commission for examining into the Electoral vote. They pretend, first, that the magistrate charged with the execution of the law, cannot be above the legislators who make the law, and that the voice of the latter must be supreme. And since the Assembly has pronounced against the illegal Commissions, the magistrate must bow before the decision. Secondly, the Republicans urge that the magistrates who rendered the decision in the Supreme Court were themselves members of the Mixed Commission, and hence incompetent to sit upon the case. It is reported this evening that M. Martel is going to resign, but I hardly think he will; but the Left will use this incident in the campaign they have undertaken against the immovability of the magistracy. The object is to get the magistrates elected—a very bad principle in my humble opinion.

A POINTED CARD.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 17, 1877.

To the Editor of the Cincinnati Commercial:

The dispatch hence in the Cincinnati Enquirer of yesterday, charging ex-Gov. Kellogg, Congressmen Durrell and Morey, of Louisiana, and myself with having arranged by telegraph an assassination programme, awaiting tidings of the result, and received a rebuff from the President, is an infamous lie from rind to core. The gentlemen named were aware of the threats rife against the lives of Gov. Packard and others, but wholly unprepared to believe the crime would really be attempted. The Enquirer scribe can not mitigate the villainy by ascribing a plot to the Republicans mentioned. Official information from my office discloses that the miscreant was a tool of the insurgent Nicholls crew, whose "official organ," the New-Orleans Democrat, commended the act, both on the same and on the ensuing day, as on the 15th of last month it editorially incited it thus: "The patience of the people is well-nigh exhausted, and if they are forced into a conflict their wrath will be difficult to restrain, and we for one hope no hand will be able to restrain it." It advises its partisans to "let the full weight of their vengeance fall upon the leaders, * * * and to follow Packard into the hotel, and, if need be, into the Custom-house, and hang him from its highest window."

Episcopal Bishop Wilmer, a vicious Democrat, now here, from Louisiana, predicted on the 14th inst. Packard's assassination should the Electoral Commission declare Louisiana for Hayes.

Nay, more: Duncan F. Kenner, also here, whom ex-Gov. Wells charges with an attempt to bribe him as a Returning Officer, was heard to declare, upon receipt of the news of the crime: "Pity the —— hound Packard wasn't killed." He is an old and leading Louisiana Democrat.

You are at liberty to use this communication as may seem proper.

Very respectfully, your obedient servant,

J. R. G. PITKIN,
United States Marshal, District of Louisiana.

AMERICAN PEDESTRIANS ABROAD.

DANIEL O'LEARY'S SIX DAYS' WALK AT LIVERPOOL—CONTINUED SUCCESS OF THE CHAMPION OF THE WORLD.

From the Liverpool Post, Feb. 5.

The great six days' walking match at the Admiral Street Skating Rink has come to a termination, and if the scene which the interior of the rink presented at midnight on Saturday may be taken as a criterion, then the love for pedestrianism has certainly reached a very high pitch in Liverpool. The contest which has been going on for the past week has been of special interest to the sporting community from the fact that one of O'Leary's antagonists—and, as he has proved himself to be, the most formidable antagonist of the two—was a local man. The match was for a wager offered by a gentleman who undertook to find two Lancashire men who, walking for three days each, would beat the distance covered by O'Leary in six days. The two competitors were Biggs, of St. Helens, and Smythe, of Liverpool; and, if they were successful in their undertaking, they were to be presented with £100; while if either of them covered a greater distance than O'Leary in the first 48 hours he was to win £50. Biggs was the first to enter into the contest; but, as the result showed, he was a rather weak opponent. At midnight on Wednesday, when his time was up, Biggs had only succeeded in walking 133 miles, while O'Leary, in the same time, had covered a distance of 212 miles. In Smythe, however, the redoubtable American found a much more powerful antagonist, who, notwithstanding the comparative failure of his predecessor, entered into the contest with great spirit and determination. The local pedestrian had not only to fight against "Yeoman worthy of his steel," but had to do his best to recover Biggs' lost ground. This he succeeded in accomplishing to a very creditable extent; and he covered in his first 48 hours the distance traveled by O'Leary in his first 48 hours from Monday morning—namely, 153 miles—with about an hour to spare. Smythe accordingly won the £50 bet which depended on the respective distances of the three competitors in the time above mentioned. At midnight on Friday O'Leary had walked 344 miles from his start, and at the same hour Smythe had covered 155 miles from Wednesday night, which, added to the 133 miles traveled by Biggs in the first three days, made a total of 286 miles against O'Leary's 342. This left the latter still 56 miles ahead; but it is due to Smythe to state that he had recovered nearly 20 miles of the ground lost by Biggs. As the contest drew to a close the excitement grew stronger, and during the whole of Saturday the rink was crowded with members of the sporting fraternity. Toward evening the inclosure presented an unusually animated appearance, and though long before the finish of the match it was obvious that Smythe would be easily beaten, the latter did not lose heart, and stuck to his work with dogged determination. From the commencement he maintained a good, steady pace, and walked with a light, jaunty step. O'Leary, who was quite aware that he could afford to take it easy, nevertheless displayed remarkable freshness and vigor till the close. Indeed, as the midnight hour approached, he walked in such a quiet, easy-going style that one might naturally have thought he was only at the beginning of a six days' march instead of at the end. His step was firm and elastic, and it seemed as if he could have gone on for other six days. The wonderful thing about O'Leary's walking is that while he appears to be going at an exceedingly easy pace, he covers the ground very rapidly. He has a beautiful style of walking; he is one of the most modest and undemonstrative pedestrians we have seen, and there is none of that bounce and dash and tossing of the head about him which unfortunately is the characteristic of Weston. The fastest mile walked by O'Leary on Saturday was one he did in 10 minutes. The antagonists stopped walking at 11:50 at which time O'Leary had covered a distance of 418 miles, and Smythe 195, which, added to Biggs' 133, made 328 miles. O'Leary was thus the winner by 90 miles. It will also be seen that the latter walked 74 miles between midnight on Friday and midnight on Saturday, while Smythe, during the same time, traveled a distance of 40 miles. The result of the contest was received with great enthusiasm by the large gathering which crowded the rink, and it would be almost impossible to describe the scenes. The utmost excitement prevailed. The crowd cheered vociferously, and jostled, crushed, and squeezed each other in the most frantic manner, in their attempt to catch a glimpse of the sturdy, dark-complexioned American, the hero of the hour. At the close of the contest the people shouted vigorously for O'Leary, and several men immediately in front of the box would be satisfied with nothing short of shaking hands with the plucky American, who good-naturedly gratified their desire in this direction.

The match between O'Leary and Weston next month is looked forward to with bright anticipations, and the general opinion seems to be that "the champion of the world" will give his country man a thorough beating.

THE PHILADELPHIA VICTORY.

The Philadelphia Press of the 21st inst. says:

"A substantial Republican victory crowns the work of yesterday. All the leading Republican candidates have been elected, ranging by majorities from 2,755 to 7,451, and the Select and Common Councils are largely with the Republican Party, as well as the other departments. This, in a word, is the story of the contest. Mayor Stokley had to contend with every sort of malign influence, and yet, he bravely fought his way through. The result leaves us in possession of the citadel, but it also leaves us in possession of many admonitions. The Republican Party of Philadelphia is not like the Democratic Party of New-York, which swallows all the bitter doses of the Democratic leaders, and fulfills all their orders. Except upon national issues, the Republican Party of Philadelphia is the most sensitive and censorious of all public bodies, and in this respect, perhaps, it carries its criticism of its own local candidates to extremes. Now that Mayor Stokley and the Republican Party are seated in the high places of the city, they will not fail to consult this peculiar Republican sentiment, and we believe they are equal to it. Mr. Stokley himself is a brave and honest Philadelphian. He knows precisely what is expected of him. He will not be unmindful of this expectation, and we are quite sure that he will continue to address himself to the complaints, whether right or wrong, of his great constituency. While considering the fact that the Democratic Party, with some most honorable exceptions, constituted the great bulk of the vote thrown against him yesterday, he cannot close his eyes to the truth that very many Republicans opposed him on various grounds. Now, Mr. Stokley is too wise and considerate a man not to anticipate these Republican objections, and to show them in his future administration that he is equal to all their expectations. It is quite right to say that there can be no real reform in this great city outside the lines of the Republican Party. Even Mr. Caven went to bed last night perfectly convinced of this axiom. He trusted Democracy, and they distrusted him. He has tried to destroy his great party in an hour of its extremest peril, and he will come back to it, we trust, with the assurance that no true Republican can expect to cure the errors of his own party by joining the rebel Democracy."

SERIOUS RAILROAD ACCIDENT.

LOWELL, Feb. 21.—The 6 o'clock evening train from Boston, while running at the rate of 35 miles an hour, struck a large stone which had been placed across the track near Billerica. The engine and tender were thrown down an embankment and ruinously damaged, and two passenger coaches thrown across the tracks, blocking them up. Three or four passengers were injured, none fatally. The engineer and fireman jumped, and escaped with slight bruises.

GENERAL TELEGRAPH NEWS

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

BOSTON, Feb. 21.—The Railroad Commissioners who have officially investigated the strike on the Boston and Maine Railroad have made a report in which they take strong ground against the Brotherhood of Locomotive Engineers. Charles Francis Adams, Jr., who is Chairman of the Board of Commissioners, has been long known as a bitter enemy to the secret organization which in a measure controls the railroad travel of the country, and probably no man actually connected with that branch of industry has given the railroad system of the United States and the world more careful consideration. After reviewing the correspondence between the dissatisfied engineers and their employers, and analyzing the evidence taken during the hearings had before the commission, the report comes to treat of the principle underlying strikes on railroads. On Chief Arthur, of the brotherhood, the report is particularly severe. It says: "In language the significance of which it is charitable to suppose he did not fully appreciate, he, a citizen of Ohio, chief of a secret organization having ramifications in Massachusetts, has ventured to intimate that under existing circumstances it depended on him alone whether the movement on the whole railroad system of the State should not be brought to a standstill. A power which the Legislature itself would not dare to exercise, an alien to our laws claims to hold. Certainly if for reasons of accuracy or better education the locomotive engineers of Massachusetts were as a class of English or German instead of American birth, our people would hardly tolerate the presence of an emissary of the Queen or Emperor who proclaimed and threatened to exercise such a power over them. It is not easy to see where the distinction lies. Our railroad corporations are wholly subject to the laws of Massachusetts and cannot escape from them, and there is assuredly no reason why an organization which speedily proclaims a practical power of stopping the whole action of these corporations should not also be subject to those laws or else cease to exist within the limits of the State. If the issue is to come in this shape, the sooner the more squarely it is presented the better."

The Commissioners believe they speak within bounds and say only what it is their duty to say when they express their belief that the condition of affairs disclosed to our railroad system, as the result of the strike of the 12th inst., is wholly incompatible with the public interests. And again, undoubtedly the employes of a corporation have a right to leave its service. They can do so singly or in a body. The community, however, has also rights in the matter. Those employes have no right to take out trains loaded with innocent travelers, perhaps, as in the case of the recent trunk strike in the most inclement season of an inclement climate, with the deliberate intention, in certain contingencies, of stopping the train and abandoning it at a given hour. A pilot might as well strike and abandon his ship on a lee shore. If such an act is not a criminal offense, it should be made one. It, however, employes in reasonable and proper manner, with a due regard to their obligations to the public, have the right to leave the service or the organization, on the other hand the corporation has an equal right to go into the labor market and employ substitutes in the place of those who have so left its service, and those substitutes are entitled to protection in working for it. The commission suggest to the Legislature the enactment of penal statutes to cover the following offenses:

First—The abandonment by locomotive engineers of their locomotives upon railroads, in furtherance of any combination for a strike, except at the regular schedule destination of such locomotives.

Second—The obstructions of a railroad or the injury or obstruction of the property of any railroad corporation in the furtherance or the object of a strike.

Third—The interference with a railroad employe while in the performance of his duties or on the premises of the company.

Fourth—The refusal of any locomotive engineer, or railroad employe, in furtherance of the object of a strike, to aid in the movement upon the tracks of the corporation employing him of the cars of other corporations.

TERRIBLE BOILER EXPLOSION.

FOUR MEN KILLED AND NINE SERIOUSLY INJURED—MIRACULOUS ESCAPE OF A BOY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 21.—A frightful accident occurred this afternoon about 3 o'clock, at Middleport, on the Ohio River. The boiler in the Clifton nail-keg factory exploded with great force, instantly killing four men and injuring nine others, several of them fatally. The building, which was a large one, is a total wreck. Morgan Barker, a boy, was blown a distance of 75 feet and escaped unhurt. His fearful flight was witnessed by people on the opposite side of the river. Large pieces of boiler were blown 200 yards from the building. The names of the killed are as follows: George Riley, Adam Seil, Christopher Mason, and John Brown. The injured are: Andrew Finemore, fireman, severely scalded; Homer Barker, badly scalded and bruised, and will die; George Withers and Fred Lukehart, cut and bruised, not seriously; G. W. Oliver, slightly bruised; A. A. Holland, one of the proprietors, dangerously hurt internally; Anthony Hyssell, both arms broken and shoulder dislocated; S. Maxwell, cut in the eye and on the head and bruised upon the breast.

FEEDING UPON HUMAN FLESH.

A DREADFUL STORY OF SHIPWRECK—THIRTY-TWO DAYS WITHOUT A DROP OF WATER—DRINKING THE BLOOD OF THE DEAD.

BOSTON, Feb. 21.—A letter was received in this city yesterday from Capt. Kaue, of the American schooner F. E. McDonald, dated at Goree, on the west coast of Africa, Jan. 24, in which he says that on his outward passage from Boston, whence he sailed Dec. 17, he fell in with the wreck of the British bark Maria, Capt. Grayson, having on board two survivors of a crew of 14 men, the others having perished from exposure and famine. The wreck was discovered in latitude 37° 23', longitude 32° 30', with the masts gone and full of water. The two men were taken on board the schooner, but one of them died in four hours from the time of the rescue. From the sole survivor it was ascertained that the bark was bound from Dubuy, Ga., to Belfast, Ireland; that she sprung a leak in a gale, and filled with water, so that it was impossible to save any provisions or fresh water. The lumber with which the vessel was loaded prevented her from sinking, but the weight of the masts turned the vessel on her beam-ends, until the masts broke away, when she righted and the men regained the deck. Having no food or water, however, they soon began to die of starvation, and as soon as one died the rest subsisted upon the dead body, and so on until only two were left. The survivor, whose name is James McLaughlin, and who belongs to Belfast, Ireland, says that only small portions of the dead bodies could be eaten. No one was killed, but the moment one died the survivors cut the throat of the deceased and drank the blood, and then divided the heart and brains. It was 32 days from the time the disaster occurred until the wreck was sighted by the schooner, and during all that time the crew had not a drop of water or any food other than the dead bodies or their shipmates.

MARIETTA AND CINCINNATI RAILROAD.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 21.—The annual meeting of the stockholders of the Marietta and Cincinnati Railroad was held here to-day, and the following officers were elected: President, John King; Treasurer, W. T. McClintock; General Superintendent, W. W. Peabody. The President's report shows a decrease in the earnings of $25,000, and an increase of expenses of $1,800, as compared with last year.

THE UNIVERSITY OF BUFFALO.

BUFFALO, Feb. 21.—The third annual meeting of the Alumni Association of the Medical Department of the University of Buffalo was held yesterday, at which addresses were made by President W. H. Potter, of Batavia, N. Y., and Prof. James P. White, of Buffalo. The thirty-first annual Commencement exercises in St. James' Hall last evening attracted a vast audience. Dr. Frank H. Hamilton, of New-York, delivered the address to the Alumni, and the address to the graduates was delivered by Prof. E. V. Stoddard, of Rochester, N. Y. At the close of the exercises the medical men sat down to a banquet.

THE DOMINION BUDGET.

SPEECH OF THE FINANCE MINISTER IN THE CANADIAN PARLIAMENT—RETROGRESSION OF IMPORTS—THE ESTIMATES FOR 1877—STATE OF AGRICULTURE—AN ECONOMICAL ADMINISTRATION.

OTTAWA, Feb. 21.—In his budget speech before the Dominion Parliament to-day Mr. Cartwright said that the maximum expenditure of the Dominion had, in his opinion, been reached in 1876. In that year the expenditures were $34,488,000, while the revenues only amounted to $32,587,000, leaving a deficit of $1,900,000. Many items in the expenditure account were exceptional and temporary, and therefore the existing state of things might fairly be regardad as abnormal. Had the harvest of 1876 not proved so far below the average the calculations of the last budget speech would have been fully verified. The decrease in the revenue in 1876 had been almost exclusively in customs reduction, which was from $15,351,000 in 1875 to $12,823,000. The excise on the other hand had increased and other sources of revenue had fairly held their own, but it would be seen that the loss from customs amounted to $2,500,000, or much more than the entire deficit. It was only the enormous retrogression of imports that had interfered with the calculations as to the revenue that had been made as a basis of calculation as to the future.

The estimates for 1877, he pointed out, were nominally $100,000 higher than those of the previous year, namely $23,167,000, as against $23,031,000, but something over $100,000 was due to gross entries, and did not actually enhance expenses. The necessity for adding to the public debt had entailed a charge of nearly half a million, but it was a subject of congratulation that the expenditure for public services, classed in public accounts as ordinary expenditure, would not exceed $6,500,000, or $2,000,000

IN MEMORY OF WASHINGTON.

BUSINESS TO BE GENERALLY SUSPENDED—A WELCOME WITH SALUTES AND THE RINGING OF CHIMES—PARADES, DINNERS, RECEPTIONS, AND OTHER ENTERTAINMENTS—THE MARTHA WASHINGTON TEA PARTY AND RECEPTION.

The 145th anniversary of the birthday of Washington will be observed to-day with scarcely less ceremony than that with which it was kept in February, 1876, the Centennial anniversary of Independence. The streets will wear an unusual week-day aspect, as there will be an almost total suspension of ordinary business, and the majority of citizens will turn themselves to the pleasure of making the most—and it is to be hoped best—use of the brief hours between daylight and midnight in remembering properly and agreeably the day which brought one most revered patriot, soldier, and citizen into existence. The City Hall will throw out that wealth of bunting which finds the breeze without prejudice as readily on the birthday of Washington as on St. Patrick's day. From the fortifications in the harbor the national ensign will be run up and saluted with rounds of thundering cannon. There have been no preparations for a military parade except by one or two organizations. During the morning the Seventy-first Regiment will be reviewed at Union square. The rapidly disappearing veterans of 1812 will assemble in the morning and parade in their old-fashioned uniforms and at noon will have a dinner at the Sturtevant House. The banks, exchanges, and public offices, with the exception perhaps of the County Clerk's Office, the office of the Clerk of the Court of Common Pleas, and the Sheriff's Office, will be closed. The Post Office will close for both foreign and domestic mails at 10 A. M., and the Custom-house, which is to be opened at 9 A. M. for the entry and clearance of vessels, will close at 10 o'clock. The chimes of St. Thomas', Grace, and Trinity churches will announce the holiday with programmes of patriotic and old-time music.

At noon Mr. James E. Ayliffe and Mr. Thirlwall will perform a varied programme on the Trinity Church chimes.

The students of Eastman's College, at Poughkeepsie, will come to this City by a special train at 9:30 A. M., and spend the day in seeing and dining and tramping.

The Order of United American Mechanics will hold a celebration at the Cooper Institute at 1 o'clock.

At 2:15 P. M. there will be an entertainment at St. John's College, Fordham, by the St. John's College Dramatic Association, for the benefit of the St. Vincent de Paul Conference, of Fordham. At 3 o'clock the inaugural exercises of the Electro Medical College will be held in Chickering Hall, Fifth avenue. Besides celebrating the one hundred and forty-fifth anniversary of the birthday of Washington, the sixty-fifth anniversary of the birth of the founder and President of the College will be observed. The annual reception of the Seventy-first Regiment, N. G. S. N. Y., will be held at the armory, Broadway and Thirty-fifth street, in the evening.

The Veteran Association of the Eighth Regiment, (Washington Greys,) N. Y. S. N. G., will meet in the evening at the regimental armory, No. 226 West Twenty-third street.

There will be a patriotic celebration in the Eleventh Ward Boys' Lodging-house, No. 700 East Eleventh street. An address will be delivered by Hon. John R. Brady, Judge of the Supreme Court; there will be patriotic songs and recitations by the boys. Judge Hooper C. Van Vorst will preside, and the exercises will begin at 7:45 o'clock.

The annual celebration of Washington's Birthday by the students of the Cooper Union will take place in the Hall of the Union at 8 o'clock this evening, under the direction of Mr. Fitzgerald Tisdale, Ph. D.

At the Macdougal Street Baptist Church there will be a fair and festival during the afternoon and evening.

A lecture on "Communipaw and Vicinity in the Olden Time" will be delivered by Hon. Charles H. Winfield, in the rooms of the Young Men's Christian Association, Greenville.

The thirty-third anniversary of the Brooklyn Institute will take place in the hall of the institute at 8 o'clock this evening. The annual report will be read by Mr. Jesse C. Smith, the Vice President; an oration will be delivered by Rev. Joseph T. Duryea, D.D., and the prizes will be distributed by Prof. V. T. L. Boyle, N. A. D.

THE MARTHA WASHINGTON RECEPTION.

The preparation for the reception at the Academy of Music and at Nilsson Hall, for the benefit of St. John's Guild, promises to be a sumptuous success. The costumes are said to be exceedingly rich, the decorations and appointments have been prepared with a lavish hand, the number of boxes and admission tickets disposed of assure the financial success of the affair, and the list of distinguished guests who will honor it by their presence will be large. Among those who will undoubtedly be present are the Russian Grand Dukes Alexis and Constantine and their suites, Commodore Nicholson, Gen. Hancock and staff, Gen. Sharer and staff, ex-President Lerdo, of Mexico, Mayor Ely, and a large number of officers of the United States Army and Navy, and a number of prominent members of Congress. During the evening the combined bands of Grafmila, Downing, and Bernstein will play the Russian national hymn.

THE DEATH OF KATY REIDEL.

The inquest to determine the manner of the death of Katy Reidel, was continued last evening in the Police station at Stapleton, Staten Island. The father of the dead girl did not appear, as it was expected he would. During the proceedings a telegram was received by Coroner Dempsey announcing that he would arrive on Staten Island early this morning. Louis Hansen, an elderly gentleman, was the first witness examined. He testified that he lived at No. 144 Thirty-second street, New-York, and was a nurse agent, that is, he provides families with nurses; he knew Katy Reidel, having met her for the first time in 1874; she then told him she had come from Pennsylvania where her child had recently died at the age of two months; he took her to his home, and after three days procured her a situation with a Mrs. Rosenbury, at No. 44 St. Mark's place; she visited witness a second time on Dec. 20, 1875; she gave her name as Catharine Weldspiel; she also stated she was married, and that her maiden name was Reidel; the second time she called she carried a boy baby, seven weeks old, in her arms; she then said if her husband could get work she would not take a situation; she left witness' house and he did not hear or her again until May 5, 1876; on that date he procured her a situation as a wet-nurse; a man representing himself as her husband called at witness' office several times and asked for her; she told witness that her husband was a good man, but jealous, and continually looked after her in her various situations; witness refused to allow her to take a situation in West Houston street, because of the character of the street. Witness here recognized Weldspiel as the man who called at his house, and represented himself as Katy's husband.

John A. Vandam and William J. White, two young residing in New-Brighton, testified that shortly before 1 o'clock on the morning of Sunday, Feb. 11, they met a large man on Central avenue, near to the old Quarantine Ground; he appeared to them suddenly, from behind a large tree, and sauntered slowly, keeping his face turned from them until they passed him; then he quickened or lessened his pace in accordance with theirs, keeping close behind them as if desirous to hear their conversation; in this way he followed them to their homes.

William Weldspiel, being recalled, indignantly denied that he decoyed Katy away from Boston and that he paid her board while he left his family to the charity of strangers. In response to a question from the Coroner, he said: "I did what I could for Katy, and she helped me and my family when we were in want; when she had her baby in New-York I helped her; I gave her some money, and I told people she was my wife; did it because she asked me and said it would help her; I would do it again—I would give my life if Katy could be made alive now." In response to the questions of a juryman, he explained how he first took an interest in the girl. She aided his wife in her household affairs and he paid her, and when Mrs. Weldspiel went to Germany he paid Katy's passage, so that she could be a companion to his wife; Katy and her family had some trouble and she refused to live at home, and took refuge in Weldspiel's family; he sent her home several times, but finally she left her parents and took a situation in a hotel at Cherrytown, Mass.; Weldspiel visited her there, and tried to induce her to return home, as he thought her place was not a fit one for a young, impulsive, and confiding girl. On her return to Boston he helped her with such small sums of money as he could spare, in order that she might live respectably until she could procure a situation, as she was determined not to live among "those lowers," as she termed her family. Katy had not visited Mrs. Weldspiel in New-York within two years, he said, because she did not want her to know that she had a second time become a mother without being married.

The inquest was here adjourned until this morning at 10 o'clock, when it will be resumed in the village Hall of New-Brighton, Staten Island.

LOW CABLE TOLLS.

Mr. Cyrus Field said to a TIMES reporter yesterday that the Cable Company have under consideration a proposal to reduce the cable tolls to the general public to the rate of 25 cents, gold, per word. Personally, he was in favor of trying the reduced rate for a year, and then if the result should not be a fair profit upon the amount of money invested, he would make a public statement of the percentage of profit derived from the various tariffs of the past 11 years, and raise the tolls thereafter to a paying basis. He believed that the proposed reduction will be favorably considered, and that the reduced tariff will go into effect before long.

INSURANCE MEN IN TROUBLE.

THE PRESIDENTS OF THE NATIONAL CAPITOL AND NEW-JERSEY MUTUAL LIFE INSURANCE COMPANIES TO BE CRIMINALLY PROSECUTED—THE CASE OF THE CONTINENTAL.

The New-Jersey Secretary of State, Henry C. Kelsey, has instigated criminal proceedings against J. H. Stedwell, President of the defunct New-Jersey Mutual Life Insurance Company, of Newark, and Benjamin Noyes, President of the so-called National Capitol Life Insurance Company, to whom Stedwell transferred all the assets of the Newark company. The ground of the proceeding is for conspiracy to defraud the policy-holders, and Stedwell is to be held also for perjury, in having sworn falsely in his annual statement of the condition of his company, filed in the Secretary of State's office. The complaints were make before Justice Jessup, in Newark, and officers were at once sent to this City to get a requisition from Gov. Robinson for the apprehension of the accused. The officials experienced some delay in securing the needed papers in Albany, but they have been secured. Mr. Kelsey expected that the two Presidents would be arrested yesterday, and that the prisoners would arrive in Newark last evening. Up to 10 o'clock no return had been made to the warrants. It is learned from other sources that Stedwell and Noyes were seen in the act of leaving this City two or three days ago. It is suspected that they got wind of Mr. Kelsey's designs, and are in concealment somewhere.

So far as could be learned yesterday no further negotiations have taken place between ex-Gov. Parker, the Receiver of the New-Jersey Mutual, and Benjamin Noyes, President of the National Capitol, looking to the transfer of the assets of the former company to the custody of the Receiver.

It is understood that Mrs. Juliet D. T. Frost, the wife of Luther W. Frost, has communicated with the Receiver of the Continental, and requests that the papers in the suit against her husband be served upon her counsel.

An order was yesterday obtained from Justice Gilbert by Coudert Brothers, counsel for William R. Grace, Receiver of the Continental Life Insurance Company, to William Fullerton, of counsel for John C. Anderson, directing him to hand over to the petitioner the $102,000 of bonds and mortgages which he received from the New-Jersey Mutual Life Insurance Company as a settlement of the suit instituted for their recovery. These bonds and mortgages are a portion of the $314,000 transferred to the New-Jersey Company in consideration of the reinsurance of the risks of the Continental.

AN OLD MISER'S SECRET.

Police Capt. McCullagh, of the Fifteenth Precinct, was called upon Tuesday morning to make an investigation into a singular case. Michael Boylan, a native of the west of Ireland, bowed down with age and entering upon "second childishness," has been suspected for some time by the people of his immediate neighborhood of having secretly murdered his aged sister. He had occupied two apartments in a house belonging to Sheriff Reilly, situated on the north-east corner of Thirteenth street and First avenue for over 15 years, and until last April his widowed sister, Katharine Gilligan, had lived with him. About that time she disappeared, and nothing has been seen or heard of her since. Michael, who is well known as "old Mickey Boylan" in the neighborhood, and who has been frequently ridiculed and made a butt for jokes, has always answered when questioned in regard to the whereabouts of his sister, that she had entered the service of a family up town as a cook; that he had forgotten the street in which the family resided, and that he supposed she kept away from him because as she had often said, she didn't want him to follow her. This explanation of the woman's disappearance was received for a while, but latterly grave misgivings have been aroused as to what has become of her. Adjoining the rooms of Michael, on the same floor, his brother Thomas Boylan and his wife, also an aged couple, occupy apartments. During the past few months they have become uneasy on account of the prolonged absence of their relative and are very anxious to clear up the mystery of her disappearance. Michael is believed by some to be insane, although it is stoutly maintained by others, Capt. McCullagh among the number, that he is only very far gone in his dotage. He is a man about five feet four inches high, white haired, with a wrinkled and colorless face, stoops as he walks, wears dark clothing, ragged and dirty, and a white hat. He is apparently 75 years old, although he says that he is only 60. As a proof of his partial insanity, the fact is cited that he tells people that he owns a large amount of real estate that is known to belong to others, and that he also cherishes a delusion that Jefferson Davis will be one day President of the United States. He was, according to his own story, a soldier in the Confederate army, and Davis was his great friend. Sheriff Reilly's house, in which he lives, he says, is his property. He has paid no rent for about six months, and recently gave the Sheriff notice to eject all his tenants and give him the rightful possession of the property. The Fifth Avenue Hotel, he says, also belongs to him, and he has been waiting for some time for a good opportunity to sell it to advantage. His chief employment for years has been the care of furnaces in the mansions of some rich people in the City, and he has also been always ready to earn a quarter for any odd job that fell in his way. His missing sister did the chores and washed clothes for a living, and the pair, up to the time of her disappearance, ate together and slept in their wretched quarters.

When Capt. McCullagh began his inquiry on Tuesday he was forced to break open the door of Michael's rooms, as they were trebly secured with an ordinary lock, a padlock, and cross-bars. The spectacle which presented itself was uninviting. The room was dirty, everything was covered with dust, and the Captain was obliged to pull off his coat and roll up his sleeves before he began his search for the remains of the missing woman, which, it was supposed, might be concealed on the premises. Michael, who had been aroused from sleep on the floor, looked on dazed and helpless, as the officer and his assistant carefully examined every trunk, box, and nook and corner in the place. One of the rooms is about 12 feet long and 10 feet wide, and the other 6 feet wide and 10 feet long. Around the stove were piled pots, pans, and kettles, boxes, and a lot of old trumpery and inflammable material. Four cigar boxes were found filled with Confederate notes, amounting on their face to over $2,000. This "money," old Michael afterward explained, he had bought during the war, with greenbacks, and he expects when Davis is declared President that he will receive all that the bills promise to pay. A straw bed, devoid of bed clothing, was spread on a rude wooden bedstead, and in boxes were found a pair of blankets and comforters. Boxes well filled with law books and standard literary works, a gun and two old pistols were found, and, among a lot of old trumpery, several worn-out women's dresses and a shawl, supposed to belong to Michael's sister, were discovered. In one corner a copying-press was found so tightly screwed down that it seemed impossible that anything could be held between the plates. It was unscrewed, and three bank-books, wrapped in a newspaper, belonging, as was shown by the entries, to Michael's missing sister, were brought to light. The amount of Katharine's savings, as revealed by the bank books, amounted to $3,000, the money being deposited in the care of the Catholic Archbishop of the Diocese of New-York and in the Bleecker Street Savings Bank. The officers, after further diligent search, failed to find any other traces of the missing woman. Michael was taken to the Seventeenth Precinct Police Station, and his brother made a complaint against him, the object of the proceeding being to force the old man to tell what he might know of his sister's disappearance. Before he was locked up he was searched, and $99 50 were found sewed up in his clothing. The money was in new currency and bills, chiefly the latter. Capt. McCullagh coaxed and threatened him alternately in order to get from him the secret of his sister's whereabouts, but without success. He was accused of having murdered the woman, and cut up and destroyed her body to conceal his crime. The old man, falling on his knees and praying, avowed his innocence. He was taken yesterday morning before Justice Murray at the Essex Market Police Court, and, after examination by a physician, who pronounced him to be of weak intellect but harmless, was consigned to the care of a female relative residing on the east side. Meanwhile no things have been received of his sister and people who have known the pair for years are still strongly inclined to the belief that he could tell the story of her disappearance if he would, and their suspicions are strengthened by the fact that she had said repeatedly in public that he would some day kill her. Capt. McCullagh is of the opinion that the woman has met with death by accident in some unknown way. As she was a woman over 50 years of age, and rather weak-minded, his theory seems probable.

RECEIVER FOR A MACHINE COMPANY.

Assemblyman Griggs yesterday applied to Chancellor Runyon, at Trenton, N. J., for a temporary injunction and the appointment of a Receiver against the Todd & Rafferty Machine Company in Paterson. The concern was one of the largest machine companies in the country. Mr. Joseph C. Todd is the applying creditor. He owns over $100,000 worth of stock, and holds a mortgage for $150,000 which is now in process of foreclosure. The Chancellor granted the temporary injunction, and made the rule to show cause why a Receiver should not be appointed returnable next Tuesday morning at 10 o'clock.

ANOTHER BATCH OF NEW DOCTORS.

The exercises attending the sixteenth annual Commencement of the Bellevue Medical College Hospital, held yesterday afternoon at the Academy of Music, attracted a large audience. The stage was occupied by the Faculty of the college, a large body of the representative physicians of the City, Prof. Sacc, of Switzerland, Rev. Alfred B. B. Beach, D. D., Chaplain of the college, and Rev. Dr. McCosh, President of Princeton College, who delivered an address to the graduates. The seats immediately behind the orchestra were appropriated to the use of the graduating class, which numbered 147. The rest of the building from pit to dome was occupied by the friends of the young gentlemen who were to receive diplomas. The class, besides having representatives from nearly all of the States of the Union, also included students from Cuba, Central America, Canada, New-Brunswick, Australia, and, as Dr. McCosh said in his address, from "nearly all over the world." After a prayer by Rev. Dr. Beach, the degrees were conferred by Dr. Isaac E. Taylor, President of the Faculty. The following prizes were then awarded: For the best clinic report, $50, George Mingles; for the best examination in obstetrics, $50 was equally divided between H. W. Rand and R. M. Disbrow; for best examination in physiology, $50, George S. Conant; and for the best essay on psychology, $50, was awarded to A. R. Robinson. In his address to the graduates, Dr. McCosh congratulated them on having chosen "about the highest of all professions." No one, he said, sees so much of human nature as the practicing physician. He has less of routine than any other, having some new phase of character or disease to come under his care every day. He was glad to testify that physicians were generally tenderhearted, and he believed they gave more in charity, and did more charitable work than any other class. He advocated very strongly raising the standard of medical education, and was astonished to hear that Bellevue College had no endowment fund. He knew that there was money in this country, and there were many generous men—As an evidence of which, he said, the College in which he was addressing was erected, in some mysterious way, within the past few years, $2,500,000. After insisting on the need of an endowment and the addition of new branches of study, the speaker said the best way to prevent an overcrowding of the profession, of which there was some complaint, would be to require more thorough study. To some extent the efforts of encouragement to the newly-made doctors, the address, which had received marked attention, was brought to a close. Elisha D. Leffingwell delivered the valedictory, and the audience dispersed. Following are the names of the graduates:

LEAVING EMPLOYERS IN THE LURCH

Something of a flutter was created in certain mercantile circles yesterday by the announcement that George R. Pettibone, Superintendent of the Howe Sewing-Machine Company for the State of New-York, was a defaulter to the amount of from $10,000 to $20,000, and had absconded pending an examination of his affairs. Mr. Levi Stockwell, of the Howe Company, refused to state anything definite in regard to the case beyond the fact that Pettibone had resigned pending an investigation. Mr. Stephen A. Walker, counsel for the company, admitted that considerable irregularities existed in Pettibone's accounts. He was positive, however, that the company would lose nothing. Pettibone, it is understood, is withholding funds belonging to the company, and it is expected that civil proceedings will soon be brought for their recovery. It is reported in certain quarters that the ex-Superintendent's fall is due to stock-jobbing ventures, but Mr. W. G. Wiley, of No. 46 Broad street, through whom he is rumored to have operated, states that Pettibone has done no business with that house for fully a year past. The missing official is about 33 years of age, and has been in the employ of the company for five years past. He was formerly engaged in the upholstering business in Nineteenth street, near Broadway, with a Mr. Whitney. During his connection with the sewing-machine company he has resided at Davenport Neck, New-Rochelle, Westchester County. Here he kept horses and carriages, and lived in luxurious style, the only drawback to his happiness being matrimonial troubles, which culminated in his wife's procuring a divorce on the ground of ill-treatment.

BUSINESS MOVEMENTS.

At the Produce Exchange yesterday, the provision interest was quite buoyant, on a more confident movement in mess pork, and Western steam lard, leading to a pretty sharp rally in prices, especially in the instance of lard, aided by the more encouraging advices from the West. In the grain line, the feature of the dealings, in regular forms, was the activity in corn, which advanced ½ to 1 cent. per bushel. Oats were also more sought after, by City jobbers, and were quoted rather dearer. Flour was dull and unsettled, influenced, in part, by the increased depression and manifest uneasiness in the Spring wheat connection, which was again very unfavorably affected by the earlier telegrams from Chicago, where the speculation continued notably against the operators for higher figures, up to near the close, when some improvement was advised of. About 40,000 bushels No. 2 Chicago Spring, in store, were purchased here at $1 41, on speculative account, showing a decline of fully 2 cents a bushel, (with bids from shippers reported as not exceeding $1 38;) and a boat load of No. 1 Milwaukee Spring, in store, was taken for export, at $1 47, or 3 cents a bushel under the asking rate of Tuesday. The small lot (1,500 bushels) of Spring Wheat, of recent arrival from Glasgow, was not offered for sale. The quality was inferior, as already mentioned by us. Petroleum continued on the downward course, refiners making a pretty thorough surrender; and refined for New-York, Philadelphia, and Baltimore deliveries, was quoted during regular business hours down to 17 cents, and late in the day, ½ to 1 cent off even this materially reduced figure, as against 26½ to 26¾ cents per gallon at the close of last week. At the current quotations, the export movement was reported as fairly active. Ocean freights exhibited less animation, and on the berth, vessels were loading up very slowly, though rates ruled unusually low. The sharp fall in gold was decidedly against free export operations in the produce line.

THE EAST RIVER BRIDGE.

MEETING OF NEW-YORK PROPERTY-OWNERS ALONG THE PROPOSED LINE OF THE BRIDGE—A COMMITTEE APPOINTED TO CONSIDER THE PROPRIETY OF OPENING A WIDE STREET ON EACH SIDE—THE SUBJECT FULLY DISCUSSED.

A largely-attended meeting of New-York property-owners along the proposed line of the East River Bridge was held in the office of Schults, Southwick & Co., No. 63 Cliff street, yesterday afternoon, in response to a call issued by Messrs. John McColgan, Jackson S. Schults, Ambrose K. Ely, and Hon. Henry A. Barr, to consider a communication from Henry C. Murphy notifying them that the approaches and viaduct of the bridge leading from Chatham street to the anchorage at Franklin square are soon to be begun, and calling for an expression of opinion as to the propriety of opening a wide street or avenue on one or both sides of the bridge, and of taking advantage of the requirements of the bridge to improve this section of the City at a comparatively small expense. A map of the property affected, with the projected lines of the bridge and of the proposed widening distinctly traced upon it, was hung on the wall. The meeting was called to order by Mr. Schults, on whose motion Mr. Oswald Ottendorfer was selected as Chairman, and Mr. Ambrose K. Ely as Secretary. Mr. Schults offered a resolution for the appointment of a committee to consider the expediency of opening a street 80 feet wide on the south side of the bridge line. He urged the importance of such a measure. The bridge Trustees have no power under their charter to do it, but they propose to get the necessary legislation from Albany, and they ask the property-owners to say how the necessary assessment shall be paid. They agree to pay one, third, if the property-owners directly benefited pay another third, and propose that the remainder be assessed upon the City at large. It will be necessary to raise the grade of Ferry and Gold streets to conform with the grade of the bridge, but taking the expense of this into consideration the improvement will undoubtedly be a good one, and the property-owners on the line are desirous to have it done, even though it be hard times, as their property now is most undesirable. It is necessary to see about legislation on the subject at once if authority is to be obtained this Winter, else the story of the opening of the New-Bowery and Worth street will be repeated, and under such circumstances the property-owners pray to be delivered from the measure. If no action be taken, the houses along the line will be within 12 feet of the bridge, and their appearance will be most unsightly, while if the street be widened, a number of fine storehouses can be built under the bridge which will rent at from $100,000 to $120,000 per annum, the improvement of the adjacent property will be very great, and the various lines of street cars will undoubtedly extend their termini to the river.

A gentleman offered an amendment to the effect that the committee be instructed to consider what is the equitable distance to which the assessment should extend, and whether it is desirable to raise the grade of the street and to what extent.

Mr. Barr said that Frankfort and Vanderwater streets a filling of at least eight feet will be required, and that the Cliff street hill will have to be cut down, as a good grade from Chatham street to the river will be necessary. This will involve a large expenditure, but he did not believe in spoiling a ship for a pennyworth of tar. He spoke of having gone to sea from Chatham street, and of a great thoroughfare laid out. The bridge will be one of the sights of New-York and the approaches to it should be commensurate to its greatness.

Another gentleman said that the opening of New-Bowery and other streets had been of no benefit. The City could have along just as well without them. If the improvement is to extend only to the park he could not see the good of it, and he wanted to know whether any other steps were to be taken to furnish outlets from the park to the remote portions of the City. As Chatham street is at present, with cars passing over it, it will be almost impossible for trucks crossing the bridge to make use of it. The improvement of that street ought to be the first thing to be considered. If the new street is proposed solely on account of the street-cars he was opposed to it.

Another gentleman said that the mere cost of grading would be trifling. If the grade be raised, all the houses on Ferry and Jacob streets will have to be taken down and rebuilt, involving an enormous expense.

Three additional amendments were here offered, to the effect that the committee approximate the cost of opening the new street; that they state how much of each person's property will be taken by the widening, and that they consider the advisability of making the widening on the north side of the bridge, and report which side would be the better.

A gentleman owning property on Beekman street denounced the method in vogue of levying assessments as legalized confiscation and robbery. Before taking any action, the meeting should consider well whether it was going to result in any practical benefit. For himself he did not believe in 10 years after completion the bridge would pay two per cent. It would be time enough to talk about a wide street after the bridge was built. He was loudly applauded.

Mr. Schultz said that the gentleman's property was out of the line of assessment, which would not extend more than 400 feet. The latter retorted that similar arguments had always been made and broken. He had paid thousands of dollars for having traffic drawn away from Beekman street by the opening of New Church street, and he had been assessed at Fourteenth street for Central Park improvements. Mr. Schultz said that a proviso in the bill not to go beyond 400 feet should be satisfactory.

A gentleman said that there are now more streets than people to walk on them, and shanties are being built in the public squares to occupy them. [Laughter.] Another gentleman asked whether the City would be better or worse off than it now is without the widening. He was informed that the company are to take away the present Frankfort street and open another of the same width—40 feet. The question before the meeting was whether this should be widened to 80 feet. Mr. Shultz objected to outsiders speaking against the measure. He said that all the property-owners within the assessment line were in favor of it. Mr. Squires and Mr. French disputed this assertion. They were opposed to it. Mr. Shults said that Cyrus P. Smith, before he died, told him that the Union Ferry Company intended to turn a line of boats to the new street as soon as it was opened. As for dissatisfied property owners, they can find sale anywhere for their land at present market prices. The gentleman from Beekman street asked that a provision be inserted in the proposed bill that no person shall be assessed for the improvement more than his proportionate share of benefit, to be determined on hearing by a jury of his peers. Such was the custom in London.

After considerable more discussion the resolution was carried with all the amendments tacked on, and another that the committee shall hold public meetings, due notice of which shall be given, and that they shall listen to arguments for and against the measure. Messrs. Oswald Ottendorfer, Jackson S. Schults, William H. Hooper, Ambrose K. Ely, and George H. Squires were appointed as the committee. The meeting then adjourned.

THE "CROOKED" WHISKY SUITS.

The suit of the Government against Boyd & Co., whisky dealers, of No. 59 Broad street, charging them with conspiracy to defraud the Government, came up for trial yesterday before Judge Blatchford, in the United States District Court. Anthony C. Hessing, who was tried and convicted in Chicago as the head of the famous whisky ring, and was subsequently pardoned by the President, was called as the first witness, but he denied all knowledge of the transactions charged against the defendants. He was asked if it had not been the practice of dealers and distillers to pay Government officials to permit fraudulent transactions to pass unnoticed, but Mr. Hessing professed complete ignorance of the whole matter. The case will come up again to-morrow.

METROPOLITAN POLICE FOR BOSTON.

Mr. W. F. Spaulding has prepared a bill to be presented to the Legislature of Massachusetts, which provides for furnishing Boston with a Metropolitan Police. The bill is based upon one drawn by Gov. Andrew in 1865. The proposed act provides for the transfer of the administration and control of the Police force from the city authorities to a Board of Metropolitan Police, consisting of three Commissioners appointed by the Governor and Council, and liable to removal by the same power after a hearing upon written charges. Their salary shall be $3,000 for the member acting as Treasurer, and $2,500 for the other two. An expense of $2,000 is allowed for the salary of a clerk. The terms of the Commissioners shall expire in successive years. The board shall not increase the number or pay of the patrolmen without the consent of the Mayor and Aldermen. The Police shall exercise all the common law and statutory powers of Constables, except the service of civil process, and all the powers given to the Police or watchmen by the statutes of the Commonwealth, or the charter or ordinances of the city. They shall obey all orders of the Governor in relation to the preservation of the public peace or the execution of the laws of the Commonwealth. They shall especially endeavor to suppress unlicensed liquor shops, gambling places, and houses of ill-fame. The accommodations required shall be those used by the Police force of the city, if the same shall be placed at the disposal of the board; otherwise, the board shall have power to provide suitable accommodations. The board may provide an office for themselves, the expense of which shall be paid by the Commonwealth. All expenses which are not otherwise provided for, including the pay of the Police, shall be paid by the City of Boston, a detailed report shall be made annually to the Legislature, and a report quarterly to the Mayor and Aldermen of said city. The act, in its relation to the organization of the board, takes effect on its passage, the rest upon the 1st day of May.

CITY AND SUBURBAN NEWS.

NEW-YORK.

As a result of the revival now in progress under the New-York Port Society, 498 persons have applied for church membership and 813 have signed the temperance pledge.

The jury in Part II. of the Supreme Court yesterday returned a verdict in favor of the City in the suit brought against it by Owen W. Brennan to recover rent for the premises at No 514 Pearl street.

Wilhelm Barbe, aged 35, a vagrant, attempted to commit suicide yesterday morning by cutting his throat with a razor while in the basement of the new church building in East Houston street, near the Bowery. He was taken to Bellevue Hospital.

Marshal Kelly, of the Mayor's office, yesterday revoked the license of Thomas Harreman, the owner of hack No. 811 for allowing the latter to stand in front of Joe Coburn's saloon on the night of his attack on the Police, without any one in charge of it.

The pupils of Eastman College, to the number of 300, headed by the college band, and accompanied by Mayor Eastman and other prominent citizens of Poughkeepsie will visit Booth's Theatre this evening. The theatre will be magnificently decorated in honor of Washington's Birthday.

Francis S. Lathrop, the Receiver of the New-Jersey Central Railroad Company, filed his bond, under his order of appointment in this State, in the County Clerk's office yesterday. His sureties are William Walter Phelps and A. V. Stout, each of whom qualifies in the sum of $50,000.

Capt. James Milward, the newly appointed United States Consul to Ghent, sailed with his wife in the steamer China, yesterday. A large party of City, State, and Federal officials gave him a reception on the steamer. He was on the staff of Gen. Dix as Exchange Officer, stationed at Fortress Monroe.

The Park Commissioners have announced that they will, unless objection be made before Tuesday next, at 11 o'clock, declare adopted the map of the streets and avenues in the Twenty-third Ward, west of Riverdale avenue, which has been before them for about a year, and to which property-owners have had abundant opportunities to protest.

Detective Williamson, of the Central Office, yesterday arrested Charles C. Kuhn, on a warrant issued by a Justice of the Peace in which he is charged with having committed a felonious assault upon Frank E. Wheeler, a resident of Essex, Middlesex County, Conn. As the prisoner consented to return without the formality of a requisition he was surrendered to Constable Bugbee, of Saybrook, Conn., who took him back to await trial.

The Governing Committee of the Stock Exchange held a long meeting after business hours yesterday to consider the recommendation of the open meeting of members that the rates of commission be reduced. After debate the various plans suggested were ordered to be printed, and laid on the table until next Wednesday, and the meeting adjourned. It is reported that they are seriously considering the advisability of placing the Pacific Coast mining stocks on the regular list.

The annual reception in honor of Washington's Birthday was held yesterday at Grammar School No. 3, of which Mr. B. L. D. Southerland is Principal. The programme was most interesting, consisting of recitations by Masters A. Hartfield, William Heasley, Samuel Mayer, Augustus Peverelly, Jr., Frank Paige, and W. C. Sullivan. The choruses, "The White Squall," "Star Spangled Banner," "Nobly Our Flag," "Men of '76," &c., were rendered with excellent effect, as were also the several solos.

BROOKLYN.

A Tax-payers' Association, made up of five delegates from each ward in the city, is about to be formed.

The Supervisor at Large yesterday filed his veto of the resolution providing for the purchase for $25,000 from the Brooklyn City Hospital lands upon which to erect a new jail.

The Brooklyn Bible Society, according to the report of its Treasurer, has a balance on hand of $428 24, and needs $1,750 to meet a claim of the parent society for books purchased.

About 10 o'clock yesterday morning Miss Clara Smith, of No. 296 McDonough street, was knocked down in Lewis avenue by a ruffian, who stole a silk handkerchief and escaped. Miss Smith was so frightened and stunned that she was unable to call for help.

The trial of the suit of Messrs. Kingsley & Keeny against the City, to recover $178,000 for work done on the Hempstead Reservoir, was continued yesterday. The evidence was merely a repetition of that elicited during the trial of Commissioner William A. Fowler before the Board of Aldermen.

Inspector Raymond reports to the Board of Health that the five deaths from diphtheria which recently occurred in the tenement-house No. 354 Smith street were occasioned by an open sewer-joint through which the sewer gas escaped. The board directed that the house be disinfected and the open sewer-joint closed. A special meeting of the board to discuss the subject of house draining will be held on Friday at noon.

NEW-JERSEY.

Mayor Russell, of Hoboken, has vetoed the resolution of the Common Council selecting a site for a new school-house.

Ellen O'Brien, residing on Jersey City Heights, has commenced a suit for slander against Catherine Burney, who called her a thief, laying damages at $2,000. The case has been sent to a Referee.

The Hudson County Board of Health and Vital Statistics reports 329 deaths in the county during the month of January. Of these 230 occurred in Jersey City, 43 in Hoboken, and 56 in the other parts of the county.

The bondsmen of Frederick Schaffer, the Union Hill Collector who absconded about three years ago with about $16,000 of the town's money, have succeeded in effecting a compromise with the authorities for $5,000.

James Clayton, a newspaper compositor, accidentally fell down stairs Tuesday night at his residence in Sussex street, Jersey City, and sustained a fracture of the skull. It is feared that brain fever will set in and prove fatal.

The funeral of D. W. Wyman, an eminent Mason and the Superintendent of the New-York Elevated Railway, will take place, with Masonic rites, to-day at 12 o'clock in Jersey City. The services will be conducted by Samuel H. Stitt, of Passaic, Grand Master of Masons of

PRESIDENT HAYES' CABINET.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The Cabinet of President Hayes has been selected by several newspaper correspondents and speculating politicians, but it can be said truthfully that Mr. Hayes has not himself been consulted by the makers of the published lists, and he may possibly repudiate the choice that has been made for him. There is, of course, a vast deal of anxiety on the part of some politicians, and of deep interest and curiosity on the part of others, to know how the incoming Administration will be organized. None of the suggestions that have appeared in print have come from Mr. Hayes, either directly or indirectly. His most intimate personal friends give assurance that he has expressed no determination with regard to any particular person who has been named for his Cabinet, though he has listened to much advice, either voluntary or in response to solicitations on his part. Names find their way into the newspapers from the suggestions of friends of those seeking Cabinet positions, of whom, it is safe to say there are not less than 100 more or less active or expectant. Mr. McCrary, of Iowa, has, for instance, been mentioned for the office of Attorney General. The connection of his name with the place grows out of the fact that the Congressional delegations of seven or eight States of the North-west are said to be willing to urge his nomination as the representative in the Cabinet from that section of the Union. A band of Southern Republicans are understood to be gathered about Senator West, and will urge in the most strenuous manner that he be appointed to a Cabinet position. If report be true, a gentleman has been sent to Columbus to present the claims of Senator West. It is said that Gen. Logan is being urged by the admirers of his political career and mourners at his defeat for the Senate, for an appointment to the head of the War Department. The authority for this story is not very conclusive, but it seems not improbable that it may be true. Whether the Pacific coast will have a candidate to support for a place in the Cabinet is not definitely announced, though the Pacific States are generally forward in presenting their claims.

As illustrating how hopelessly the Cabinet makers are at fault for lack of genuine information, it should be noticed that they are entirely unable to assign anybody to the Treasury Department. The gossip vacillates between Senator Sherman and Gov. Morgan, of New-York. The general opinion is that the State Department will be offered to Mr. Evarts. No other name is much talked of for that position, and perhaps the only plausible suggestion of any other name is that of Senator Edmunds, of Vermont. Judge Stanley Mathews, who is associated with Mr. Evarts, has made a deep impression upon the public mind, and is much talked of for a Cabinet position; but it seems more likely that he will be assigned to the work of driving out of the next House, Mr. Banning, of Cincinnati, who was elected by repeaters under the direction of Eph. Holland. Such a man as Judge Mathews is much needed in the House. Mr. Hale, of Maine, has been repeatedly named for Secretary of the Navy. Whether he desires the position or whether Mr. Hayes has any intention of offering it to him, is entirely unknown. There is much talk as to who will be the Southern representatives in the Cabinet, of which it is supposed there will be one or two, but on this subject there have been no expressions from Mr. Hayes. It may be taken for granted that he desires to organize a Cabinet that will strengthen the Republican Party and satisfy the people as to the character of administration that may be expected. It is believed he will not act hastily, and very likely will not appoint a Cabinet until he has been several days in Washington. He has thus far managed to keep his own counsel, and will be fortunate and save himself much personal annoyance, if he is able to preserve confidence concerning his intentions until the nominations are sent to the Senate.

Senator Sherman has gone to Ohio to meet Gov. Hayes, and they are supposed to be together at Mansfield, the home of Senator Sherman, to-night. Gov. Hayes has been expected to reach here next week on Thursday, but many Republicans think he should come immediately, and that may be the advice given him by Senator Sherman.

THE APPROPRIATION BILLS.

PASSAGE OF THE DEFICIENCY BILL IN THE SENATE—THE BARCLAY'S DIGEST CLAUSE—THE NAVY BILL—THE HOUSE AND THE SUNDRY CIVIL BILL—MR. HOLMAN DEFEATED ON SEVERAL POINTS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The Senate, to-day, passed the Deficiency Appropriation bill. All the amendments reported by the Senate Committee on Appropriations were adopted. The most important amendment reported by the Senate committee, is that providing for deficiencies in the expenses of United States Courts, to meet which over $1,000,000 are appropriated. In the House, a paragraph was inserted in this bill repealing a House resolution passed March, 1871, allowing Mr. Barclay $1 per copy for his digest of the rules of the House, and requiring the Journal Clerk to hereafter prepare a digest of the rules. Mr. Blaine proposed an amendment to this paragraph, requiring the House to pay Mr. Barclay a reasonable compensation for such parts of his book as might be used under orders of the House. A long debate followed and several votes were taken before the matter was disposed of. The amendment of Mr. Blaine was finally carried by yeas 23, nays 21. The Senate will take up and pass the Navy Appropriation bill to-morrow.

The House worked all day on the Sundry Civil bill, but did not complete it. Mr. Holman was defeated several times, and amounts named in the bill were materially increased. The members from sections in which public buildings are in course of construction made a combination and run up the figures named by the committee. Mr. Holman made stubborn, but ineffectual resistance. The sums named in the bill for public buildings at Cincinnati and Philadelphia were increased from $325,000 to $400,000 as the House pushes along more rapidly on the bills yet to be acted upon, some of them will yet be left to the next Congress to complete.

THE VOTE OF MISSISSIPPI.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Feb. 21, 1877.

The following protest against the counting of the Electoral vote of Mississippi for Tilden and Hendricks was prepared by a number of well-known Southern Republican members of the Senate and House. It would have been presented this morning but for the fact that the Democratic filibusters have so shortened the time for a consideration of the Presidential question as to make all unnecessary delays dangerous.

We, the undersigned Senators and Representatives, object to the counting of the Electoral vote of the State of Mississippi for the reasons and upon the grounds as follows, to wit:

I. That the Government of the State of Mississippi was not at the time of the appointment of the Presidential Electors purporting to be legal Electors of said State, and is not now, a State Government within the purview of the Constitution of the United States, but is a usurpation set up in violation alike of the Constitution of the State and the Constitution of the United States, and against the will of a large majority of the people of said State.

II. That the legally constituted Government was overthrown by revolutionary means, characterized by armed organizations of political conspirators, mob violence, frauds at the ballot-box, intimidation of voters, murder and assassination.

III. That the certification of the appointment of Presidential Electors of said State, purporting to be a legal certification of such appointment by the Governor of said State, is in truth and fact a certification by a usurper acting as Governor, holding and exercising the powers and functions of the office without warrant of law, and is, therefore, null and void.

IV. That a revolutionary body pretending to be the Legislature of said State have, in open violation of the Constitution of the State, abrogated the office of Lieutenant Governor and placed a member of their own body in the chief executive office of the State, vide section 11, article 4, and sections 13, 14, 15, 16, 17, and 18, article 5, Constitution of the State, and Session Acts of 1876, pages 12 and 30, pamphlet laws.

V. That said pretended Legislature enacted a Registration and Election law, entitled "An act to provide for the registration of voters, amending and repealing the laws relating thereto, and for other purposes, and approved April 7, 1876," which contained provisions conflicting with the Constitution of the United States, and in violation of the Constitution of the State.

The Constitution of the State prescribes the qualification of voters in words and figures as follows:

"All persons entitled to register shall take and subscribe to the following oath or affirmation: 'I, ——, do solemnly swear, (or affirm,) in the presence of Almighty God, that I am 21 years of age; that I have resided in the State six months and in —— County one month; that I will faithfully support and obey the Constitution and laws of the United States and of the State of Mississippi, and will bear true faith and allegiance to the same, so help me God.'"

The Registration and Election law aforesaid required that all persons entitled to register as voters should state under oath their occupation and where prosecuted, and, if in the employ of any one, where, and the nature of such employment, name of employer, the election district in which they resided, and specify the particular portion of such district; and if a resident of an incorporated city or town, to give the ward of such city or town. (Vide sections 3 and 4 Registration law.) Under the operation of the act as aforesaid, at the late Presidential election, thousands of legally-qualified voters were refused registration because they were unable to swear to the particular township, range, and section of the county where they resided, and were thereby deprived of their rights as electors under the Constitution of the State.

VI. That armed political organizations known as "Rifle Clubs," "White Leagues," "Regulators," "Modocs," and "Bull-dozers," aided and abetted by a hostile press and incendiary appeals to the passions and prejudices of the populace by Democratic orators, produced such a reign of terror as to prevent a free and fair discussion of political issues by Republican candidates for Congress and Presidential Electors.

VII. That by intimidation of voters and frauds practiced in registration and at the ballot-box a majority of not less than 20,000 of the legally qualified voters of said State were deprived of the right of free suffrage.

TILDEN'S LETTER AND ACCOUNTS.

MISTAKE OF REPUBLICANS IN CONSENTING NOT TO EXAMINE HIS ACCOUNTS — FIELD'S COMMITTEE IN POSSESSION OF MR. CHANDLER'S ACCOUNT FOR WEEKS —NOTHING DAMAGING FOUND.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The letter of Gov. Tilden to Senator Kernan with respect to his accounts in the Third National Bank is a mere pretense, entirely characteristic of the man. The nature of the agreement which is said to have been entered into by the committees is not very well understood, and it is not certain whether there is any understanding that accounts shall be suppressed. It certainly never should have been agreed to on the part of any Republicans. David Dudley Field's Committee has had the accounts of Secretary Chandler as Chairman of the Republican Committee, and also the accounts of Secretary McCormick of the committee for several weeks, and has found absolutely nothing which would be damaging to the Republican organization if disclosed. Everybody believes that the Oregon fraud was paid for out of Tilden's account, and and as long as the exhibition of the account is not made this belief will continue. Tilden's account ought to be examined. His suggestion that the committee had intended to issue a supbœna for himself is wholly gratuitous, as no such idea was ever entertained. Mr. Tilden cannot make a martyr of himself in this way. He would succeed better in that rôle by resigning his pretensions to the Presidency.

THE MEXICAN VETERANS' ASSOCIATION.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The National Association of Mexican Veterans assembled to-day at Willard Hall, with nearly all the States represented, being about 150 members registered. Most of the delegates were from States adjacent, New-York and Maryland predominating. A committee selected by the President of the association will have an interview with the Senate Pension Committee on Friday, and the convention will call and pay their respects to President Grant during the day. The election of officers for the ensuing year resulted in the re-election of President Denver, Secretary Kensday, and all the officers at head-quarters by acclamation. Some controversy arising in regard to the reported withdrawal of New-York, New-Jersey, and Maryland, at the meeting last July in Philadelphia, and in regard to the distribution of the badge of the association, a Committee of Inquiry was appointed to report on these points, and they found that an error was made in excluding the names of the previous officers from New-York, who were present at the meeting, and disclaimed any intention of withdrawing from the National body. They also found that the will of the association has been carried out in the selection, manufacture and distribution of the metal badges, and recommend that members of the association be permitted to wear the badge in any metal or size conformably to the design adopted by the association.

The report was signed by Gen. John Love, Gen. E. R. Biles, Col. J. H. Ruddack, Judge J. B. Deason, and M. D. Montis. A congratulatory dispatch was received from the First Illinois Association, in session at Monmouth.

THE INDIAN PEACE POLICY.

REPORT ON THE CONDITION OF THE AGENCIES UNDER THE CARE OF THE ORTHODOX FRIENDS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—S. A. Galpin, Chief Clerk of the Indian Office, has made an elaborate report upon the condition and management of certain Indian agencies in the Indian Territory now under the supervision of the Orthodox Friends. Particular stress is given in the report to the advancement of education among these tribes. The author of the report feels that the very satisfactory exemplification of the Indian policy which an inspection of the work in the central superintendency shows, and the high standard which the service here has attained is due, in a great measure, to the intelligent interest shown by the Orthodox Friends in this work, and the direct personal influence they have brought to bear upon their representatives in the field. The privilege of nominating Indian agents has not been considered by them as a great perquisite, but a great trust. Their nominee for an agency has not been chosen at random from a large number of anxious candidates whose necessities are their main recommendation. Nor, when once installed in office, has such nominee been left to himself, and permitted to feel that he is no longer their chosen representative and responsible to them, but simply a Government official required to struggle against the numerous difficulties of his position, with a scant measure of recognition or encouragement from the public. On the other hand, the spirit of the agents and the interests of the Friends themselves have been kept up by the services of a salaried supervising agent of their own appointment, and by the regular visits of standing committees of their organization. The qualifications of the more responsible employes are also examined by this committee before their appointment, and the whole conduct of the agent is closely watched. The peculiar character of the service requires just such supervision; nor is this all. It is an open secret that at four of the more important agencies the meagre salaries of the agents have been supplemented by payments from the Friends, while liberal donations have been and are being constantly made for the civilizing and Christianizing part of the work. Even with the addition of $500 per annum thus made to his salary I have yet to see the agent who is overpaid, or even sufficiently paid, to make full compliance with all the technicalities and regulations prescribed for Government accounts; to be responsible for the proper care and issue of Government property, amounting in some cases to hundreds of thousands of dollars annually; to maintain, before Indians, restless and suspicious, the authority of the Government; to protect them without adequate law, or rather without any law whatever, from the inroads of the miners, timber thieves, horse thieves, and other outlaws who infest the country; to meet their daily wants and needs out of the appropriations always limited and often insufficient; and, furthermore, to crowd such Indians forward in a mode of life contrary to all their old traditions and habits. Surely, a year of such service as this, and more, is worth something more than the sum received by an Assistant Doorkeeper for a few months' service in the national Capitol.

THE ARCTIC EXPLORATION BILL.

FAVORABLE REPORT FROM THE HOUSE NAVAL COMMITTEE—THE IMPORTANCE OF THE EXPLORATION DISCUSSED — CAPT. HOWGATE'S PLAN HEARTILY COMMENDED.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—Mr. Willis, of New-York, from the House Committee on Naval Affairs, submitted a report to-day on the House bill to authorize and equip an expedition to the Arctic seas. The committee say that the object of the bill is so interesting and important in its character that they have, while not neglecting to consider it with reference to its results to science and commerce, availed themselves of all information accessible, and called into requisition the testimony of experience and learning. They discuss the inquiry whether, under the Constitution or otherwise, to fit out an exploration such as is contemplated would be an appropriate and legitimate function of the Government for the exercises taxes could be properly levied upon the people, and, if so, whether the nation would get value received for the expenditure incurred, and the perils to which its citizens would be exposed. They review the results attained from the various exploring expeditions which, from time to time, have been organized and dispatched to the Arctic regions, and express grave doubts as to the chances of future success in the enterprise if continued upon the plans heretofore followed. They think that to render success assured the men and the vessels must be near the channel by which the North-west passage is to be reached at the fortunate hour and prepared to take prompt advantage thereof. Polar colonization is represented to be the plan suited to the exigency. This plan requires a colonization party of at least 40 hardy, resolute men, enlisted in the United States for such service, provided with supplies for at least three years; a strong, substantial building transported on ship-board, and the principal depot to be in Lady Franklin Bay, between 81° and 82°, or, if possible, as high as Cape Union, between latitude 82° and 83°. The United States vessels to be only used for transporting men and supplies to the location of the colony, and to make annual visits thereto with fresh supplies and keep the colony in communication with the outside world; military discipline to be enforced by officers selected for their fitness for the duty, &c.; an astronomer and two or more naturalists to be selected by the National Academy of Sciences, and one or more members competent to make meteorological observations. The region proposed for the colony abounds in coal and in fish and game, and never before, the committee say, has an opportunity offered so promising in its results as now presents itself. The committee review what has been and is being done by various foreign nations to attain the desirable ends sought by the exploration in question, with a view to advantage in scientific discoveries. The committee say that there is scarcely a natural science but would be enlarged and utilized by proper observations in the Polar seas. Natural forces there are subject to extreme conditions, and consequently produce phenomena not seen elsewhere, which serve to reveal the character of the forces themselves. Wonderful already are the discoveries made in each field of inquiry noted, but we are yet in the vestibule—the region of the unknowable is just beyond. We are invited thither. We know enough to realize the wealth which awaits us. That the committee are of the opinion that to reach the ends desired a complete change of operations must be had, and this change is effected in the bill before the House, and meets the exact need. If we make any pretense, as friends of science, we must pursue the only methods whereby development can be achieved. Boards of Trade and Chambers of Commerce are now, through memorials, invoking the National Legislature to renew the honorable work. The cost is slight; the ends arrived at will provoke no intelligent opposition. The methods proposed are not experimental, but the product of experience. They have the sanction and even the warmest commendation of all scientific men of all nations. The supervision of the National Academy of Science will insure wise provisions and safeguards against accident, disease, or failure. Dr. Hayes, the eminent and successful Arctic explorer, coincides fully with the views expressed by the committee, as also do others familiar by actual experience. Their letters are so conclusive that the committee make them a part of their report. The committee conclude by saying:

"The honor of the American name is involved. Will Congress suppress this jealous spirit of inquiry and adventure, or give it scope by the passage of this bill and a meagre appropriation of $50,000? To us it appears there should be but one answer, and therefore we report back the bill with the recommendation that it do pass."

THE REAL ESTATE INVESTIGATION.

EX-CONGRESSMAN HARMER'S TESTIMONY DENYING THE CHARGE OF RECEIVING MONEY FROM CONTRACTORS — THE CHECKS OF FILBERT AND TAYLOR.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The Real Estate Pool Committee had before them this morning Hon. A. C. Harmer, formerly a member of Congress, and Chairman of the District Committee, and also member elect to the Forty-fifth Congress, who testified relative to the charge that he had been paid $3,000 by the firm of Filbert and Taylor, contractors, in order to secure his influence. He stated that he had noticed that a witness had testified to that effect before this committee, and asserted that such statement was entirely untrue; that he knew nothing at all about the veritable transaction until long after it had occurred. The real transaction was that a check for $1,000 had been drawn by Dr. Filbert, of the firm of Filbert & Taylor, payable to the order of a gentleman named Taylor, a member of the Republican Executive State Committee of Pennsylvania and resident of Philadelphia. There was another check of $3,000 referred to, drawn in the same way. Both these checks were indorsed over by Taylor to Gen. Bingham, at that time Postmaster of Philadelphia and Treasurer of the Republican State Executive Committee of Pennsylvania, and were by him placed to the credit of the general campaign fund of the year 1872. Mr. Harmer also stated that he never heard that Senator Cameron stood in any way connected with either of these transactions. He also said that he, while a member of Congress, never had any connection whatever with any contract in any city or State, or under the United States.

Gen. Bingham virtually corroborated Mr. Harmer's testimony, and the inference drawn from his evidence was that Mr. Harmer derived from him all knowledge he had in regard to the above transactions.

Alexander R. Shepherd, late Vice President of the Board of Public Works of this city, testified with reference to the testimony of Hope H. Slatter, to the effect that Dr. Filbert had paid $2,500 to a woman of bad repute under instructions from Shepherd. Mr. Shepherd stated that the sum and substance of this matter was that when he was about leaving the city for the purpose of recuperating his health, Dr. Filbert called upon him, and asked whether he could do anything for him. He [Shepherd] was about opening his mail, and found a letter from a member of the family of a lady whose husband had died while in the employ of the Board of Public Works, and another from an attorney. The purport of both letters was that this lady's property was in danger of being sold under a foreclosure of mortgage, and he requested Dr. Filbert to carry this mortgage until he [Shepherd] should return to the city. Gov. Shepherd also said that the lady belonged to one of the best families of Georgetown, and was a lady of the highest respectability, and that her husband was one of the oldest inhabitants of the district.

SEARCH FOR ILLEGAL ELECTORS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The Committee on the Powers, Privileges, and Duties of the House held a very brief session to-day, the only witness examined being Hon. John Reilly, member of Congress from Pennsylvania, who testified that Daniel S. Morrill, one of the Electors of the State of Pennsylvania, was a United States Centennial Commissioner. He did not, however, attend the meeting of the Electoral College, and another man was elected to fill the vacancy occasioned by his absence.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The House Committee on Elections to-day agreed to recommend an appropriation by the House to pay the expenses of contests as follows, the awards being based in each case upon vouchers and affidavits submitted by the parties to the contests: Abbott and Frost, of Massachusetts, $2,000 each; Platt, of Virginia, $3,000; Goode, of Virginia, $500; Blomberg, of Alabama, $1,500; Haralson, of Alabama, $1,150; Lamovne, of Illinois, Ramey and Butts, of South Carolina, $1,200 each; Strait and Cox, of Minnesota, and Tennessee, of Idaho, $1,000 each; Morey and Spencer, of Alabama, $734 each; Darrall, of Louisiana, $400, and Lynch, of Mississippi, $500. These awards close the business of the committee, for this Congress. The allowances are much smaller than has been customary in previous Congresses. Several claims were disallowed, and some contestants made no claim for expenses.

There is a semi-observance of Washington's Birthday here. The public departments were closed about noon, and the President received no visitors on official business. The "Oldest Inhabitants" are celebrating the day in Georgetown, and the Mexican Veterans are in session in this city. The Avenue is crowded with promenaders.

Admiral Goldsborough's funeral took place to-day. The obsequies were held at the Church of the Ascension, Bishop Pinckney, assisted by Rev. Dr. John N. Elliott, officiating. The Marine Battalion, under command of Lieut. Col. Haywood, formed the escort.

The receipts of internal revenue to-day were $287,904 84, and of Customs $492,587 88.

The Senate, in executive session, to-day confirmed the following nominations: Clinton D. McDougall, United States Marshal for the Northern District of New-York, vice Quimby, resigned. United States Consuls—Joseph Grierson, at Coquimbo; S. P. Bagley, Jr., of Virginia, at Palermo; Charles H. Phelps, of Massachusetts, at Prague; Enrique Cabret, at Carranza, Spain; J. F. Shepard, of Missouri, at Hankow, China; Charles E. Merry, at Rio Grande do Sul, Brazil; Frederick G. Heron, at Manilla. Collectors of Customs—George Hubbard, Stonington, Conn; A. A. Warfield, Alexandria, Va.; Charles S. Mills, Richmond, Va. Postmasters—William Tyrell at Batavia, N. Y.; Mrs. Clara N. Drake, Westfield, N. Y.; F. D. Fisk, Hinsdale, N. H.; Leonard Wilson, Marshall, Mo.; Casper E. Yost, Omaha, Neb.; Mrs. Julia E. Seeley, Great Barrington, Mass.

The sword worn by the Confederate General William Barksdale, taken from his body after he fell mortally wounded in the battle of Gettysburg, and deposited in the Indiana Museum, was delivered to-day to his brother, Hon. E. Barksdale, to be conveyed to his friends in Mississippi.

PIGEON SHOOTING.

A MATCH AT PHILADELPHIA—THE SCORES YESTERDAY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 22.—A pigeon-shooting tournament between some of the best shots in the country commenced at the new hunting park on the Pennsylvania Railroad, near Frankford, in this city, to-day. The first match was for $800, to be divided in three prizes. The whole number of birds to be shot is 50 on each side, and to-day the shooters succeeded in disposing of 15 each, leaving the remainder for to-morrow. The attendance was very large, nearly 3,000 persons being present. William Long acted as referee, and William Wells and H. W. Whitehead were the Judges. The majority of the contestants were of local celebrity. Of the 15 birds shot the following individual scores were made; A. H. Bogardus, Elkhart, Ill., 15; R. Cornell Tacony, Penn., 15; Richard Wood, Chester, Penn., 15; William Carson, Philadelphia, 14; John Jordan, Philadelphia, 14; William Greenwood, Philadelphia, 13; Miles Johnson, New-Jersey, 13; Frank Pierson, New Castle, Penn., 13; A. T. Eberhart, Catasauqua, Penn., 13; Frank Kleinz, Philadelphia, 13; C. Lovatt, Philadelphia, 13; Isaac Stover, New-Jersey, 13; S. H. Turrell, Chicago, 12; J. Lovatt, Philadelphia, 11; Matthew Edwards, Burlington, N. J., 11; B. Wilson, Philadelphia, 9.

THE POMEROY BOILER EXPLOSION.

CINCINNATI, Feb. 22.—The four men killed by the explosion of the boiler at the Clifton Nail Factory, in Pomeroy, Ohio, last evening, were George Riley, John Brown, Wirt Mason, and Adam Diel. Those severely wounded are Andrew Finamore, fireman, scalded; Homer Barker, scalded; Frederick Luke Hart, George Withers, cut and bruised; Anthony Hisell, both arms broken; S. S. Maxwell, cut in the head, and A. A. Holland, one of the proprietors, dangerously hurt internally. Morgan Barker, a boy, was blown 70 feet in the air, but escaped unhurt.

THE BANK DIFFICULTIES IN CANADA.

MONTREAL, Feb. 22.—The shareholders of the Banque St. Jean Baptiste held a meeting and decided to wind up the affairs of that institution. A committee was appointed to settle the bank's affairs and liquidate the claims of shareholders. Authority was given the committee to dispose of the charter without in any way binding the present shareholders. Sir Hugh Allan has resigned the Presidency of the Merchants' Bank, and Hon. John Hamilton has been appointed to the position. The resignation of Jackson Rae, Cashier of the bank, has been accepted.

COURT OF APPEALS.

ALBANY, Feb. 22.—In the Court of Appeals, Thursday, Feb. 22, 1877: No. 204—Blair vs. Wait; argument resumed and concluded. No. 184—Thomas vs. Nelson; argued by Henry D. Birdsall for appellant and N. P. O'Brien for respondent. No. 195—Distin vs. Rose; argued by H. A. Nelson for appellant and A. Anthony for respondent. No. 187½—Arctic Insurance Company vs. Austin; argued by S. Hand for appellant and George W. Parsons for respondent.

The following is the Court of Appeals day calendar for Friday: Nos. 207, 427, 101, 118, 202, 203, 160½, and 195.

NEW-BRUNSWICK FINANCES.

ST. JOHN, Feb. 22. — The estimates of the Provincial Government show a reduction in the judicial expenses for printing and immigration. The estimates for public works are larger than the expenditures of last year. The total expenditure amounts to $870,539 and the same to the same amount.

THE ELECTORAL TRIBUNAL.

ARGUMENT ON THE OREGON CASE.

JUDGE MATHEWS' SPEECH—ILLUSIONS AND MISREPRESENTATIONS OF DEMOCRATIC COUNSEL CLEARED AWAY—MR. EVARTS' ARGUMENT—MR. MERRICK'S "FORLORN HOPE"—EXECUTIVE SESSION OF THE COMMISSION WITHOUT ACTION ON THE CASE—REVOLUTIONARY DEMOCRATS RESOLVED TO INTERPOSE OBSTRUCTIONS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 22.—The Electoral Commission met again this morning at 10 o'clock, and in a few minutes Judge Mathews began his argument in behalf of the Republican objectors. He began by clearing away the false assumptions of the Democratic counsel, that the Republicans had claimed a Governor's certificate to be conclusive of the election. He showed that in the former Republican arguments they had claimed, specifically, that the Governor's certificate was not conclusive, if it were shown to be in opposition to the statement of the canvass by the proper authorities. He referred to the character of evidence that would be brought forward in the Oregon case, if the Commission were to go behind the returns, and alluded to the unwillingness of the Democrats, in this case, to have any such investigation. He then took up the facts in respect to the election of Watts, claiming that the record of the canvass in the office of the Secretary of State, was conclusive evidence of Watts' election, and he examined the authorities, and the laws to show that Gov. Grover was bound to issue the certificate to Watts in accordance with that canvass. He cited various decisions of the courts to show that the possession of a Commission is not necessary to the holding of office, and that the refusal of the Secretary of State to give a certificate to the Republican Electors did not in any way render their acting as Electors illegal. Judge Mathews made a very strong technical legal argument, citing authorities and presenting the law, tersely and forcibly, to the Commission, and closed with an eloquent statement of the attitude in which he, as counsel, appeared before the Commission, in behalf of constitutional principles and the enforcement of law and right.

Justice Strong at the conclusion of Judge Mathews' argument expressed a desire that if any evidence were to be taken, it should not be deferred till the arguments were concluded. He moved that the Democratic offer of evidence as to Watts' ineligibility be immediately admitted, and the motion was carried without dissent. There was some delay found to be necessary to obtain the presence of the witnesses, and the Commission took a recess of half an hour. When the Commission reassembled after the recess, Mr. Merrick, on behalf of the Democrats, and for the purpose of proving that Mr. Watts was not eligible to the position of Presidential Elector, offered in evidence the Postmaster's commission issued to him, Watts, by the Post Office Department. A commission issued to a Mr. Hill, who succeeded Watts as Postmaster, was also produced. It was dated the 3d of January, 1877, and the counsel stated that it was offered for the purpose of proving that Watts' successor had not been duly installed, and was not properly authorized to act until Jan. 3, and that consequently Watts was in possession of the office until the date named. This very thin bit of special pleading was completely overthrown by Postmaster General Tyner, who was called by Mr. Evarts, and who, in answer to questions put by that gentleman, testified that on the 14th of November last he had received a telegraphic dispatch from Watts, in which he had resigned the position of Postmaster held by him at Lafayette, Yam Hill County, Oregon. The Democratic counsel here objected to the testimony, but their objection was overruled by a large majority of the Commissioners, and the Postmaster General continued. He produced the telegram received from Watts and one accepting the resignation, which he sent in reply. In addition to this he testified that he had sent a telegram to Mr. Underwood, a special agent of the Post Office in Oregon, in which he ordered him to take charge of the office made vacant by the resignation of Watts. In due course of mail he received a letter from Watts dated Nov. 12, and resigning the position of Postmaster from that day. He had also received a letter from Special Agent Underwood, in which he stated that he took charge of the Lafayette office on the 14th of November, and moved it out of Watts' store and into another building. Underwood continued in charge until Mr. Hill was appointed. Further on Mr. Tyner testified that the Post Office in question was one of the fourth class, paying only $275 a year.

Watts, the Elector, was the next witness called. His appearance created a flutter of excitement, which was almost immediately silenced by Judge Clifford's cry of "Order, order; we must have order." The man upon whose vote the Presidential question now depends is fully six feet two inches in height and large in proportion. He has a singularly frank and honest countenance and gave his testimony in a clear, outspoken, straightforward way that prepossessed every one in his favor. He swore in substance that he had held the position of Postmaster at Lafayette until the 13th of last November, when he resigned. On the 14th his resignation was accepted by the Post-office Department, and he had not acted since then. The Auditor of the Treasury for the Post Office Department corroborated this evidence, and then, the Democratic counsel declining to cross-examine, Mr. Evarts commenced his argument, which was, in many respects, even more clear and convincing than was his address in the Louisiana case. He contended that he and his associates had from the first taken precisely the same ground in all the cases which they had argued. He was, he continued, glad to see that the eminent counsel on the other side were coming over to their way of thinking. He referred, of course, to the change of base made by them since the decisions in the Florida and Louisiana cases. His argument from this point was mainly devoted to the legal aspects of the case, and the quotation of legal authorities which sustained his position. Mr. Merrick, for the lost cause of Tilden and company, followed in an address, which can only be compared to the charge of a forlorn hope. It was a fine, dashing oration, well prepared and well delivered, and before a country jury it would have been very effective; but as a legal appeal to a tribunal made up of the most eminent lawyers in the country it was about as successful as was the last ride of the "Six Hundred." When he finished Mr. Evarts submitted a few legal references, and then, on motion of Commissioner Garfield, the tribunal went into executive session.

The Commission were in session about two hours this evening, after the conclusion of the arguments, and much to the surprise of everybody, adjourned without any action beyond an agreement that the final vote shall be taken to-morrow afternoon at 4 o'clock. This will bring the decision again into the House on Saturday. The situation is thus become one of great anxiety, because there is only one week more, and the disputed State of South Carolina is yet to be decided. The city is again full of excitement and wild rumors, and aside from the uncertainty of the action of the Commission, which is uncertain as all things future are uncertain, there is the doubt as to the purpose and ability of the revolutionary Democrats. This is the great disturbing question, and it remains unsettled and will so remain till the Oregon case has been sent to the two houses. There has been some nervousness about the decision in the Oregon case. It is exceedingly technical, and while the equities of the case are clear, there are those who feared the technical and ingenious theories of Hoadley might induce Justice Bradley to decide that Cronin was legally given the certificate in place of Watts. This is the kind of talk heard from those Republicans who are always finding lions in the path. There is no occasion for any such fear, and it is learned that the indications in to-night's meeting of the Commission point to a favorable result. The Democrats will doubtless vote solidly that there are but two Electoral votes to be counted from Oregon. This will satisfy the conscience of the fraud hating Bayard, who will in this way announce his abhorrence of the trick by which Cronin was made an Electoral College, and at the same time he will so act as to claim every advantage of that fraud. The decision of the Commission will no doubt be such as to verify the assertion of Mr. Evarts, that the Oregon operators, although as "harmless as serpents, were not any wiser than doves." It is clear that the affair might have been managed so as to have caused much greater trouble.

The uncertainty about the action of the Commission does not cause much anxiety. The great difficulty, as before stated, is about the power of the revolutionists and the good faith of the Democratic caucus faction, because it is clear that the majority in the House now have it in their power to prevent by delay the announcement of the Electoral vote before the end of the session. They have only to act together and on Saturday decide, as in the Louisiana case, not to have a joint meeting till Monday, and then on Monday take a recess till Tuesday, and follow this action with frivolous objections to every Republican State, of which four remain to be counted, to force the end beyond next week Saturday. The South Carolina case can be decided in two hours, but the paid counsel are willing to talk on this case as long as the Commission will hear them, in order to consume time. There is not a single point of ground upon which to raise a contest except, that Hewitt ordered the candidates for Tilden Electors to forward a set of bogus returns, as he might have done in Massachusetts. This case can be forced through the regular routine by a dozen members of the House and Senate. The good faith of a majority of the Democrats not being doubted, there only remains the possibility of defeating the count by the plan concocted by the "grand commander," David Dudley Field. He and his subofficers have been active all day. The runners, Springer, Thompson, Southard, and others of the same sort, would start off as if under orders, and soon again would be back with Field to make reports and get fresh commands. This running about seems to have been to secure pledges from as many Democrats as, possible, to an agreement for filibustering. There are said to be from 36 to 45 or 47 thus pledged. The only method of delay which a small number of Democrats can undertake is by forcing repeated calls of the roll. This can be done by one-fifth of all the members present. The votes of the House during the past month have shown from 250 to 280 members present, and nearly all the members are now here and able to attend. It will require from 50 to 55 members to force a roll-call, and the number pledged to this course would be wholly insufficient. If the majority of the Democrats intend to stand by the law, the count can be completed in spite of the schemers directed by Tilden's personal agents. It is also suggested, as a means of defeating the filibusters, that the rules can be suspended by a two-thirds vote every day next week, and this would require a less number of votes than would be necessary to defeat the calling of the roll on dilatory motions.

There is a mysterious movement or proceeding which has given the Democrats great hope, but how much reason they have for hoping no one can tell. It is a subject of general comment, and causes much excitement. Mr. Conkling was early in his committee-room in the Senate end of the Capitol this morning, and, as the story goes, he was first visited by Daniel Voorhees, one of the worst Democrats ever in Congress. Voorhees went away, and Randall soon appeared. There was then a conference with locked doors of nearly an hour. Randall went back to the Speaker's room and there was a consultation among Democrats there. Mr. Payne is also said to have visited Conkling's room. Some of the details of the stories are doubtless untrue, but the fact which appears to be undeniable is that Randall and Conkling were a long time in conference. Conkling's absence from the Senate Chamber has been noted for several days, and it is now said he has been hard at work in his committee-room. He was reported to be out of town, but this was certainly an error. The occurrences of to-day recall that a prominent Democrat came rushing to the Senate Chamber on the day of the debate on the decision of the Louisiana Commission, and inquired with anxiety whether Mr. Conkling had yet spoken. The Democrats are surely expecting something from the Senator, though there seems to be but little he can do for them now, unless to follow the example of Purman, and, in spite of the ugly rumors, it cannot be credited that he is ready to take such a step.

PROCEEDINGS OF THE COMMISSION.

When the Electoral Commission assembled this morning to finish the hearing in the Oregon case there was a large audience present, which, as usual, remained all day attentive observers of the proceedings and interested listeners to the addresses of Stanley Mathews and Mr. Evarts on the Republican side, and Mr. Merrick, who closed the case for the Democrats.

ARGUMENT OF MR. MATHEWS.

Mr. Mathews began with a reference to the surprises of the other side in changing position and in attributing to their opponents views they never held, and also to the great urgency to produce proof exhibited by the other side—an urgency that was increased in proportion to the degree of certainty that testimony would not be admitted. Then proceeding, he said:

Now, one of the things which are not a surprise is that, in spite of the changed circumstances of the case, we have an exhibition in this of precisely the same standard and gauge of morals. We have Cronin elevated upon a pedestal for public adoration by his inventor as the new statue of popular rights, freedom of elections, purity of the ballot-box, honest count, fair voting, and we are all called upon to fall down and worship him. We have no offers in this case, Mr. President, to prove any bribery, to show that he was paid $3,000 under pretense of his expenses to Washington City as messenger, made by contract notoriously before he thought altogether by himself to make a college by himself. We have no offer to prove the various tricks and devices and strategems and correspondence locked in what we supposed to be undecipherable hieroglyphics to show that this, so far from being an attempt on the part of any of the parties as actors to maintain constitutional doctrines and constitutional rights, was a deep-laid and deliberate scheme to defraud and rob the people of Oregon of their just influence in the Electoral College. I wonder that my friend who spoke last night, when he was underta the United States, why should he not, whenever a competent person applies to him to be inducted into an office, and he is required to clothe him with that without which he could not act, why should he not, in imitation of the example of Lafayette Grover, the Governor of Oregon, constitute himself the guardian of the Constitution of the country, and appeal to it as the great agis, spelling it in capitals as is done by that distinguished person. Why should he not assume also the same right, the same duty, and undertake to exercise a discretion not given to him by the statutes, which belongs to him as the natural protector and guardian of their liberties and Constitution of the country, and so do an act which he may be called upon to perform as necessary to put into office an incompetent, ineligible, and incapable person. Why, Mr. President, in no particular does this certificate of the Governor of Oregon conform in any respect either to the statutes of the United States or to the statutes of Oregon. It is no declaration of the canvass. It does not profess to be. It is not a list of the Electors. It does not profess to be. It is not a declaration of the canvassing officer, because he is not that officer, but is the Secretary of State. For instance, suppose for a moment that this certificate No. 2 is sufficient and proper and conformable to law. Let us see what legal consequences follow It declares that William H. Odell, John E. Cartwright, and E. A. Cronin were declared duly elected Electors of the State of Oregon. Suppose for a moment that the Governor had a right to make the declaration, and had a right to make it in this form. Let us see what the result is: Then Odell, Cartwright, and Cronin constitute the college of Electors—as has been said forcibly by one of the contestors on our side, that is, a body composed of three individuals who are required to meet and consult and deliberate and act in conjunction. They could not each go out by himself and act as an Elector individually, so that the minimum of the College of Electors is at least three persons, and meeting to consult, deliberate and vote together. There seems to have prevailed a contrary impression in Oregon, and that is, that one of them might meet by himself. On that point the only analogous case that I know of is the case of Sharp vs. Dawes, decided in the Court of Appeals in England, and reported in the January number of the Law Reports of this year, page 26. In this case, which was cited at length by Mr. Mathews, the facts were that the Secretary and one shareholder of an association met and transacted business, the Secretary not being a shareholder; and the decision in that case was that the word "meeting" means the getting together of more than one person; that a meeting could not be constituted by one person's attendance, and no business could be legally transacted by him.

Mr. Merrick inquired, suppose there had been no dispute about the regularity of the appointment of the Electors, and two of them had died.

Mr. Mathews replied that he supposed the vacancy would have to be filled. But Mr. Cronin, according to his own statement of what occurred at that time, did not act with the others, but went on and elected two more, appointed two more, himself.

Commissioner Edmunds suggested that it was stated in Cronin's certificate that the other two Electors refused to act.

Mr. Mathews said that was so, and thereupon he appointed two others in their stead. He continued: Now, I take it that one in a College which necessarily consists of three is not capable himself of instituting any action, and that a quorum, a majority of the body, are required to be present. In this case the majority have certified that, having ascertained the existence of a vacancy, they went on to fill it, and that is to be taken as the conclusive and legitimate account of the proceedings of the body.

THE QUESTION OF VACANCY.

In support of the conclusion to be based on this argument, I refer to the decision of the Supreme Court of Oregon referred to by Judge Hoadley last evening. There was a case where the prosecuting attorney accepted an office under the United States which was incompatible, according to the laws of Oregon, with the exercise of the office, which he had previously exercised under the laws of Oregon. The Governor commissioned another person as District Attorney on the ground that he had ascertained and declared a vacancy in consequence of the ineligibility of the occupant. Now, in that case, by the laws of Oregon the Governor is authorized to fill vacancies, and upon the argument that the person authorized to fill a vacancy has the power to ascertain, determine, and declare the existence of the facts which constitute a vacancy, and by the laws of Oregon being the only person who had the power to fill a vacancy, he had the right also to ascertain and declare the existence of those facts which constitute in law a vacancy. Mr. Mathews then proceeded to discuss the question as to what constitutes a vacancy in the Electoral body under the laws of Oregon. The other side have undertaken to demonstrate that the enumeration of the particular instances in which a vacancy occurs, limits the cases to such as the statutes define. I think that such a statute, where the object is to see that the substantial rights of the State are not interfered with, and that it has its full number in the Electoral College, and that its influence in public affairs may not be diminished, no such rule or limit be applied to its interpretation, but that, on the other hand, it is to be interpreted in a large and liberal sense for the promotion of the object which the statute had in view, and that it furnishes to the body of the Electoral College the means and the power to fill vacancies in that body which are ascertained to have occurred, as full and complete as the Legislature itself by any means could supply. Certainly there is no reason why in its application to such a state of things, the ordinary, plain, and common sense meaning should be resisted by the application of any artificial maxim. But, why should it not be? Will any one pay attention to one or two authorities on the point that a vacancy, such as we claim to have existed in this case, may exist and be declared. Counsel then referred to the case of Stephens against Wyatt, where it was expressly held that the election of an ineligible candidate, so far from creating a minority candidate, created a vacancy ab initio—from the commencement of the term. In the case of The Commonwealth against Hanley, Pennsylvania Reports, and other similar cases, the same doctrine is maintained. In one of the cases referred to by the counsel, where an officer who was elected before he was qualified and before the commencement of the term of his office the officer already in office held over, and it was adjudged that there was no vacancy because there was an existing incumbent.

Commissioner Edmunds suggested that the view taken by counsel was that the officer could hold the office until his successor should be qualified.

Mr. Mathews said that was the proposition. He then quoted at length several authorities on this point, and continued: "But it is hardly worth while to hunt for authorities on this point when the authority is so near at hand in the State of Oregon itself. For the State has taken the view by the statute what shall constitute a vacancy. The very context of the statute which prescribes the mode of election of Presidential Electors enumerates the instances which shall constitute the vacancies. First, the death of the incumbent; second, his resignation; third, his removal; fourth, his ceasing to be a resident, or absent of the district, county, or town in which the duties of the office are required to be discharged; fifth, his conviction of an infamous crime; sixth, his refusal to take the oath of office prescribed or to give or renew his official bonds; seventh, the decision of a competent tribunal declaring void his election or appointment. Now, I have heard, on the other hand, that this cannot apply, because in the case of Watts, on the supposition that he was ineligible at the time of his original appointment, there was no decision of a competent tribunal declaring void his election or appointment; and yet, on the other side, they argue that the Governor had a right to declare his election void, and that was the decision of a competent tribunal. If so, I ask whether the consequence does not follow from this statute that instead of electing the minority candidate it merely created a vacancy? It has been and must be argued in order to sustain the claim made here (for without it there is no standing ground) that the election of an ineligible candidate under the constitution of the United States is void ab initio, by virtue of the constitutional provision. Counsel held that The decision of a competent tribunal declaring it void is in fact that a man can be an incumbent although his election or appointment was void. Precisely. Disabilities establishing incapacities do not enforce themselves, and an ineligible candidate may actually be put into occupation of the office until a decision of a competent tribunal declares the invalidity of his election, and thus creates the vacancy under the statute. I ask whether in reason and common sense he cannot voluntarily create a vacancy by doing that which he might be compelled to do by a decision of a competent tribunal. It is said that this title only applies to vacancies occurring in State offices, and cannot be said to apply to the office of Electors. But even on the supposition that it refers primarily to elections to offices held under the State Constitution, nevertheless the references in the other title, which are express directions concerning vacancies in the Electoral body, and the mode of filling them must be construed in pari materia by the context, so that you come to the question what the Legislature meant by a vacancy occurring "otherwise" in the Electoral body. It means a vacancy occurring in any one of the ways which by law may be created in refrence to State officers. There it stands, on the express terms and letter of the statutes of the State, showing that, admitting Watts to have been an ineligible candidate, and admitting his election to have been utterly void, still he was the person declared duly elected, because he had the highest number of votes, and, notwithstanding his ineligibility and the voidance of his election, he was capable under the Constitution and laws of Oregon of being inducted into the office and of holding it until, by resignation, or the decision of a competent tribunal ousting him from it, vacancy shall be declared, and then the majority of the Electoral College, by a plurality of votes, and not by the solitary voice of Cronin, were called into being and into efficacy, and had power to fill up so the full measure of the constitutional right the number of votes to which the State of Oregon was entitled.

The President [Justice Clifford] asked counsel whether he claimed there was any difference between a vote cast for an ineligible candidate and a blank vote.

Mr. Mathews said there was just as much difference as there was between a man and a mouse—between a live man capable of exercising the functions of the office and doing the things which the law imposed upon him and a mere nothing. "A man's a man for a' that," and though incapable by law of holding an office, he nevertheless may be put in that office, and if nobody objects he can exercise the functions of the office and discharge the duties, and every act performed by him is just as valid as if he was the most thoroughly furnished man by the law for the performance of all the duties.

Commissioner Morton inquired whether, when an office is filled by another person serving as an officer de facto, and whose acts are held invalid as to all third persons, could the office at the same [illegible] was actually in office and acting. He can forego it by resignation, but if he is an officer de facto the office is not vacant. If you hold the office to be vacant, then there is no officer there. But the very point of this decision is that, though ineligible to hold and incapable of taking, nevertheless he was in office. He was there, and there was no vacancy.

SELF-EXECUTING POWER OF PROHIBITIONS.

Now, in regard to the question about the self-executing power of the Constitution in reference to these prohibitions, it has been urged in argument on another occasion that no such legislation was necessary. For instance, it was said there was a prohibition on the States against emitting bills of credit, of passing ex post facto laws, or laws impairing the obligation of a contract, and it was said with an air of triumph, as if the question itself contained its own answer, what legislation was ever needed to execute those provisions of the statute? Why, the question proves my proposition, because there has been legislation in execution of these provisions, and without them they could not be executed to-day. For instance, in regard to the constitutional prohibition that the State shall pass no law impairing the obligations of contracts. That prohibition is never exercised except when it is raised between private persons, and the case is carried up by virtue of the judiciary act of Congress to the Supreme Court of the United States, from the decision of the State court, in order to determine that question, and they do determine it because the Supreme Court, having become vested by that act of Congress with jurisdiction and the power to try cases at law and equity arising under the Constitution and laws of the United States, is bound, by the doctrine that the Constitution of the United States is the law of that case, to enforce it judicially. But if the court had never been empowered to act by the act of Congress, it could not have executed that provision of the Constitution.

Mr. Mathews said that it was only by that provision of the Constitution which made the two houses judges of the election returns and qualifications of their members that it was executed, and that it is not executed in any other way than as dependent on the political will and power of each house. Each house could, in defiance of the Constitution, without any means of preventing it, admit an ineligible member to its body. Where is the power to execute the Constitution against the House if it chooses to admit an incapable person? And now it is proposed in this case, without previous legislation, without any indication of the will of Congress as to what ought to be the consequences, to disfranchise the people of a State, to disfranchise, in each, some man holding an insignificant and unknown office of trust and profit under the United States, in violation of the provisions of the Constitution has been voted for as Elector non constat; but that Congress, in the execution of its power to legislate, to carry into effect these provisions of the Constitution, should withhold such consequences as that. They might, by legislation, prevent such appointments, anticipate them, and impose penalties for a violation. But I take it that the American Congress has yet to come into power that, if called upon to deliberate legislatively on that behalf, will impose the penalty of disfranchisement upon a State because an Elector had been voted for who was incapable of executing the office.

Commissioner Bradley—Your position then is that none but a regularly constituted authority having jurisdiction can oust an ineligible person who has been elected.

Mr. Mathews—Yes, Sir; because there must be a tribunal to determine the fact. It is a judicial question to be ascertained by evidence, or at any rate there must be some mode provided by law for going into the question and deciding it, whether judicial or otherwise.

Commissioner Strong said it was very apparent from the course the argument had taken that the whole time allotted to counsel on each side was liable to be consumed before they came to the question of the admissibility of the evidence. He moved that the evidence described in the first item of the offer made last evening be received subject to the decision of the Commission in regard to its legal effect, and if there was any evidence on the other side tending to counteract such evidence, that that evidence should be received at this stage of the proceeding.

The motion of Commissioner Strong was adopted by the vote of the Commission. On account of the non-attendance of some witnesses a recess was then taken until 12:45 o'clock.

POSTMASTER WATTS' RESIGNATION.

On the re-assembling of the Commission Mr. Merrick offered in evidence the commission of J. W. Watts as Postmaster.

Mr. Evarts submitted that the Postmaster General was the proper witness to produce the papers himself, as the other side had subpœnaed him.

The Postmaster General was in attendance and ready to verify them as being from his office. After considerable discussion, however, he signified, to save time, his willingness that the paper should be treated as a certified copy.

Mr. Merrick then offered in evidence the commission of Henry W. Hallas, Post Master at Lafayette, in the County of Yam Hill, State of Oregon, issued Jan. 3, 1877.

Mr. Evarts reserved all his objections.

Mr. Justice Clifford inquired if Mr. Merrick had anything more to offer.

Mr. Merrick had nothing more and rested the Democratic case for the present.

Mr. Evarts then called as a witness the Postmaster General, James N. Tyner, who was sworn and examined by Mr. Evarts. He testified that he knew of Mr. Watts as being Postmaster at Lafayette, Yam Hill County, Oregon, and that it was a fourth class office, the appointment being vested in the Postmaster General. It was not a Presidential office. His response as to the question as to when Mr. Watts resigned his office was interrupted by an objection from Judge Green, who submitted that the best evidence was the written resignation, if any such existed, and preferred his formal objection.

Mr. Commissioner Abbott said he understood the counsel to ask if that resignation was in writing, and Mr. Justice Clifford directed Mr. Evarts to put the question preliminarily.

Mr. Evarts then asked if he received any resignation from Mr. Watts, and in what form?

The witness said he received it by telegraph and afterward in writing. He had the telegram with him, and produced it, and it was offered and admitted in evidence. The dispatch was received on Nov. 14. The witness replied to it on the same day, accepting the resignation, and he produced a copy of his reply, which Mr. Evarts also offered in evidence, and it was admitted.

By Commissioner Edmunds—You say you sent that telegram on that day? A.—I did, by the Western Union Telegraph Company, and I received this letter at the Post Office Department on the 9th day of December, through Mr. Underwood, the Special Agent of the Post Office Department.

The counsel on the other side declined to examine the witness, and Mr. Commissioner Thurman asked if there was any law requiring the accounts of a Postmaster to be settled before his resignation was accepted, to which witness replied, "No, Sir; there is nothing of that kind that I am aware of."

Mr. Evarts then called John M. Watts, whose testimony was substantially the same as that of the Postmaster General. He stated that he did not act as Postmaster at all after the 14th of November, nor was the office kept upon his place after that.

J. M. McGrew was next sworn, and examined by Mr. Evarts, saying in response to inquiries that the settlement of Postmasters' accounts came under his department. The account of Mr. Watts had been settled. Mr. Evarts asked him to what date were his (Watts') emoluments and salary fixed by that settlement, to which the witness answered, "To and including the 14th of November, 1876. That was the last account rendered by the Postmaster."

This closed the testimony, and Mr. Evarts was invited to close the argument on the part of the Republicans.

ARGUMENT OF MR. EVARTS.

Mr. Evarts occupied the first five minutes of his time by restating the various propositions which he and his colleagues had taken in the Florida and Louisiana cases, insisting that they had strictly adhered to them in this case as far as they applied. He said that the counsel upon the other side had themselves, in the prolonged discussion, maintained as a matter of law and upon authority, not only the position he took as to the action of a State bringing an Elector into the execution of his power as an Elector, but, as he understood the accomplished and experienced lawyer who yesterday represented the argument of their opponents that he was, until quo warranto, or until certiorari disturbed his decision, a de facto and de jure representative of the office, and he, never having had a doubt that before many weeks had passed the universal judgment of this country would sustain these positions that were espoused, and that have been adopted by this Commission, I confess that I did not expect so signal and immediate a seal upon that expectation as the present immediate avowal and approval and maintenance of those positions. I welcome this as a great aid and necessary to the irresponsible and rash commentaries that have been made in various public relations, and especially in the public press, upon those controverted points of law. You have decided them in the presence of great agitations of the people, and you have decided them in a way that will make them firm and sure when agitations in the future shall take other complexions and be forwarded in the interests of other parties. For what you have done, for what you shall do, principles of the Constitution and the maintenance of the laws of this country in the great transaction of a Presidential election are made ceatain, intelligible, rational, and sound. Now, in Oregon it is very plain that an election was held and through all its stages was conducted with an entire observance of all the requirements of the law, and with an entire acceptance, on the part of the whole population, of the election and its result up to the last stage, and of its having been according to law, unquestioned in integrity and in justice; that that result was reached by the authentic canvass of the votes by the proper authorities and in the proper presence. All that has disturbed this result occurs after the completion of the election, and its certification as completed by the proper authorities, after the file of the canvass under its cerrification by the officer of the State charged with the duty of canvassing and of certifying. Now, first let us understand what there is in the evidence that bears upon the action of what is contained in the certificates, which are plenary evidence before you, having been opened and transmitted by the President of the Senate. It is, that Mr. Watts, holding a small Post Office of the fourth class in the State of Oregon, appointed years before, was discharging the duties of that office while under its obligations on the 7th of November; that on the 14th of November he had resigned his office; his resignation had been accepted; that thereafter the department accepted the change of the office and conducted it from that time forward, and that, as a matter of fact, the office itself was changed from the place of business of the Postmaster who resigned to the place of business of the man designated to take his place, Mr. Hill having a drug store, and then became immediately Assistant Postmaster under the Special Agent, and in due course of time received the commission as Postmaster that had been sent on to him, whenever you come to consider—if you do—the question whether he could be appointed on the 6th day of December, on his refusal to act on his prior appointment, is unmistakably placed before you in the position of a Postmaster who had resigned, and who had received from the Post Office Department the acceptance of the trust he laid aside and its continued exercise thenceforth by the department itself under its agents. Whatever we said that received the assent of this Commission in the former arguments need not be repeated. Whatever was said then did not receive the assent of this Commission will be of no service in that regard if it be repeated, and I shall therefore proceed with the inquiry into the validity of the vote of the three Electors in the first certificate as it rests upon the vote in your possession, proceeding from the State, delivered into the hands of the President of the Senate, opened before the two houses of Congress, and now deposited with you as evidence for you to regard. What, then, does certificate No. 1 contain? And I ask your attention to parts of it that I now shall designate.

Mr. Evarts then quoted from the language of the certificate as presented before the Commission. He then quoted the constitutional provisions on that subject, and said that the certificate presented by Odell, Cartwright, and Watts fully complied with those provisions. Suppose the list appended is not as one would have it, the executive of the State, is that a failure of duty on the part of the Electors? There is no imputation that they have omitted to include it in their return, but it must be charged to the fact that the Executive whose duty it was to furnish them the list omitted to do so. Now, before you the minutes of the official proceedings of this Electoral College, setting forth in detail each separate act performed by them, from which it appears that having duly assembled at the State capital they demanded of the Governor and Secretary of State the certified list of the Electors, but the Governor and Secretary refused to deliver them. Being informed that such list had been delivered to Cronin by the Secretary of State, they demanded them of Cronin, but he refused to deliver or exhibit them, whereupon they procured from the Secretary of State certified copies of the vote cast in Oregon for Electors, and have attached such certified lists to the papers presented by them. What is there now left of the proposition of a State being defrauded of its vote in the Electoral College, when its Electors, appointed according to law, having assembled to discharge their constitutional duties, are deprived by the Executive of the State of the certified lists required to be appended in verification? Which is to stand—the Electors made by the Constitution of the United States, sufficient certifiers of their own election, and showing that the absence of the Governor's lists was caused by the Governor's default and not their own, or those who, in violation of the provisions of the Constitution of the State and of the United States, proceeded to constitute themselves Electors? Can the fraudulent power to reverse the decision of the people, as exercised by the Governor, subtract or withhold a paper by which the Electoral College shall be destroyed and the Presidential vote lost? Was there any excuse for withholding on the part of the Governor, or any pretense that it was delivered? Not the slightest. The duty and obligation of the Governor in this behalf were complete, and his withholding the certificates needs no description of trick, fraud, or connivance. It was an absolute desertion of duty, with an object in view as to the result, as shown, and the law will impute it as such. Mr. Evarts then quoted the law of Oregon defining the duties of the Secretary of State, and argued that the failure of duty on the part of the Governor and Secretary of State to perform an act required of them should not be allowed to throw out the vote of the State. He claimed that the certified lists which were subsequently obtained from the Secretary of State showing the votes actually cast, was the very canvass itself, and that the Secretary of State was the proper official to certify to the transaction of a State. Who else is there in Oregon who could certify a list? Who has the list, the seal, and who holds the office of both record and certification? It is the Secretary of State. Supposing that to be so, where do you find any defect that is not an adequate compliance with the act of Congress and the act of Oregon? You have only to read the laws of Oregon to see that the Electors are to be appointed by election, and that in every election held in that State, the persons who have the highest number of votes shall be declared elected. What does this certificate want under the acts of Oregon? The act of Oregon requires the list to be given by the Secretary of State, under the great seal of State, and that the Governor shall sign it. The Governor, in pursuance of a great breach of trust and duty, refuse his name to that certificate; but does it cease to be a certification that the Congress of the United States will accept as an adequate observance of the directory duty that the executive authority of the State shall furnish lists of the persons appointed? I think not. Under the laws of Oregon this paper here before you (the certificate of Watts and others) is to you as a matter of evidence, precisely the same as if you had before you the original paper in the office of the Secretary of State. I contend that, taking into view the law of Oregon and the law of the United States, the certificates we present are all that is necessary to make the transaction a bona fide action and the complete and lawful action of the Electors of the State. These Electors cannot be chargable with any dereliction of duty because they were unable to obtain the Governor's certificate.

In reply to a question from Commissioner Bradley, Mr. Evarts said that the Secretary of State was the canvassing officer and performed his duty in the presence of the Governor as he understood it.

Commissioner Abbott inquired whether there was any law permitting the Secretary of State to certify to a result drawn from certain figures or returns, or whether his certifying to any paper was a simple certification of its being a true copy from the original.

Mr. Evarts replied that his action in certifying these returns was in itself a canvass; that the rest of the transaction was lower down in the election. His production of the official vote, made from the votes forwarded from the precincts and the counties, was in itself the canvass of the votes. Will any one tell me what else was in canvassing the votes? What more can any one do than take the returns and tabulate them. Mr. Evarts proceeded to quote the minutes of the record, showing the meeting of the Electors, Watts' resignation, &c., and said that was a transaction done in perfect good faith. His resignation rested on the uncertain opinion as to whether his having been a Postmaster destroyed his eligibility and power to vote, and fearing a public injury to the State of Oregon he refused to act under that appointment. He did his duty in the College of Electors. Whatever was done by Watts was done openly, and if Cronin was a member of the College, and had attended and took part in the transaction, it would have been seen by Cronin as well as others. The college then proceeded to elect him to fill the vacancy that existed, and gave him a title which would not put in peril one of the votes of the State of Oregon. Then the vote proceeded and the very ballots themselves are given to you. Did anybody pretend that the certificate named by the act of Congress was any part of the warrant of Electors to act in the college? No, it is to be delivered to the Electors acting in the college, in order that they may use it as a part of their transaction. You have, then, this absolute proof that when this College uncertook to act there were present the two men that without any impeachment had a perfect title to the certificate. To present the third man and there was nobody else present. Then the transaction went on. Therefore, unless you hold that the Governor's certificate and its subtraction by the violation of the Governor's duty is sufficient to suppress the Electoral College and the vote of the State, you have before everything that you need to enter the act of Congress without looking at the certificates which they put in in support of this title. Now, we have another certificate, and that contains nothing that contradicts the other and nothing that by itself can stand on its own inspection as an adequate transaction. Mr. Evarts then called attention to the wording of the Governor's certificate, and contended that it did not comply with the act of Congress, in that he undertook to insert the word "eligible" before the word election to cover himself from the condemnation of open and recognized fraud and falsehood, Instead of obeying the laws and constitution of Oregon, he has given a reason for his action to save himself from absolutely disregarding his duty. Mr. Evarts quoted from the law of Oregon to show that when two persons are voted for, the one receiving the highest number of votes shall be declared elected, and argued that his disqualification to hold the office does not elect the other who receives the next highest number of votes. In that case there must be a new election. It is not a question for the Government to determine. The principle of the College of Electors is that the majority govern, and that principle cannot be applied to a less number than three. One man is not a College, and two cannot be, for there cannot be a majority unless there be at least three. Three makes a college, because the vital principle of the college is that the majority exercises the power of the College. What is Cronin's account of this proceeding? He undertakes to say that they refused to act; but would you allow Cronin's statement that these two men resigned and deserted their duty to outweigh their own certificates and their own ballots that are here before you? I should think not. But, admitted that these Republican Electors did not recognize Cronin or regard him as an Elector. They had the right to that judgment and nobody else regarded him as such, except as an experiment to see whether he could be manufactured and stand until after the counting of this vote. No one could claim that anything passed on him when a corporation did not recognize the title of a man, claiming to belong to it, except that he was extruded, and if he was wrongfully extruded he must right himself by law. Parties might question whether the action of the board in that extrusion was or not lawful; but did you ever hear of the extrusion of a member of a board lawfully or unlawfully authorizing him to go ahead and fill the board and proceed to act? I think this is as strange a novelty in the law of the creation of colleges or other bodies as was ever suggested. Whatever may have happened to Cronin by his extrusion was did not make him the college. Otherwise you would have the common sense of facts that under the laws of Oregon she could have three Electoral Colleges, composed of one man each, who could cast his vote in his own way and by his own authority; but if you adopt the rule that the majority constitutes the college you put yourself under the protection of the principle which governs all corporative action, that there can be but one college, and that a majority anchors to itself all the powers of such college.

Commissioner Abbott inquired what would be the effect if two Electors had died and but one was left? Would the State lose its own two votes?

Mr. Evarts replied that the law in such case the State ought to exercise a power reserved to it, and treat the election as having failed. It might be, however, that the votes would be lost. There is no existing law of Oregon, or any other State, that in its terms covers such a case. There can be no college when you are reduced to one. You have an Elector, I agree, and it is undesirable that the State should lose its vote.

Judge Hoadley asked counsel if he considered the word "plurality" as referring to the original number elected, or to those remaining after the vacancy.

Mr. Evarts replied there was nothing that confined it to the whole number; but there was a clear authority to them to choose by the plurality of a quorum, according to the ordinary rule of corporations and colleges, that a majority of a quorum is equivalent to a majority of the whole. Now, upon an examination of all these certificates I have been gratified to find that, although these operators up in Oregon were as flarmless as serpents, they were not any wiser than doves. Nothing has been done there that defeats the Constitution of the United States, or that defrands the State of Oregon, or that defeats the election of a President. And that is not from any attempt to perpetrate a consummate fraud is to exhibit the fraud to public condemnation, but the safety of the State remains unharmed.

ARGUMENT OF MR. MERRICK.

Mr. Merrick then addressed the Commission on behalf of the Democratic side. He addressed himself to the tribunal believing that they would adhere to their previous decisions, and apply the same principles to the decision of the Oregon case that they did to the Louisiana and Florida cases. In the Florida case he had argued that it was competent for them to go behind the Governor's certificate upon charges of mistake or fraud, but the Commission had determined they had no power to do so, and he must consider that the real meaning of their judgment was that the certificate of the Governor was the conclusive and ultimate act performed by the State, beyond which they had no power to go. He had observed at the time of the argument on the Florida case that the leading counsel, while their bark was being cast against the Scylla of Florida, were even then to king ahead to the Charybdis that threatened peril in Oregon. It was then apparent from the discussions, and it was now apparent from the admission; for, if your Honors follow the track pursued in Florida, counsel admitted that to withhold the commission, or to withhold the certificate from a party deemed by the Governor to be ineligible to the office, was the legitimate performance of a constitutional and proper executive trust. You have told us, said he, that the State cannot interfere with an Elector, whether eligible or ineligible, whether the election be secured by fair means or foul. You have told us that it cannot be interfered with, except between the time of conclusion of the Returning Board and the time of his voting, which, in Florida, I believe, was six hours, and in Louisiana some four or five. Now, the State of Oregon, seeking to perform her duty, and this much-abused Executive, seeking to protect that State from the odium of having wantonly violated the Constitution of the United States, have solemnly determined that an Elector claiming to be elected was not elected. The counsel here referred to the case of Barkley against the Governor, in 39th Missouri, page 399, and to section 712, page 253, and went on to claim that the Governor of Oregon could not have given the certificate to an ineligible candidate without violating his oath and being guilty of an infraction of the Federal Constitution. He must inevitably have a discretion in the performance of his duty and must not do anything which would make him a violator of the Constitution. Mr. Merrick claimed that as Cronin held the certificate, with the broad seal of the State attached to it pledging the munificence of title to the office. What has Watts? Nothing. The opposing counsel said, in considering the evidence of title possessed by Watts, that he had the certificate from the Secretary of State as to the canvass of votes. What did this paper here before you (the certificate of Watts and others) is to you as a matter of evidence, precisely the same as if you had before you the original paper in the office of the Secretary of State. I contend that, taking into view the law of Oregon and the law of the United States, the certificates we present are all that is necessary to make the transaction a bona fide action and the complete and lawful action of the Electors of the State. He addressed himself to the tribunal believing that they would adhere to their previous decisions, and apply the same principles to the decision of the Oregon case that they did to the Louisiana and Florida cases. In the Florida case he had argued that it was competent for them to go behind the Governor's certificate upon charges of mistake or fraud, but the Commission had determined they had no power to do so, and he must consider that the real meaning of their judgment was that the certificate of the Governor was the conclusive and ultimate act performed by the State, beyond which they had no power to go. He had observed at the time of the argument on the Florida case that the leading counsel, while their bark was being cast against the Scylla of Florida, were even then to king ahead to the Charybdis that threatened peril in Oregon. It was then apparent from the discussions, and it was now apparent from the admission; for, if your Honors follow the track pursued in Florida, counsel admitted that to withhold the commission, or to withhold the certificate from a party deemed by the Governor to be ineligible to the office, was the legitimate performance of a constitutional and proper executive trust. You have told us, said he, that the State cannot interfere with an Elector, whether eligible or ineligible, whether the election be secured by fair means or foul. You have told us that it cannot be interfered with, except between the time of conclusion of the Returning Board and the time of his voting, which, in Florida, I believe, was six hours, and in Louisiana some four or five. Now, the State of Oregon, seeking to perform her duty, and this much-abused Executive, seeking to protect that State from the odium of having wantonly violated the Constitution of the United States, have solemnly determined that an Elector claiming to be elected was not elected. The counsel here referred to the case of Barkley against the Governor, in 39th Missouri, page 399, and to section 712, page 253, and went on to claim that the Governor of Oregon could not have given the certificate to an ineligible candidate without violating his oath and being guilty of an infraction of the Federal Constitution. He must inevitably have a discretion in the performance of his duty and must not do anything which would make him a violator of the Constitution. Mr. Merrick claimed that as Cronin held the certificate, with the broad seal of the State attached to it pledging the munificence of title to the office. What has Watts? Nothing. The opposing counsel said, in considering the evidence of title possessed by Watts, that he had the certificate from the Secretary of State as to the canvass of votes. What did this paper here before you (the certificate of Watts and others) is to you as a matter of evidence, precisely the same as if you had before you the original paper in the office of the Secretary of State. I contend that, taking into view the law of Oregon and the law of the United States, the certificates we present are all that is necessary to make the transaction a bona fide action and the complete and lawful action of the Electors of the State. These Electors cannot be chargable with any dereliction of duty because they were unable to obtain the Governor's certificate.

In reply to a question from Commissioner Bradley, Mr. Evarts said that the Secretary of State was the canvassing officer and performed his duty in the presence of the Governor as he understood it.

Commissioner Abbott inquired whether there was any law permitting the Secretary of State to certify to a result drawn from certain figures or returns, or whether his certifying to any paper was a simple certification of its being a true copy from the original.

Mr. Evarts replied that his action in certifying these returns was in itself a canvass; that the rest of the transaction was lower down in the election. His production of the official vote, made from the votes forwarded from the precincts and the counties, was in itself the canvass of the votes. Will any one tell me what else was in canvassing the votes? What more can any one do than take the returns and tabulate them. Mr. Evarts proceeded to quote the minutes of the record, showing the meeting of the Electors, Watts' resignation, &c., and said that was a transaction done in perfect good faith. His resignation rested on the uncertain opinion as to whether his having been a Postmaster destroyed his eligibility and power to vote, and fearing a public injury to the State of Oregon he refused to act under that appointment. He did his duty in the College of Electors. Whatever was done by Watts was done openly, and if Cronin was a member of the College, and had attended and took part in the transaction, it would have been seen by Cronin as well as others. The college then proceeded to elect him to fill the vacancy that existed, and gave him a title which would not put in peril one of the votes of the State of Oregon. Then the vote proceeded and the very ballots themselves are given to you. Did anybody pretend that the certificate named by the act of Congress was any part of the warrant of Electors to act in the college? No, it is to be delivered to the Electors acting in the college, in order that they may use it as a part of their transaction. You have, then, this absolute proof that when this College uncertook to act there were present the two men that without any impeachment had a perfect title to the certificate. To present the third man and there was nobody else present. Then the transaction went on. Therefore, unless you hold that the Governor's certificate and its subtraction by the violation of the Governor's duty is sufficient to suppress the Electoral College and the vote of the

No living preacher of the Gospel has made such a distinctive mark as a ripe scholar, brilliant orator, most subtle reasoner, a sound Christian, and as a fearless scientific inquirer, liberal and bold to a fault, as the author of this book. In the treatment of such a subject as the one under review, the graces of his style shine forth in every page. Martineau, unlike too many of his Non-Conformist brethren, is not afraid of rigid scientific inquiry, even if some generally accepted scriptural doctrine, or, in other words, misapprehended work of Providence, be exploded. He takes his firm standpoint on the ground that neither nature nor the all-powertul God of nature can lie or be contradictory, however often and much man may misinterpret both. An impression has gone abroad, he remarks, "that natural history and science are destined to give the coup de grâce to all theology, and discharge the religious phenomena from human life; that churches and their symbols must disappear like the witches' chamber and the astrologists' tower, and that everything above our nature is dark and void." The papers in this book are written to combat this impression, and the bald and unsatistactory theory laid down by Tyndall in his famous address before the British Association at Belfast, that leaving the divine and supernatural out of the question "religion" is still worth maintaining as "a nursery of emotion." We do not know that the true nature of the relative position of the great antagonistic schools of thought has ever been put more succinctly and clearly than in the following sentence: "In so far as church belief is still committed to a given cosmogony and natural history of man, it lies open to scientific refutation, and has already received from it many a wound under which it visibly pines away. It is needless to say that the new 'Book of Genesis,' which resorts to Lucretius for its first beginnings, to protoplasm for its fifth day, to natural selection for its Adam and Eve, and to evolution for all the rest, contradicts the old book at every point; and inasmuch as it dissipates the dream of Paradise and removes the tragedy of the fall, cancels at once the need and the scheme of redemption, and so leaves the historical churches of Europe crumbling away from their very foundations." In treating of miracles, the bold and trenchant writers of the last century saw very clearly the necessity for at once assailing their authenticity, while the many learned apologists used subtle argumentative theories, to reconcile violations of the laws of nature by the great Originator of those immaculate laws. Such men as Hume could see in the admission of supernatural agency in the action of miracles, an admission of the whole great scheme of redemption —the corner-stone of the Christian faith. This they looked upon as superstitious, and consequently kept on their clear logical reasoning track. We must hold with the author of this most fascinating book, that if we are to accept the new book of Genesis, which is being written for us and future generations by the Darwins, Huxleys, and Tyndalls of the present, then farewell to the Christian faith. The religion of the pure physicist and the philosophical and scientific theologian are irreconcilable. Dr. Martineau thus puts it very fairly: "That those who labor to render the universe intelligible should call in question its relation to intelligence is one of those curious inconsistencies to which the ablest specialists are often the most liable when meditating in foreign fields. If it takes mind to construe the world, how can the negation of mind suffice to construe it?" The elegant volume before us consists of an address delivered in the Manchester New College on Oct. 6, 1874, and two papers, reprinted from the Contemporary Review.

If those peculiar babies of which Helen was the fond mother have delighted innumerable readers, these pretty spoiled darlings have quickly taken upon themselves something like paternal functions, for they are likely to become the fathers of a number of books in which their pervading influence may be visible. It is, however, with a slight feeling of regret that the reviewer notices, printed on the title page of the Annals of a Baby, these words: "A companion to Helen's Babies." As good a book as Annals of a Baby requires no bush, for an anonymous writer has produced such a clever volume that it seems more than a pity that it should not have stood alone by itself, relying upon its own intrinsic merit. Grouped then around baby as a sun, there are a number of happily conceived personages, grandfathers and grandmothers, aunts, uncles, nurses, rich and poor relations, who, as lesser planets, revolve more or less harmoniously, but all having some definite course, due entirely to the occult yet beneficent influence of the baby. The story is prettily told, and above all there is a pervading spirit of intense charity. There is one episode in the little book, conceived with rare skill, and described in powerful language. There is a poor, fallen woman, almost God-forsaken, who is recalled from a life of shame and misery by the baby. Into the arms of this woman the child is placed by the confiding mother, and a soul is saved. The literary work of the book is excellent, and remarkable for its rareness. If Helen's Babies have many admirers, so undoubtedly will have the single baby whose annals have been so felicitously given to the world. It would be no disparagement to the first of these books, where we to say that the Annals of a Baby, taking a wider ground, and touching loftier topics, is quite equal to Helen's Babies, and might even find more lasting admirers. There is just this difference between these two books: while Helen's Babies are rather prototypes of the pretty eccentricities of children, the Annals of a Baby direct attention to those happier and holier influences which the advent of a child makes in our homes. In a simple way, then, and with modest material, the author of the Annals of a Baby has succeeded in reaching a higher ground.

THE LAND—BIRDS AND GAME—BIRDS OF NEW-ENGLAND. By H. D. MINOT. Salem, Mass.: Naturalists' Agency, 1877.

This is a hand-book for collectors of birds' eggs and those who desire to learn the general outlines of bird life, yet are not able to buy the costly volumes of Wilson, Audubon, and others. The introduction treats of methods of finding and preserving eggs and gives a good deal of miscellaneous advice for the prosecution of a very charming study. The bulk of the book is occupied by a classified series of notices of the most important representatives of each order and suborder of birds. Instead of colored plates outlined figures of typical birds are introduced in the text, in order to keep the price of the work within reasonable bounds. A good deal of the habits and manners of the birds mentioned is taken from Wilson and Audubon, but much new matter of personal observation has been added. The note of the bird is generally indicated. An appendix gives an ornithological calendar for Eastern Massachusetts, with notes on the Inessores, or land birds. With this guide one can tell at about what date to expect certain birds. There is also a key to the eggs of Massachusetts, and a key to the land birds of New-England. Finally, the appendix contains an index to English names in commonest use, with references to the body of the book, and one to scientific names. The volume is really a manual of a workmanlike kind, founded on the best authorities and written with care and judgment. The publishers wish it known that $3 sent to the Naturalists' Agency, Salem, Mass., will insure the delivery of the book, postpaid.

THE MARCH MAGAZINES.

SCRIBNER'S MAGAZINE.

—A bright paper on the Aquarium, lately got in working order in this City, forms the opening paper of the Scribner's for March. It is complete after the fashion of these reports, giving an outline of the enterprise, a picture of the projector, and many little sketches of strange fishes. The comic element is not wanting, supplied by the well-known pencil of Church. The illustrations to this article signed Kelly, are remarkable for their spirit and vigor. J. C. Beard has also had a hand in them. Next to the illustrated paper of local interest comes Dr. Holland's "Nicholas Minturn," in its monthly installment, which does not take one far from New-York. Reinhart is the artist who draws the illustration to a scene where Nicholas and his lawyer are surprised by a spying burglar in the guise of a tramp. The midnight attack on Ottercliff, which follows this scene, strikes one as rather unnatural in view of the warning felt by all the inhabitants of the villa. Saxe Holm finishes "Farmer Bassett's Romance," with a second part in this number. "Celestial Peas" turns out to be a pleasant little sketch in fiction with a happy dénouement; and S. D. Alexander does for Princeton College what others have done for the other colleges in successive numbers of this magazine. The first picture is a very characteristic portrait of Dr. James McCosh, who looks as if he had just delivered himself of one of his quick speeches. One of the daughters of Gilbert Stuart, the early American painter, who resides, we believe, in Newport, R. I., contributes a paper on the youth of her father. Clarence Cook's ninth installment on "Beds and Tables," does not fall short of its usual excellence. The drawing of many of these cuts is excellent, and we are glad to see that Mr. Cook is beginning to curb his propensity to indulge in odd titles to his little pictures. The series is too good to be lost in back numbers of a magazine. Why can they not be bound together in a book for the use of those who do not take Scribner's, but are glad to get such an accumulation of hints toward decorating their homes? The best piece of poetry we have seen from Mr. H. H. Boyesen, will be found under "Elegy to A. G. L.," but we cannot say as much for the poem, "Of William Francis Bartlett. Dead at Pittsfield, Mass., 1876." Yet we will give one of the good stanzas in it:

This man who taught me how 'twas better far
To be a poem than to write it down."

Another poet of this month bears an unfamiliar name, but there is no line that can be omitted from her sonnet. "Harmony," by Anne Lynch Botta, must be given in full or omitted entirely:

"He who with bold and skilful hand sweeps o'er
The organ-keys of some cathedral pile,
Flooding its mystic vault and nave and aisle,
While on his ear falls but a thundrous roar—
In the composer's lofty motive free,
Knows well that all that temple, vast and dim,
Thrills to its base with anthem, psalm, and hymn,
True to the changeless laws of harmony.
So he who on these clanging chords of life,
With firm, sweet touch plays the Great Master's score,
Of truth and love and duty, evermore—
Knows, too, that far beyond this roar and strife,
Though he may never hear, in the true time,
These notes must all accord in symphonies sublime."

Two soldiers of the war, one of them at one time in the most exalted position, the other our late Governor of State, contribute papers. Gen. McClellan continues his Nile tour on the one track which nature has made invariable. Gen. John A. Dix writes sympathetically of Claudian, a Latin poet of the fourth century, and translates into English verse his "Felix qui patriis æyum transegit in agris." General Dix is one of the not unfrequent Americans whose character approaches what we conceive the old Romans to have been. His ability to hold office and conduct affairs at an advanced age is supplemented by a readiness to study and to cultivate a solid kind of literature. His translation is a very good one. Matters of general and particular public interest are attended to in "An Asiatic Invasion," referring to the Chinese, and incidentally defending Anson Burlingame, as well as in "An Exposition of Life Insurance." "That Lass o' Lowrie's" gets better and better; we have seldom seen a serial that holds its own with sustained power so well. Finally, there is a short story of James T. McKay, called "Stella Grayland," of a very tragic cast, and not a very edifying nature. At least, the dénouement is not; the moral of it goes high up in the scale of self-sacrifice.

ST. NICHOLAS.

—The frontispiece of St. Nicholas for March consists in an engraving of a picture by G. Spangenburgh, representing "Little Karen," a young Norwegian mother, sitting asleep beside the cradle of her sick child. Over the child are bent two Winckelmäunchen, Alraunen or gnomes. The story to which the picture refers is told by S. C. W. in the first pages of the magazine. Ruth Kenyon tells about maple-sugar making, assisted by an illustration by Alfred Kappes. Ot the two illustrations to "Cathern," a story by Lucy G. Morse, in sequel to "The Ash Girl," one is a remarkably good piece of engraving, the other, that exhibiting "Little Trudy," is decidedly poor. "On the Ice," by Irwin Russell, is a paper on a very healthgiving and absorbing sport played by Scotchmen on the ice. The illustration is hardly up to Mr. Kelly's usual excellence. Susan Coolidge contributes a fairy story under the title "The Two Wishes," with illustrations that look like the delightfully Germanic drawings of Ludwig Richter, of Dresden. One of the brightest papers is by William E. Griffis, a gentleman who has published recently in China a very interesting work on Chinese legends and folk tales. It tells about the attempt to rob the golden fish that used to adorn the summit of Owari Castle, in the centre of Japan. The robber is seen gaining access to the fish by a very novel means of conveyance, a kite. The picture is after one by a famous Japanese artist in Tokio, Ozawa by name. Then we have extracts from Mrs. Johnson's "Journal of a Blue-coat Girl," with a picture by Reinhart, and a further installment of J. T. Trowbridge's "His Own Master," illustrated by the same untiring hand. Richard A. Proctor is on hand as usual with "The Stars in March," and a number of very black diagrams with white stars, which we can imagine causing great admiration among such young people as have not learned to associate them with the rigors of a school-room.

THE INTERNATIONAL REVIEW.

—For March and April the International Review has prepared a list of articles very much akin to those we have seen heretofore inside its covers. The first number is political, being "Republicanism under President Grant," by an "Independent Republican." The second has to do with an affair of municipal economy. Mr. J. C. Bayles writes of "Safety in Dwellings and Public Buildings." Poetry is cultivated by a sonnet subscribed by Charles Tennyson Turner, of which we may say the best part is the name of the writer. In "Wit and Humor in Germany" we have an interesting account of comic papers in the Fatherland, written by Herr Julius Duboc. The writer, being himself a German, may be regarded as liable to bias in favor of the wit to be found in his land. A foreigner might come to different conclusions. But the article is a good one. We are again surprised, however, at the gross mistakes of the proof-reader. English suffers somewhat at his hands, but the German is in parts unreadable. Under the name "Saga Civilisation" Prof. H. H. Boyesen, of Cornell University, reviews the Sagas of Burnt Njal of Iceland, and of Gisli, the Outlaw, both of which have been translated by George Webbe Dasent. Another Norse paper is "The University of Upsala," by Prof. Karl M. Thordén. Mr. Ray Palmer sets great store on Mr. James Russell as a literary critic, and in a paper on him writes sympathetically of his sound work in that line. His text is, "Among my Books," first and second series. Mr. P. G. Hamerton has a letter on art, which contains a defense of himself from the imputation contained in the word amateur, which has been applied to him.

POPULAR SCIENCE MONTHLY.

—The portrait that adorns the Popular Science Monthly for March is unusually fresh in execution, being an etching by Reid, of the head of Thomas Edward, a naturalist cobbler of Banffshire. His story is well told by an anonymous hand, with the aid of a biography of Edward, written by Samuel Smiles, and published by Harper & Brothers. His life is not only interesting in itself, but affords a glimpse of Scotch life far from dull. The second paper on "Education as a Science," by the late Alexander Bain, of the University of Aberdeen, shows him a keen reasoner on the philosophy of the art of learning. From Nature the Monthly reprints a paper, with diagrams, giving an abstract of a paper "On the Manner in which Raindrops and Hailstones are Formed," by Prof. Osborne Reynolds, M. A., read at the Literary and Philosophical Society, Manchester. Next we have a lecture by Prof. Huxley "On the Study of Biology," giving some good advice to teachers, and dealing with unusual moderation with his enemies, the lay and clerical "paper-philosophers." Flammarion's History of the Heavens, and Blake's Astronomical Myths, founded on it, the latter of which has been published by Macmillan, furnish material for a paper entitled "How the Earth was Regarded in Old Times," profusely illustrated with singular representations of the world according to antique ideas. There is also a condensation of Chief Justice Charles P. Daly's annual address as President of the American Geographical Society. It is a summing up of what has been done during the year to explore the unknown spaces of the earth. There seems hardly a place where an expedition is not at work collecting new facts and correcting old opinions. The Challenger expedition has invaded the bottom of the principal oceans. "The Early Man of North America" is a sketch in outline by A. R. Grote, Director of the Buffalo Society of Natural Sciences. He inclined to the theory that the Esquimaux are the likeliest descendants of men of the Stone Age, having followed the Arctic climate northward on the retreat of the glaciers. The Miscellany has as many interesting facts as usual.

LITERARY NOTES.

—Bickers & Son, London, have brought out a new edition of the works of William H. Prescott, in 15 volumes, with the author's latest corrections and additions.

—Messrs. T. & T. Clark, of Edinburgh, have in preparation, with the sanction of the author, a translation of M. Janet's well-known work, Les Causes Finales.

—Lady Barker's new book, A Year's Housekeeping in Natal, describing the characteristic features of nature and man in that colony, will soon be published by Macmillan & Co.

—A. S. Barnes & Co. will publish shortly The Memoirs of P. P. Bliss. The book will have an introduction by D. L. Moody, and the special services rendered to religion by this devout and sweet singer, together with his tragic death, will give it a cordial welcome in hundreds of homes.

—The Life of the late George Dawson, of Birmingham, is in preparation by Mr. Samuel Timmins, F. S. A., to whom the family have furnished the necessary documents. Mrs. Dawson is also preparing her husband's prayers, sermons, and lectures for the press. Henry S. King & Co. are to be the publishers.

—The Season of Lent is the title of a very useful little pamphlet, intended as a companion for the closet, prepared by Right Rev. Dr. Gillespie, of Western Michigan, for the use of his people, when he was a parish clergyman. It is arranged on a novel plan for self-correction, and has been very neatly published by E. P. Dutton & Co., of this City.

—Rev. Malcolm MacColl's new book, The Eastern Question, is looked forward to with much interest as the embodiment of personal observations recently made in company with Canon Liddon, in Bulgaria and the country adjacent. Mr. MacColl is known as the editor of The Guardian, the leading ecclesiastical organ of the Church of England, and also as a very able controversialist.

—Rev. R. W. Dale's Congregational Union Lectures on the Atonement for 1873 have just reached a second edition, which A. S. Barnes & Co. will publish in a few days. Mr. Dale and Dr. Allon are the leaders among the English Nonconformist clergy. Mr. Dale is the editor of the London Congregationalist, and has accepted an invitation to deliver the "Yale Lectures on Preaching" next year at New-Haven. He will be in America next Summer, and will remain in the country till his lectures have been delivered.

—John E. Potter & Co. promise, within 600 pages, 12 mo. in size, to give the public a Handbook to all Religions from the earliest age to the present time, including the rise, progress, doctrines, and government of all Christian denominations, compiled from their own publications, and viewed from their own stand-point. Such a book, if properly made up, might be extremely useful to people in search of a religion which suited them, and ought to find a generous welcome in a country which an Englishman once lucidedly described as a "commonwealth of sects."

—The March number of the North American Review will contain the following articles: "The Compromise and its Consequences," by C. R. Buckalew, ex-United States Senator; "Demonology," by Ralph Waldo Emerson; "Christian Policy in Turkey," by Laurence Oliphant; "Centenary of Spinoza," by Samuel Osgood, D. D.; "Postmasters of America," by Charles T. Congdon; "William H. Seward," by Richard Grant White; "English Polar Explorations," by Chief Justice Daly, President New-York Geographical Society, with a circumpolar map; "The Insurance Crisis," by Sheppard Homans; "Harriet Martineau," by Julius H. Ward, and many reviews of the most important new books.

—While Mr. Gladstone's name is generally influential enough to carry the number of any magazine to which he contributes into a second edition, his article in review of "The Life of the Prince Consort," in the January number of the new Church Quarterly Review, is not the only article which is worth reading. In the same number there are a remarkably vigorous paper on "Positive and Cosmic Religion," in which Mr. Herbert Spencer and Mr. John Fiske are pressed very close for evidence that the unknowable does not come down into things known; the first of a series of papers on "The First Napoleon," who is judged in the light of M. Laufrey's and Gen. Ctc. de Ségur's recent studies of his life; a very thorough restatement of the story of "Henry VIII's Divorce," based upon Prof. Brewer's publication of original documents—state papers—which are destined to create a revolution in the study of English history; an essay upon "Magazine Literature," tracing its growth in England and its social and educational influence; a very severe criticism upon Dean Stanley's History of the Jewish Church; a theological article on "The Filioque Controversy and the Easterns;" a Church article on "Modern Dissent, The Liberation Society, The Burials Bill," which gives a very clear view of the present status of political and ecclesiastical questions in England; a "Retrospect of 1876;" a curious study of "Parish Records," and brief but discriminating notices of the leading theological works of the day. This review is maintained by the foremost scholars at Oxford and by the ablest thinkers among the conservative and highly-cultured clergy of the English Church, and, though only a year old, has largely influenced public and religious opinion in England through some of its contributions. Its special merit is that it unites first-class thinking on present questions with remarkable freshness, brightness, and severity of literary style. The heaviness of the review article is lost in the happy blending of vigorous thought with freshness and terseness of expression. It has many of the best qualities of the Contemporary Review without its spice of radicalism and its controversial spirit, and is a periodical too little known among religious scholars in this country. It is printed and published by Spottiswoode & Co., New-street square, London, and Canon Ashwell, of Chichester Cathedral, editor of the Literary Churchman, is understood to be its responsible head.

ON FOOT IN THE SOUTH.

THE NOTES OF A PEDESTRIAN.

THE PLAN OF A WALK THROUGH VARIOUS SECTIONS SOUTH—THE MISFORTUNES OF ALABAMA — CHANCES FOR NORTHERN ENTERPRISE.

From a Special Correspondent.

MONTGOMERY, Monday, Feb. 12, 1877.

I am going through the by-ways of the South a-foot, to see what can be done with capital, brains, and hands, and how they will be welcomed. I shall tell what I see and hear that relates to the commercial, social, and political condition of the community. The most that has been written of the South has been collected along the main routes and at the large centres; it is time the country side should be treated. The territory is too vast to be studied as a whole, and its civilization too varied for a comprehensive description within reasonable newspaper limits. Many erroneous opinions about the South have sprung from generalizations about the whole, founded on limited observations. No other region is composed of such opposite elements. No other region presents its opposite elements so completely changed from their original conditions. Here is the autocratic planter, now the most dejected member of the population; the poor white, now more prosperous and respected than formerly; the negro, now free, but needing the benefits of freedom; the Northerner, a "foreigner" in his own land, but now getting the feeling of home. Even geographically the country is a patch-work of black and white, in a literal and a figurative sense. Anticipating, then, the probable defects of too comprehensive an effort, I purpose to limit my study to a comparatively small territory, and my statements to the localities I visit. I shall tell what I personally see and hear, in order to give, as far as possible, a true idea of the region generally. I shall visit such places and examine such subjects as will best represent the country in the particulars I have named; and in order to give an idea of the social life and opinions generally, I shall report the statements of all classes, without pruning the contradictions that they will naturally contain.

I began my march at Montgomery, Ala. This State has received but little attention from emigrants, compared with her more favored sisters Florida, Tennessee, Georgia, and the other States northward. Perhaps she is about the geographical limit of Southern attractions, or, in another sense, the limit of Southern repulsions. Whatever the reason may be, it is not founded on the natural value of her lands or the genial qualities of her climate. Before the war Alabama was the seventh State in wealth, and the fifth in the value of her agriculture. In 1860 her per capita farm production was double that of any free State excepting Illinois, Iowa, and California. In 1870 her per capita production was less than half that of the poorest free State. In 1860 the value of her real and personal property was $792,000,000; in 1870 it was $201,355,841. Plantations that were worth $25 and $30 per acre in 1860, cannot be sold now for $3 per acre. This simple statement is an epitome of the commercial condition of Alabama. Alabama is generally considered in four belts, or strips, of different geographical features, running across the State from east to west. The Pine Belt, or Lower Alabama, is the southern tier of counties. It is a part of the belt of low sandy lands that extend along the Atlantic coast from New-Jersey to Mississippi. It is too poor a country to attract the settler. The valuable part of the State begins with the Black Belt, the counties east and west of Montgomery. The next division is the mountains just north of the Black Belt. The coal and minerals of the State are there. The Valley of North Alabama, along the Tennessee River, is regarded as the most healthful and attractive part of the State. The Black, or Cotton Belt, as it is called, from its black lands and its cotton growth, is about 50 miles wide and 200 long. It occupies the most of the following counties: Barbour, Russell, Pike, Bullock, Macon, Montgomery, Lowndes, Autauga, Wilcox, Dallas, Perry, Marengo, Hale, Greene, Sumter, and Pickens.

The scenery is not attractive. The ground is rolling knolls or low hills, originally wooded with oak, cypress, hickory, walnut, maple, beech, poplar, gum, chestnut, sassafras, ash, elm, and cedar. Large fields of 100 or more acres separate the lots of timber, and sometimes cover square miles of land. Woods and cane-brakes generally line the streams and cover the swamps. The soil is stiff, black, prairie land; it makes in Winter the strongest and the deepest mud known, and in Summer the hardest of baked roads. It is very rich and strong where it has not been exhausted, but old fields are much run down. There is plenty of timber everywhere for fuel or building. Streams are infrequent, and the water is bad; but artesian wells supply this defect to some extent. It is not a country of natural grasses; but millet and clover grow well when planted.

The borders of the bottom lands, or "prairies," as they are erroneously named, have a different character. The hills are higher and covered with pine. The soil is red clay, sand, or loam, or a mixture of all these, or even patches very distinct, though contiguous. The water is good and abundant. The scenery is more varied and attractive. The prevalence of pine gives these regions the name "piney-woods lands." The soil is thinner and poorer, often entirely worthless tracts of sand and gravel. The roads are always passable, but in dry weather they are bad with sand. Various deciduous trees and plenty of pine lumber are to be had anywhere. The climate of the Black Belt is not perfect, particularly on the prairies. Chills are prevalent, and they sometimes terminate in a short, violent malady, generally fatal, called the "yellow disease." The bad water, the damp, rich soil, the low situation, and the miasmatic qualities of the air, combine to render that region undesirable as a permanent home. Nevertheless, many live on the bottoms, and generally endure suffering. Even in the pine hills chills are familiar enough to be successfully treated, and the advantages for health are decidedly with the higher region. The most desirable plantations are said to be those that unite good water and a sandy hill as a site for the home, with rich bottoms for cultivation. Strangers often suffer from bilious and other fevers for awhile, but after becoming acclimated enjoy good health. Yellow fever sometimes appears in Montgomery, yet statistics show it to be a healthy city, and the State of Alabama ranks well for longevity and health. On the other hand, the whites are generally "yellows." In general terms the climate is mild. Frost appears only for a short time, and snow once in ten years. Much of the Winter is so warm and bright that fires are not made, and overcoats are not worn; doors and windows are left open, and people often sit on the piazzas even in the evenings. The garden proves in many ways the genial climate. Figs thrive here; lettuce and radishes, with a little attention, will grow all Winter; peas are generally a foot high by Feb. 15; gardens are made about Feb. 1, and furnish a profusion of various kinds of fruits, flowers, and vegetables until December. THE PLANTER AND THE POOR WHITE

THE BLACK BELT AS IT WAS, AND AS IT IS—THE CONTRASTS WHICH TWENTY YEARS PRESENT.

From a Special Correspondent.

MONTGOMERY, Ala., Monday, Feb. 19, 1877.

The Black Belt of Alabama was the garden of slavery. The planters were as princes in wealth and autocratic feeling; the slaves were as herds of submissive cattle, and the earth was the richest corner of King Cotton's country. A truthful picture of that life, of all its evident brightness and all its hidden darkness, would be an invaluable statement of phases of human nature that we both regret and rejoice have passed away forever.

A plantation had thousands of acres; many hundreds of it were fenced and cultivated with sedulous care. The genial Spring brought out hundreds of slaves, mules, and plows to the fields in February. The black earth was opened and planted with cotton and corn. Soon the long furrows showed their lines of green, and the plows and hoes were kept going all the long, hot Summer, now in the cotton, then in corn. The labor was incessant. At last the cotton was picked, ginned, and baled, and the corn was husked and stowed away. Meanwhile the home industries for self-support were carried on at the "quarters" or houses. The gardens were made, and after the 1st of April yielded a superabundance of every luxury —vegetables of all kinds, melons of great size, berries, peaches, plums, nectarines, figs, grapes, and other fruits were too abundant for appreciation. Grain was thrashed and sent to mill. Hogs, beeves, and sheep were fatted, and in the Fall the year's supply of meat was cured. Leather was tanned and shoes were made. The blacksmith's anvil was ever ringing. The wheelwrights and the carpenter were at work in their shops. The miller had his hopper full. The saw mill was at work. In the house the mistress cut out the clothes for the hands, and gave them to the slaves to make. The cloth, both woolen and cotton, was spun and woven at home. Only hats and blankets were bought. In a word, the country was self-supporting, even to profusion. The cotton was then a crop of net profit. It was hauled to the boat-landing, or flat-boats were built on the plantation, and the cotton was floated down the Alabama to Mobile. There the bales were delivered to the commission merchant and the boat was sold for lumber.

The social aspect is not so easily stated. The 30 or more log or frame cabins, or "quarters" for the slaves, the shops, mill and countless outhouses, made a village behind the overseer's house. In many cases it was orderly, and even attractive by the number of gardens, the well-swept earth before the doors, and the green sod beyond. The slaves gathered in their houses at evening, and enjoyed all that could be enjoyed in their lot, and bore what there was to bear. In many cases an abundant living and kind treatment made them contented, if not happy; in others, their existence is to be forgotten and forgiven. The planter lived in town in a large house, with servants at every turn, and all the appointments of comfort or of luxury. Garden products were brought him from the plantation. He visited his estate occasionally and received the reports of his overseer. He had unlimited credit from his commission merchant if the profits on his crop were exhausted before the next crop was gathered. His substance was abundant and his hospitality and conviviality proportioned to his substance. He kept open house. The spirit of the time is illustrated in an anecdote. One of a house full of guests, departing at the end of a week's visit, expressed very warmly his satisfaction with the entertainment. After he had gone, the host said to his son:

"Who is that young man who said he had enjoyed himself so well?"

"Why! don't you know? He's been here a week. He's young Thorn; he's the gentleman who broke your bay mare's neck fox-hunting last Monday. He says he's had a mighty fine time."

"Well, I'm right glad he enjoyed himself; I hope he'll come again."

To visit the same plantation now makes one inexpressibly sad, despite the involuntary feeling of retribution and the hope of better days. The fields are covered with wild grass, or even with young pines and bushes, excepting, perhaps, a corner here or there where a negro crawls after a poor little steer dragging a plow. The fences are all gone. Here and there great gullies, 30, even 50 feet deep, washed out by rain, attest the fullness of neglect. The road is without bridges in many places. The quarters are silent and empty, save one or two cabins containing the negroes who rent a part of what they formerly tilled for others. The cabins are without doors or windows. The shops and the mills are silent. Decay stares one in the face on every side

On one of my walks I stopped at such a place for rest and a glass of water. An old lady asked me to a seat on the broad piazza. While handing me a cup of water, her little grandson kept asking, "Who is that?"

"It's a gentleman, my dear."

There was an inflection with the word that told how strong the distinction was in her mind. She was a lady of the old school. Her manners were dignified, yet gracious, and her low speech had the charms of cultivation. She soon passed from the compliments of the day to topics that would interest a Northern man.

"Yes, Sir; my husband owned 600 slaves. All the land you see from here to the hill yonder was in corn and cotton. Everything they wore and ate and used was made here by themselves. They had plenty of everything, and were well treated. They were much better cared for, and happier than they have been since."

The house was divided into equal parts by a wide, open passage or way, running from the piazza through to the back porch. A heavy mahogany table on one side held a dilapidated saddle. Opposite this stood a pine closet, much warped and cracked with age. The floors were bare, as I heard by the boy's shoes as he ran from room to room after a lank hound pup.

"We used to live in W., but now we have to live here in the overseer's house. We lost everything." She said this with a sad tone, yet there was a certain firmness and pride in her voice, as though the sacrifice was scarcely mourned. "We rent out the plantation now, and get half the crop. But the niggers don't do much, and we get but little. They are not good for much, although they are quiet and perfectly manageable."

"Don't they work?" I asked.

"Oh, yes! That is, the men do. They are industrious for awhile, but they lack persistence and intelligent methods. I don't see what the country is to do; they will never restore it, I fear." It was surprising to see any class of Southerners still feel the old dependence on the blacks. Why should these be expected to restore the country? But she explained:

"They are the only people that will endure the labor here. A white man can't stand it. They are just what is needed here. But they have no ambition or pride in the country."

"I suppose not," I said, and I thought the lack of ambition at least is more surprising in another class. As I passed the door of the parlor a glance revealed a touching picture of the past and the present. A carved arm-chair, of rich design, stood in one corner, before some shelves of worn books and beneath an oil portrait of a gentleman. To the right and left stood wooden chairs of the cheapest kind, a stained deal table without a cover, and a straight board lounge of homely shape, covered with a calico tick. They seemed an array of mournful poverty before the last remnant of prosperity. Behind the quarters I came upon two negroes of middle age, training a yoke of two-year-old steers, not larger than good calves of eight months. One man rode in the cart and whipped the off steer; the other led the near steer, and whipped him with a rope halter. They were in high spirits at the capers of the cattle, and seemed too happy to belong to the sad scene, and too childish just then to conquer a place in any other.

There is scarcely an exception from poverty among the planters of the Black Belt. Many of the large "home" plantations are entirely abandoned. The great house is without a window or a door. The garden is a plot of weeds; the stables have fallen to the ground; the quarters are a deserted village of the darkest aspect. The fox and the raccoon are the only tenants of the wealthiest estates, perhaps, in the country. The sons and daughters that formerly never drew on their boots or combed their hair now plow and cook. Some of them work in the cotton mills. A few have turned their attention to commercial pursuits. Still fewer have managed to keep their homes, but not the plenty and comfort that made them a type of happy affluence. The wealthy planters are now the poorest class of the South, not excepting the former "poor whites," who are now working and earning a living, or the negro, who cannot get deeply in debt if he would. The planter is now also the most discontented and unprofitable citizen. His former autocratic life bred in him characteristics that have survived the destruction of his possessions and the circumstances that exalted him. The fall has embittered him. He, and particularly his wife, are the Southerners who most practice social ostracism toward the Northerners. It is not surprising, perhaps; but, however unfortunate, there is little probability that these feelings will be fully overcome until the present generation and their prejudices are succeeded by the younger men and women who are beginning to work out their salvation by the hand of toil. A CONSCIENTIOUS JURY.

An old story is well retold in a recent issue of a Southern journal, as follows: "A jury in Alabama had been impaneled in the case of a Mr. Johnson, charged with killing his wife. The evidence was positive and conclusive, leaving no doubt of his speedy conviction. To the amazement of all, the jury, after a short absence, returned a verdict, 'Guilty of horse-stealing.' The Judge, astonished, asked an explanation, stating that the indictment was not for horse-stealing, but manslaughter. The foreman, with his hand upon a huge law-book, and with an amusingly dignified air, informed the Court that 'it was not a case of manslaughter, but woman slaughter, for which the law made no provision, but being satisfied the man deserved to be hanged, they had brought in a verdict of horse-stealing, which, in that country, would be sure to hang him."

A STUPID SON AND A MEAN FATHER.

There must be one very mean and very old father in Southington, Conn., if the following statement from the Sentinel of that place is true: "There is a man in this town between 50 and 60 years of age, who has steadily worked for his father until the present day; never had a dollar in his pocket; never went to church, wedding, or funeral; never was on a car; never to a party; never spoke to a girl except to ask where her mother was; never had a holiday; and yet had his poll tax seated this year on account of poverty, while his father's estate is estimated at from $30,000 to $50,000."

FORTY-FOURTH CONGRESS.

SUMMARY OF THE DAY'S PROCEEDINGS.

In the Senate Mr. Edmunds, from the Judiciary Committee, made various reports, adverse and favorable, on bills to remove political disabilities, which were agreed to. The National Museum bill was passed. The Deficiency Appropriation bill, after being amended in Committee of the Whole, was reported to the Senate and passed.

In the House, the consideration of the Sundry Civil Appropriation bill was resumed. Considerable debate occurred on the parsimonious conduct of Congress in the matter of public buildings, and several appropriations were made for completing Post Offices, &c. A joint resolution was passed authorizing the President to accept the Statue of Liberty from the French Republic. The Sundry Civil bill was not disposed of.

SENATE.

The recess having expired the Senate was called to order at 10 o'clock by Mr. PADDOCK, and immediately took another recess until 12 o'clock.

REPORTS ON DISABILITY BILLS.

Upon reassembling at noon, Mr. EDMUNDS, of Vermont, from the Committee on the Judiciary, reported adversely on the bills to remove the political disabilities of John R. L. Tattnall, M. M. Kimmel, Lloyd J. Beade, Henry Myers, F. S. Armistead, John H. Forney, and J. S. Conrad, and they were indefinitely postponed. He said the committee reported adversely on these bills for the reason that the persons named, who were formerly United States officers, had not settled their accounts at the Treasury. He also reported adversely on the bills to remove the political disabilities of F. E. Sheppard, H. W. Washington, Charles L. Scott, William Sharp, H. H. Lewis, D. B. Conrad, W. E. Wisham, O. H. Williamson, John Johnson, C.H. Kennedy, and Oscar Heirnets, and they were indefinitely postponed. He said these persons, formerly officers of the United States, had been dismissed, and under the rule heretofore followed by the Judiciary Committee bills for their relief could not be reported, only by next session, however, their cases could be brought up again, and the rule could be so changed as to pass bills to relieve their political disabilities.

He also reported, from the same committee, favorably on bills to remove the political disabilities of E. M. Wilcox and A. C. Myers, of Maryland; John S. Marmaduke, S. B. Moon, W. J. Carrington, J. P. Major, R. S. Kinney, Samuel B. Tumer, and W. A. Webb, of Virginia; G. S. Hawkins, of Florida; A. H. Gibbs and William Butler, of South Carolina; C. Ap R. Jones, of Alabama; L. S. Baker and D. H. Hill, of North Carolina; R. O. Gatlin, of Arkansas; Henry B. Keller, of Louisiana, and William R. Jones, of Texas. All of which were placed on the calendar.

THE LATE SPEAKER KERR.

Mr. MCDONALD, of Indiana, gave notice that on Saturday next, after the expiration of the morning hour, he would ask the Senate to suspend business, that appropriate eulogies on the life and character of the late Speaker Kerr might be delivered.

THE NATIONAL MUSEUM.

Mr. MORRILL, of Vermont, called up the Senate bill for the erection of a fire-proof building for the National Museum. Passed. It appropriates $250,000 for the erection of such building adjoining the Smithsonian Institute, for the exhibition of goods lately on exhibition at the Centennial and presented to the United States by foreign Governments.

THE SENECA LAND BILL.

Mr. KERNAN, of New-York, and Mr. ALLISON, of Iowa, presented petitions of citizens of New-York protesting against the passage of the House bill to amend the act to authorize the Seneca Nation of New-York Indians to lease lands within the Cattaraugus and Allegheny reservations and to confirm existing leases. Referred to the Committee on Indian Affairs.

THE PACIFIC RAILROAD SINKING FUND.

The CHAIR laid before the Senate the unfinished business, being the bill to create a sinking fund for the liquidation of the indebtedness due the Government by the Pacific Railroad Companies.

THE DEFICIENCY APPROPRIATION BILL.

On motion of Mr. SARGENT that bill was laid aside informally, with the understanding that it should not lose its place as the unfinished business, and the Senate took up the Deficiency Appropriation bill.

Amendments reported by the Committee on Appropriations were agreed to as follows: Appropriating

The arguments on the Oregon case were concluded yesterday and the Commission adjourned with the understanding that a vote would be taken at 4 o'clock to-day. It would be an insult to the intelligence of the majority of the Commission to assume that there can be any doubt as to the result, though the lateness of their decision excites apprehension on other grounds. The Joint Convention cannot take up the Oregon decision till to-morrow, and the extremists in the House may again succeed in wasting a day or two by a repetition of the fillibustering tactics which have already been successfully employed to gain time. South Carolina must go to the Commission as a matter of form, and as the end of the session is perilously near, the country has simply the slender guarantee of Democratic good faith that the count will be completed before the 4th of March. Were either honesty or manliness a controlling force in the Democratic Party the danger of fatal delay would be a purely visionary one. As partisan rancor and time-serving expediency dispute for mastery among the supporters of Tilden, anxiety about the events of next week is not altogether misplaced.

The favorite occupation of the political quidnuncs at the present time is to indulge in speculation about the probable complexion of President Hayes' Cabinet. The number of people who profess to speak with authority on this subject is perfectly bewildering, and the confidence of their assertions is usually in inverse ratio to the extent of their opportunities for gaining information. Two things may be taken for granted in this connection: First, that while Gen. Hayes will be found extremely ready to listen to suggestions about the selection of his advisers, he will be very likely to keep his own counsel until the time arrives when he is perfectly prepared to take the entire country into his confidence; and second, that when the name of any person is set down with great certainty as "booked" for a given position, the announcement is pretty sure to be a device on the part of that person or his friends to advertise his claims in advance. All Cabinet gossip is at best, therefore, mere rumor and surmise, and its chief interest consists in showing the public how numerous and pressing are the personal and sectional influences which President Hayes will be compelled to disappoint.

That the Cabinet when authoritatively announced, will satisfy public expectation, we have no manner of doubt. That it will disappoint a good many political managers, who have heretofore been allowed a potential voice in the party councils, may be asserted with equal confidence. Certain Senators who have carried the Federal patronage of great States in their pockets are likely to waken up ere long to a perception of the fact that the incoming Administration will not be quite so ductile in the matter of appointments as the outgoing one. Whatever faults or shortcomings President Hayes may exhibit, he is not the type of man who will care to shelter himself behind the plea of bad advice. His acts will be emphatically his own; the fruit of examination, reflection, and judgment, which he is not at all likely to take at second hand. In dealing with the minor appointments, heretofore controlled by a sort of patronage ring in the Senate, this characteristic of the next President will, doubtless, be as clearly defined as in relation to the selection of the officers of his Cabinet.

The eagerness with which the Democratic organs assure their readers that the letter of Mr. Tilden puts an end to all suspicion about his connection with the Oregon plot, is rather amusing. Suppose we substitute for Mr. Tilden in this job the name of Gen. Grant, and for Pelton the name of Babcock. What a howl of Democratic indignation we should have had over the publication of the cipher dispatches, and what a chorus of derisive abuse over the brazen effrontery of the venal usurper who had professed ignorance of dispatches written in his own library, and of corrupt bargains settled with his own money. And yet the World, which shrieked "At Last," and demanded impeachment when it was shown that the Secret Service fund had been ostensibly employed to protect the ballot-box in New-York, thinks that Mr. Tilden's "plain and peremptory denial" should "satisfy all impartial persons," while that journalistic nondescript the Springfield Republican is able to announce this startling conclusion: "He [Tilden] has both in the conclusion and in the progress of the canvass lifted up his party, and helped to give it a higher moral standing and power than it seemed possible the Democratic Party of Buchanan and Floyd, of Jefferson Davis and William W. Eaton could ever reach again." The force of idiocy or of impudence could not much further go.

The consideration by the House of the comprehensive Sundry Civil Service Appropriation bill yesterday, did not promise well for a speedy passage of the great appropriation bills. There was an undignified squabble over the clause appropriating $50,000 for the Hayden survey, one speaker charging that the work was only ordered to provide nice places for sons of Congressmen. Then Representatives from various States attacked provisions for completing public buildings at different points, each one being determined to increase the appropriation for his own district, whatever might become of those for other localities. It is noticeable that the members treated all of these minor matters just as though they were at the beginning of a session, instead of at its close. If this is what is meant by "a careful scrutiny" of the appropriation bills, not one of those now pending will survive the operation and be able to get through Congress at this session.

There is nothing in the speech of the Emperor of Germany to guide those who are anxiously searching for some indication of German policy in the East. There is no trace of Bismarck's almost brutal frankness in the diplomatic address of the Emperor to the Reichstag. Two points are insisted upon: Christian subjects in Turkey must be protected and the peace of Europe must be preserved. But in case of a failure to secure the first, Germany will give up the second point with reluctance. In any event, the Government will continue to exert its influence in behalf of the Christians in Turkey.

A TECHNICAL PLEA FOR FRAUD.

The purely technical argument of the Democratic counsel in the Oregon case on Wednesday was ably, boldly, and clearly answered yesterday. The Democrats, at the opening of the case, felt the peculiar infelicity of their position in being obliged to abandon the contention which they had made in the previous cases, that what they desired was the truth and the "very right," no matter what mere forms of law stood in the way, and to demand that the Commission should give them the full advantage of the forms, no matter how little title they had in the substance. They endeavored to cover their embarrassment by specious protestations of their love of justice and right, but, as a matter of fact, they were obliged, as soon as it came to argument, to fall back on the barest and narrowest technicalities.

They could not deny that the Republican ticket received a decisive and considerable majority of the popular vote; that the will of the people, as expressed at the polls, was clearly in favor of giving the Electoral vote of the State to Hayes; and they made no pretense that the election was unfairly conducted, or that the result was tainted, in the slightest degree, with fraud, corruption, or violence. They contented themselves with the following argument: One of the Republican Electors was ineligible; the Electors could not act without the Governor's certificate; the Governor decided that on account of the Republican's ineligibility his rival, Cronin, was elected, and gave him the certificate; Cronin required that the others should act with him, and they would not; he then became the Electoral College, and filled the places of the other two Electors, and the three, getting another certificate from the Governor, voted, and their vote is the vote of the State. This was in brief the Democratic argument. There is nowhere in it any pretense of a basis in the popular will. It all turns on the Governor's right, because he had the might, to determine the result.

But this argument is as weak as it is technical. It has no more foundation in law than in fact. It is wrong in its assumption concerning the power and function of the Governor and the effect of his certificate, and wrong in its assumption concerning the power possessed by Cronin and the effect of his demand on the Oregon Electors and of his pretended appointments. In the first place, the certificate of the Governor is not necessary to the legal action of the Electors. It is simply a declaration of the fact of their appointment, to be based on the determination of the officer or officers having the authority to canvass the election. It can be overthrown by being shown to be a false declaration and not based on the canvass. In this case Gov. Grover's certificate was thus overthrown by the papers submitted with the vote of the legal Electors, since those papers included the certification of the actual canvass by the Secretary of State, who was the canvassing authority. This canvass was wholly contrary to the Governor's certificates, and the latter must, therefore, yield wholly to the former.

In the next place, the Governor had no authority to decide who was or was not eligible, or what effect was produced by ineligibility. The Democrats claimed that his certificate was in the nature of a commission, but wherever a Governor is required to issue a commission his duty is distinctly specified. There is no law of Oregon which imposes on the Governor the duty of commissioning Electors for President and Vice President. There is no law of the United States making such a requirement. The action of the Governor, therefore, in assuming to decide the question of ineligibility and of its effect, was purely voluntary and unauthorized, and his decision was of no more weight than that of a private citizen. Cronin's acts derived no validity from those of the Governor, and if he had presented himself at the Electoral College with a certificate from Judge Hoadley, that his competitor's ineligibility resulted in his election, he would have had just as much right to turn out the legal Electors and to assume to replace them with his own appointees as he had under the authority of Mr. Grover.

Finally, even if Cronin had been a legally-appointed Elector, the mere physical fact that he had possession of the Governor's certificate did not give him any right to dictate that the other Electors should conform to his directions. If the Governor's certificate with his name in it was worth anything, the fact that the names of the others were there also was worth just as much. If their refusal to act with him made their places vacant, his refusal to act with them vacated his own. By the Governor's original certificate they were acknowledged to be legally-appointed Electors, and they were the majority of the college. When they proceeded to fill a vacancy, and Cronin assumed to do the same, their authority must be accepted as greater than his—the majority must overrule the minority. Even on the Democrats' own showing, therefore, the technical as well as the substantial authority is all on the side of the Hayes Electors.

The arguments of the Democrats are quibbles which a careful examination brushes away. It required a good deal of impudence to submit them; but that, of course, was no hindrance in the present case. A party that could afford to push forward as their representative a man as openly and completely disgraced as Senator Kelly, could afford to stand on pure pettifogging, even before the great tribunal that is sitting in this case. But it is evident that the interest of the Democrats in the matter is slackening. They have dismissed their expensive and pretentious counsel, and fallen back on third-rate men. They do not appear to expect much from their lawyers' arguments, and they are not likely to be disappointed.

HAYES AND TILDEN.

Never perhaps since the origin of the Government has there been such a striking contrast between rival candidates for the Presidency as between Hayes and Tilden. They represent two opposite types of political training. Each is the impersonation of the distinct methods or forces employed or at work in American politics since parties began to exist.

Hayes is all candor and openness; Tilden is all cunning and concealment. The former does directly and in the light of day what conscience commands; the latter, by indirection and stealth, what interest prompts. Tilden's methods of secrecy and deception never permit him to make known his real thoughts; Hayes' frankness never suffers him to make known anything else. The one utters aloud and in the presence of others his opinions on all proper subjects of discussion; the other confidentially, in whispers, and with many an aside, evasively insinuates what may be interpreted to suit the exigencies of the times. The one aims to be what he seems; the other strives to seem what he is not.

The methods of action of the two men are as opposite as their principles. Hayes believes that a sense of right and a love of justice sways the majority of mankind, and hence that to control them we must convince their reason. Tilden assumes that interest and passion move the majority, that money is the great motor, trickery the engine, deception the tender, and hatred and malice the fuel that propel the popular engine. Hence the unprecedented expenditure of money by a Presidential candidate, the evasiveness of his public utterances, the cipher dispatches, the secret agents traveling under assumed names, the attempts at bribery, and the fanning the fast dying out fires of civil strife. The electioneering methods of Tilden receive further illustration from the ballot-box frauds of 1868, for which he was held personally responsible by men of character and standing. Hayes' method of electioneering is to live an upright private and public life, to think and act up to the best thought and light of to-day, to build up the best character that he can, and then let that and his deeds plead his cause. This method of honor and truth renders unnecessary cipher telegrams, secret circulars or conferences, many-named agents, money in barrels or on draft or appeals to the lingering disloyalty of the land.

In the course of these two candidates we have had a fair test of the comparative worth of honesty and craft in a contest for the Presidency. Craft will gain points at the outset; honesty will gain honors and rewards at the end. Craft may be so cunning as to deceive for a time the very elect; honesty cannot be so guileless as to give the victor's crown to any but the veritably elected. Craft crops out too much and too soon to mislead the wary. Honesty bears fruit in time to make known to the wise the quality of the tree. Craft seldom wins success in the present and never in the future. Uprightness generally attains the highest success, and what is better, always deserves it. The machinations of Tilden, the politician, have not proved a match for the simple adherence to duty of Hayes, the unselfish soldier and upright citizen. Let aspiring men learn this easy, though paradoxical lesson—that the way to reach the Presidency is never to seek it, and the way to lose it is to scheme and plot for it, after the manner of the trading politicians.

MR LONGFELLOW AT THREESCORE AND TEN.

The near approach of the time—the 27th of February—when Mr. Longfellow, crowned with the highest honors of literature, shall have reached the fullness of years permitted to men, reminds us of what he has done and for what we are indebted to him. In England he stands next to Tennyson, if not before him, as the poet of the people, and there is no poet among ourselves whose works are so widely known or who has in the same degree transformed the admiration for his genius into love for the man himself. This is due to the fact that Mr. Longfellow has allowed his personal poems to centre chiefly in the affections of home and family life. Though a large part of his poetry is concerned with foreign subjects and translations, the rule of the heart is felt in everything he has written. In language smooth and flexible, but never strained—raised only to that point where imagination makes it the vehicle of beautiful sentiment or passionate emotion—he touches the hearts of his readers because he has spoken the impressions and convictions of his own life. He has written nothing which either friend or foe could regret, and, while never a radical in politics or religion, has always stood on the side of humanity and justice in questions of the day. If his reputation needed a broader basis than the poetry of sentiment, his translation of Dante displays the happy combination of scholarship with poetic genius, and has given him a European reputation. Besides all which may be said of his public work, the modesty and humility of one whose acquaintance distinguished foreigners when among us have sought as a personal favor, shows that the man himself is more than his writings, and that they are the proper and legitimate outcome of a noble and finely-tempered life.

If those who make the people's songs exert a stronger influence upon national character than those who make the laws, Mr. Longfellow is a national treasure. Cambridge may give him a house to live in, even the historic home of Washington, but every house in the land gives him a welcome. Averse as Mr. Longfellow is known to be to public tributes to himself, his approaching birthday will not probably be observed outside the circle of his personal friends; but the public has too large an interest in him to allow this memorable event to pass by unrecognized. The New-York Historical Society, in this City, has just honored itself by suspending its rules and making him an honorary member by acclamation. The poets themselves are already singing their characteristic tributes to this venerable brother who only stands second to the more venerable and equally-honored Bryant because he came later into the world. And there is a spontaneous feeling of gratitude and satisfaction wheresoever his name is known that age has not changed the quality of his verse nor the traditions of men worn down the personal vitality of the man. So many things crowd upon one's time, and Mr. Longfellow is so constantly speaking to us in new poems, as mellow in tone as they are fresh in thought and feeling, that it is difficult to think of him as a snow-crowned man at three-score and ten, and we are certain that thousands will join us in the hope that many years of healthy and joyous activity are yet before him. The strength of a country is in its illustrious men, and no one has done more to exalt the American name, at home and abroad than Mr. Longfellow. He has made himself the poet of the people everywhere. He has stood faithfully by the plain and honest virtues of life; he has taught men the purity and sacredness of home. And his long life of public usefulness is all the more to be honored because he has always been contented with the position of a private citizen.

THE LATEST INDIAN FAMINE.

For the third time within ten years the British Government has to grapple with another terrible famine in India. If these awful visitations are to come upon the people of India in cycles of three years, and high authorities have expressed the opinion that this is not at all an improbable contingency, the difficulties of governing that vast Empire will become rather appalling. Before Great Britain came to be looked upon, as she is now, as the responsible guardian of the whole people of Hindostan, famines were no doubt just as common, but the world knew little or nothing about them. In the separate provinces, and under the rule of native Princes, who were not only despotic but indifferent to the dictates of humanity, the people were allowed to live as best they could, and they died by thousands without the least effort being made to relieve them. Such a state of things is impossible now. Even although the British Government might not be technically wrong in refusing to make great efforts to relieve the distressed and starving subjects of some semi-independent Prince, the very semblance of indifference would drive from power the strongest Government, whether Liberal or Conservative. This responsibility is now universally felt, and under its pressure the authorities in India, most loyally backed up by the Home Government, have made, and are making, great efforts to cope with the fearful famine now raging in the Deccan.

They are profiting by the terrible experiences of the past, and by the gross blunders committed by the Government of Bengal in 1865-6, when the frightful famine in Orissa swept away more than half a million people. When the famine of 1873-4 visited Bengal, and brought death from starvation to the doors of nearly 10,000,000 of people, vigorous steps were at once taken to grapple with the emergency. The people of England, quick to relieve those people on whom fell terrible calamities, organized committees all over the country, and collected milions of dollars. In the meanwhile the authorities in India were not idle. They grappled at once firmly and wisely with the difficulty. All who were able to work were employed on public works, and the feeble, the women, and the children were cared for by the authorities. So admirable were the plans devised by Sir Richard Temple, Sir George Campbell, and others, that only a few deaths from actual starvation were recorded. Indeed, it is questionable if this famine was not a material blessing in disguise. It is certain that but for such a desolation several important sections of railroads, canals, and highways would not at the present time be constructed. These lines of intercommunication, if it is true that roads are the highways of civilization, have materially developed the commerce of the country through which they pass, and lessened horrors which may follow in the wake of another famine in the same districts.

The famine which rages at present in the Deccan is one of the most threatening which has ever taken place in Hindostan, and yet the percentage of deaths from actual starvation is infinitesimal. The district over which the famine is felt includes nearly the whole of the peninsula from Madras to Bombay. It reaches northwest to Khandeish, and recent telegrams announce that it is now raging as far south as the most southerly post of Mysore. On the east it extends north to Madura, and south to Ristria. On the coast line at Arcot it is now stated that the greatest distress prevails, and in point of area affected and population, this is, perhaps, the greatest famine the Indian Governments have ever encountered. There is a population of nearly 26,000,000 coming directly under the protection of the English, and, if the subjects of the native States be included—people who do not directly claim the protection of the Empress of India—the number of persons affected by this awful famine may be put down in round numbers at 35,000,000. At the present time the Bombay Government is employing over 1,000,000 persons on public works, and so perfectly organized is the system of relief that no, or very few, deaths from actual starvation are anticipated. The total cost of the famine, which cannot be abated before April, is estimated at nearly $32,000,000.

If these great and expensive calamities are to be grappled with every three or four years, some practical steps must be taken to meet the emergency. This view of the question is so eminently practical that it will, at an early date, be brought before the British Parliament. The Times advocates a curious plan, namely, that the Indian Government should annually raise more money than is necessary for the financial year. It is strange to find so high an authority advocating such a financial fallacy. Even if the Government could safely levy a heavier tax than the actual exigencies of the revenue demand, in order to provide against a rainy day, the operation, as a distinguished financial authority has remarked, "is simply one of paying off debt which in a year or two will have to be incurred again." The same authority further says: "The individual can invest his money, and thus is not compelled to impoverish either himself or the community to which he belongs." But to the European States no such investments are open; and thus, as in the case of the German Government, the saving comes to the mere hoarding of coin to the injury of the community.

SENTIMENT IN LOS ANGELES.

A Nevada paper has made an assertion concerning forty-seven alleged idiots in Los Angeles, Cal., which cannot be permitted to pass without comment.

That there may be forty-seven distinct idiots in one California town is not at all improbable. There is no doubt that the volume of idiots in this country is greatly in excess of the demand. If one-half of our idiots were to be immediately canceled, there would still be enough left to meet the ordinary requirements of business and to move the crops. The statistics of idiocy have never been fully collected, and only those persons who have published unsuccessful books have any just idea of the immense extent to which the idiot pervades our population. There is, then, no intrinsic impossibility in the assertion that Los Angeles contains forty-seven separate and complete idiots. The wonderful nature of the California climate has been generally recognized by Californians, and they will undoubtedly admit that it is surpassed by no other climate in its ability to develop idiots of the largest and most imposing kind.

In charging these forty-seven Los Angeles idiots with an unprecedented and astonishing act, the Nevada paper must be prepared to meet the indignant skepticism of ignorant and shallow minds. The profound and unprejudiced thinker will, however, see nothing incredible in the charge. When a sentimental idiot becomes a prey to a passion for a beautiful woman, it would be rash to assume that there is any phase of affectionate idiocy of which he will not be guilty. He is morally sure to betray a longing for the possession of spare particles of the beloved object. If she accidentally moults a ribbon, he seizes it with avidity. Worn-out gloves are especially dear to him, and he hungers for an abandoned slipper with the eagerness of a knight in search of the Holy Grail. There was a time when a lock of feminine hair was a priceless treasure to him, but the progress of science has filled the idiotic mind with doubts of the ability of the human intellect to decide upon the genuineness of any woman's hair. As to this matter, he now maintains virtually the same attitude which Mr. Adler maintains toward the question of the existence of a Great First Cause. That eminent Jewish Positivist asserts that man has no right to either affirm or deny the existence of a God. Similarly, the sentimental idiot neither affirms nor denies that there is such a thing as genuine feminine hair, but he has lost all hope of solving the question in this life, and hence takes no pleasure in collecting—he knows not what.

The ablest idiots have admitted that, after all, gloves and ribbons, and even worn-out slippers, fail to fully satisfy the hunger of the sentimental soul. Unless they are labeled at the time of capture they are sure to become mixed up with subsequent trophies. Old age can find no solace in contemplating a drawerful of vague relics of a score of fleeting loves, and in vainly considering whether all these ribbons and gloves were really samples of different girls, and if so, to which of twenty respectable matrons they severally correspond. What the far-seeing and acute idiot demands is something which not only belongs to his adored one, but which can be converted into a permanent part of himself. If the local physician of Los Angeles had the genius to perceive and supply this want, he certainly deserves the credit of exceptional professional acuteness.

Mr. Gladstone may be sentimental in his method of viewing great questions of policy, but he certainly is not an idiot. Indeed, he sometimes shows a skill in commending himself to the prejudices of the ignorant voter which would do credit to a keen Democratic statesman. Thus, he has recently written a pamphlet opposing compulsory vaccination. He knows perfectly well that vaccination is the only preventive against small-pox, but he also knows that many ignorant Englishmen are violently opposed to it. They insist that vaccine matter transmits from one person to another all sorts of physical and moral qualities. It must be confessed that there is more or less truth in this assertion, but it is evident that care and discrimination on the part of the vaccinator render the operation perfectly safe. Still Mr. Gladstone wrote his pamphlet in the interests of popular ignorance, and he will not be greatly astonished if he finds that he has thereby strengthened himself among the most ignorant of the British voters.

The Los Angelos beauty with whom the forty-seven alleged idiots were simultaneously in love was confessedly a model of physical perfection. She was undoubtedly beautiful in face and figure, and could walk fifteen miles to a ball, dance all night, walk home at dawn, and get breakfast for her aged father without showing the slightest symptoms of fatigue. She could ride, shoot, and swim, and her promptness in convincing tramps that their presence was not required at her kitchen door was the admiration of the whole neighborhood, and especially of the merchant who supplied her with a constant succession of brooms. Even the doctor who vaccinated her could not conceal his admiration of her muscular arm, and asserted that it "laid over any stone arm that the best marble sharp ever yet sculped."

If this acute and enthusiastic physician charged the forty-seven idiots three dollars each, as the Nevada paper asserts, he showed an exceptional degree of self-restraint. They would willingly have paid twice that amount had it been asked, and, of course, a grasping and mercenary physician would have seized the opportunity to ask it. As it is, they are now the happiest idiots in California or elsewhere. Each gazes long and lovingly at his arm, and feels a wild thrill of triumph when the first swelling announces that "it has taken." What are gloves and ribbons and slippers in comparison with the mythical bond that will henceforth connect forty-seven idiotic arms with the matchless arm of the belle of Los Angeles? She may drive each idiot from her presence with brooms, and scathe them with the free, fierce language of her native camp, but she cannot deny that they owe their immunity from small-pox to her, and that they have testified their devotion to her in a manner that Rousseau might have envied, and that Sterne could never have surpassed.

PROPOSING LAWS IN NEW-JERSEY.

TRENTON, Thursday, Feb. 22, 1877.

In their excess of patriotic devotion to duty the House to-day held one of the longest continuous sittings of the session. The proceedings opened with a resolution from one of the South Jersey Republicans recounting the promise of "the good time coming" under the approaching administration of President Hayes. Mr. Howell, Republican, of Essex, thought the House hardly the place for a resolution which would consume much time that ought to be given to business in the airing of Democratic buncombe, and he moved the resolution lay on the table, which was agreed to without a division.

The committee to whom it had been referred reported adversely on Harris' bill permitting the election of Justices of the Peace, but requiring them to submit to an examination as to character and competency before a Supreme Court Judge. Harris moved to non-concur in the adverse report. Howell opposed the bill on the ground that it would practically place the appointment of the Justices in the hands of Supreme Court Judges. The motion to non-concur was agreed to, however, and the bill ordered on the calendar for a second reading. It is intended only to head off the District Court bill passed yesterday, and will not be permitted to pass the House.

There was a long discussion over the bill, introduced by Tilden a few days ago, enacting that a thief who shall bring plunder stolen in another State into New-Jersey may be tried in New-Jersey, as though the larceny had been committed within the limit of this Commonwealth. The bill is said to have been designed to cover the case of a prisoner, who, when captured in Jersey City, was found in possession of a $1,000 diamond belonging to a Capt. Wilgus, of Kentucky, from whom it had been stolen on a train at Cincinnati, Ohio. Griggs and Howell opposed the bill on the ground that this State has all she can do to look after her own thieves; that it is not the business of this State to punish violations of the laws of other States; that if it were the State has no power to compel the attendance of witnesses from other States; and that if a thief be captured here, he can be easily sent back for trial to the State in which he committed his larceny. Mr. Brigham said that the bill is now on the statute-books of New-York State, and has been for 40 years. The bill was, after a warm debate, lost by a vote of 24 to 32.

Mr. Bergen's bill for the regulation of the practice of pharmacy passed the House. It provides that after Jan. 1, 1878, every druggist must be or have in his employ a registered pharmacist, under a penalty of $50. It creates a State Board of Pharmacy, of five members, to be chosen by the Governor from 15 nominees submitted to him by the New-Jersey Pharmaceutical Association. This board is to make examinations of those wishing to become registered pharmacists, and grant licenses to them. But a diploma from a medical college will save the applicant from the necessity of another examination. From the operation of the bill, the homeopaths, who carry their pills with them; rural drug stores selling domestic remedies, and patent medicine establishments, are exempted.

Some time ago Mr. Stevens, of Jersey City, submitted a bill limiting fares in horse-cars between two points within the city limits to five cents. The bill was designed to reach the car lines in Jersey City and Hoboken, the owners of which charge exorbitant rates for the poorest possible accommodation. The bill in the shape in which it was introduced was found to interfere with interests in Newark, and the committee reported a substitute authorizing the Common Councils of cities to regulate the fare. The substitute was called up on final passage this afternoon. Speaker Rabe took strong grounds in favor of its passage, adverting to the ruinous tariffs exacted by the Hudson County car companies. Mr. Griggs took the extraordinary ground that the Legislature has no more right to fix the rates of fare than to fix the price of a loaf of bread. The discussion lasted over an hour, when the bill was, on motion, laid over till Tuesday next for further consideration.

The bill introduced by Mr. Cooper, of Morris, revolutionizing the tax system of the State, is one of the most important introduced this session. Its provisions are:

That with a view of lessening the per centum, equalizing the amount to be paid by each individual tax-payer, corporation, and association, and that each may pay tax upon whatever they have, hold, or represent, and no more, all mortgages and debts secured thereby, all bonds and other evidences of indebtedness, all shares of stock in banks, railroads or other corporations, and all other personal property of whatever kind or character (except such bonds or stocks as are exempted from taxation by the laws of this State or the United States,) also, all real estate of whatsoever kind or character located within the bounds of this State, (except public school-houses, public buildings belonging to State, counties, cities, or boroughs; all cemeteries from which no profit is derived by share-holders or stock-holders, and all churches, with the lots on which they stand,) shall hereafter be assessed for taxation at their true or actual value at the time of assessment. That from any real estate so assessed there shall be deducted the amount of mortgage debt due or owing thereon, which same shall be assessed by the Assessors to the owners or holders of the real estate separately, and by said owners or holders paid to the township collectors of each township, city, or borough, and the receipt from said collectors for the amount of said taxes shall be deducted from the interest of said mortgage; and from any personal property so assessed there shall be deducted any and all personal debts actually due or owing by the person on whom such assessment is made. Shares of bank stock or of other incorporated companies within the State, owned or represented by persons not residing in the State, shall be assessed upon the bank or incorporated company, and such bank or company shall pay the taxes so assessed, and deduct the amount so paid from any dividend due to the person or persons for whom such tax bill has been paid; provided, however, that this shall not apply to incorporated companies whose entire capital stock is assessed under existing laws, or whose special charter may provide for a different mode of taxation. Persons residing in this State who may own stocks or bonds of other States on which they or others shall have paid taxes, shall not be required to pay taxes again on the same in this State.

Both houses have adjourned for the week.

NORTH CAROLINA ANTE-WAR DEBT

THE DEMOCRATIC LEGISLATURE ANXIOUS TO AVOID THE ISSUE—TENDENCY OF THE PEOPLE TOWARD REPUDIATION TO AVOID TAXATION TO PAY INTEREST.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

RALEIGH, Feb. 22.—The bond-holders of this State, whose proposition to compromise at 50 per cent. on the principal and interest of the State debt was rejected by the joint commission of the Legislature a month ago, reappeared yesterday, and, through counsel, submitted a proposition to compromise the ante-war debt at 40 cents of the principal and interest, and 30 cents of the principal and interest of the bonds funded in 1866 and in 1868, the State to issue coupon bonds running 30 years, with interest for the first three years at 3 per cent., and after that at 6 per cent. After a long session held this afternoon, the committee rejected this proposition and agreed to report a bill offering to compromise the ante-war debt at 33⅓ cents in the dollar of the principal and 25 per cent. of the interest, and to offer to compromise the debt as funded in 1866 and in 1868 at 25 per cent. of the principal and interest. Should this proposal be accepted, the debt thus compromised would amount to $6,000,000, leaving the debt in special tax bonds to be dealt with hereafter. A leading member of the committee says that the Legislature will not pass any bill proposing a compromise of the State debt which involves an increase of taxation; that if a settlement is not brought very soon, in less than four years a party will rise up and secure power by taking ground for repudiation. The inclination to repudiate is stronger among the people than is supposed, and it only needs a few bold and able leaders to assume a formidable shape. The longer a settlement is delayed the stronger this feeling grows. The chief reasons why the Democrats have not and why they will not do anything with the debt is the fact that they are afraid they will lose power next year if they levy and collect an additional tax of $200,000 or $300,000 to pay interest on the debt. They urge as a reason why they should do nothing that the Republicans are ready to take an advantage of any increase of taxation, no matter for what purpose, and they are afraid the Republicans would make the canvass next year upon the repeal of any act they may pass compromising the debt, which levies a tax to pay interest, and such an issue would defeat the Democrats. For these reasons there will be no action by the Legislature at its present session.

ENDOWING A PROFESSORSHIP.

PHILADELPHIA, Thursday, Feb. 22, 1877.

The most important event connected with the celebration of Washington's Birthday in this city were the ceremonies at the University of Pennsylvania, consisting of the endowment of the "Welsh Centennial Professorship of History and Literature." This affair was an outgrowth of the Centennial Exhibition, and intended by the citizens of Philadelphia as a memento of that memorable occasion. The idea had its inception with Messrs. George W. Childs, A. J. Drexel, and other prominent citizens, to the sum of some 500, who desired to endow certain professorships in the University of Pennsylvania, and at the same time compliment some worthy and estimable fellow citizen. Accordingly the sum of $50,000 was subscribed, each of the 500 contributing their share, and indeed the number could easily have been swelled to more than that had it been necessary, so great was the desire to be identified with the movement. The sum was presented to Hon. John Welsh, President of the Centennial Board of Finance, as a mark of esteem and confidence for his great and arduous labors in providing, along with his co-laborers, the funds necessary to carry on the Centennial Exhibition. It was tacitly understood, of course, that he was not to retain the money, but to present it to the University of Pennsylvania, so that professorships bearing his name might be endowed, and stand ever as a monument to his fame and the great Centennial event. The occasion was a grand one, and had been looked forward to with great interest by the fashionable world. The audience comprised the leading merchants, manufacturers, and business men of the city and their families, and was as brilliant a gathering as has ever been seen here. The ceremonies took place in the Chapel Hall of the University. The room was tastefully decorated with bunting, over the platform being a portrait in oil of the hero of the occasion, surmounted by the coat of arms of Philadelphia. To the left of the platform, over the main door, was a tablet containing the following inscription:

> In grateful commemoration
> JOHN WELSH,
> In promoting the success of > the Centennial International Exhibition, > the Citizens of Philadelphia > have endowed
> the John Welsh Centennial Professorship > of History and English Literature > in this University.

Among those present were Hon. John F. Hartranft, Governor of Pennsylvania; Hon. Andrew G. Curtin, ex-Minister to Russia; Director General A. T. Gosborn; Hon. Thomas Cochran, Vice President of the Centennial Board of Finance; Hon. Frederick Fraley, Treasurer of the Board of Finance; Hon. Eli K. Price, J. B. Lippincott, Right Rev. William Bacon Stevens, Bishop of the P. E. Church of the Diocese of Pennsylvania; Thomas Harrison, Edward T. Steel, and the following members of the Committee Citizens who supervised the contributions to the fund: George W. Childs, Chairman; Anthony J. Drexel, Joseph Patterson, D. B. Cummins, Edward C. Knight, James A. Wright, Matthew Baird, Charles Platt, James C. Hand, Thomas A. Scott, George B. Roberts, Franklin B. Gowen, Henry Lewis, Lemuel Coffin, Henry D. Welsh, George N. Allen, Thomas C. Hand, and Jacob Riegel. The invited guests, citizens, and members of the Faculty assembled in the vestry-room, and shortly after the noon hour proceeded to the chapel hall, where the ceremonies took place, under the charge of Prof. Charles J. Stille, Provost of the University. The audience was called to order by Prof. Stille, who addressed them as to the object of the assembling. Right Rev. Bishop Stevens delivered a prayer invoking the blessing of the Almighty on the work about to be commenced, after which Hon. Morton McMichael, of this city, made a long address, reviewing the success of the Centennial Exhibition, the causes which led to it, and particularized the services of Mr. Welsh. On concluding he handed to Mr. Welsh a certified check for $50,000, drawn on Drexel & Co. The recipient, in taking it, made an address, which set forth at length the inception of the Centennial idea, and credited the fact of the first recorded suggestion, "that the Centennial celebration ought to involve an International Exhibition to be held in Philadelphia," was made by John L. Campbell, Professor of Natural Philosophy in Wabash College, Indiana. In concluding his remarks he handed the check to Gov. Hartranft, the ex-officio President of the Board of Trustees, that it might be applied to the endowment of the chair of History and English Literature in the University of Pennsylvania. Gov. Hartranft received it, and addressed Mr. Welsh and the audience, stating that the trust would be carried out with scrupulous fidelity, and, in the name of the institution and the people of the State, thanked the donor most heartily. After an address by Provost Stille, the benediction was pronounced by Rev. E. R. Beadle, and the audience dispersed.

TURKEY AND THE POWERS.

NEGOTIATIONS FOR A RESUMPTION OF DIPLOMATIC RELATIONS BETWEEN THE POWERS AND THE PORTE—THE PRELIMINARIES OF PEACE BETWEEN SERVIA AND TURKEY SIGNED—SERVIA ABANDONED BY RUSSIA—ELECTION DISTURBANCES IN SERVIA.

LONDON, Feb. 22.—A dispatch from Paris announces the arrival there of Vahan Effendi, who is intrusted with a special mission to the European courts. Rumors have been in circulation that the mission of Vahan Effendi is to urge the resumption of full diplomatic relations with the Porte.

A dispatch from Constantinople says the Servian delegates have held a second conference with Satvet Pasha. An understanding has been almost completely established. The next conference will be held on Saturday. It is thought that a formal prolongation of the armistice will not be necessary to allow time for peace negotiations with Montenegro, and that the military commanders on both sides will be ordered, by mutual arrangement, to remain on the defensive.

LONDON, Feb. 23.—A correspondent telegraphs from Paris: "I am informed that preliminaries of peace between Servia and Turkey have been signed."

A Vienna special says the Porte has ordered 30,000 revolvers from the United States.

Roumanian troops are going to Barboshi, as it is believed the Turks will try to seize that important railway junction.

A dispatch from Belgrade reports that disturbances broke out in Jagodina, Kragujevatz, Ushitza, and other places in the interior during the elections. Troops left for Jagodina on Wednesday. It is variously stated that the disturbances were caused by the Government exerting pressure on the electors and by the intrigues of Karageorgevitch against Prince Milan. The Times correspondent is inclined to believe the latter statement as it is well known that the partisans of Karageorgevitch are very active, and there is good ground for believing that they find willing listeners to the mass of the military adventurers gathered in Belgrade from all parts of Europe. Karageorgevitch is also strongly favored by Austria and Hungary. As Servia has been apparently abandoned by Russia, an arrangement is not improbable, by means of which an attempt may be made to place a ruler in Servia who would make a close alliance with Austria, and thus pacify the Hungarian excitement on the Slavonic question. With Bosnia and Herzegovina annexed, and Servia practically an Austrian dependency, we should probably hear of no more Hungarian opposition to Russia.

A correspondent at Berlin says the Roumanian Government has informed the powers that it will disband the reserves early in March, as Russia, even in the event of war, has no intention of occupying Roumania, but only desires the right of transit.

A Paris dispatch says it is very generally believed that diplomatic relations between Turkey and Europe will be resumed immediately after the conclusion of peace with Servia and Montenegro, and that then the Porte may be expected, in consequence of advice from almost all quarters, to consent to some direct step that may still avert a conflict.

A special from Pera asserts that Turkey has decided to relinquish her demand for the maintenance of a Turkish agent at Belgrade. It is thought that the negotiations will be completed on Saturday.

THE GERMAN PARLIAMENT.

OPENING OF THE REICHSTAG—EMPEROR WILLIAM'S SPEECH—THE INFLUENCE OF THE EMPIRE TO BE EXERTED IN BEHALF OF THE CHRISTIANS IN TURKEY AND FOR THE PRESERVATION OF THE PEACE IN EUROPE.

BERLIN, Feb. 22.—The German Reichstag was opened to-day. Emperor William's speech opening the session adverts to the depressed state of commerce and industry, and also to the deficiency in the Budget. It proposes that the deficiency, amounting to 25,500,000 marks, be met by raising the matriculatory contributions payable by the States. The speech also refers to Eastern affairs, and expresses the opinion that the peace of Europe will not be broken. The dangers which might result from the Eastern question, still unsolved, threaten Germany in a less degree than any other country. The Empire has remained true to the principles which it laid down for itself at the beginning of the Eastern complications. The conference has not succeeded in obtaining from the Porte the concessions which the powers judged expedient to demand in the interests of humanity, and as a means of securing peace for the future. Nevertheless, the proceedings of the conference have led to this result, that the Christian powers have arrived at a common understanding among themselves respecting the guarantees to be demanded from the Porte. Before the conference such an understanding lacked universally recognized expression. By this means a solid basis has been secured for confidence that peace will be preserved among the powers, even should the hope be disappointed that the Porte will, of its own accord, barry out the reforms regarding the treatment of its Christian subjects which the conference considered requisite in the interests of Europe. Should the expectations now entertained, based upon the promises of the Porte on the one hand, and the opening of negotiations for peace on the other with Servia and Montenegro, fail to be realized, the Imperial Government, while recognizing the fact that the present question does not prescribe any precise line of conduct for itself, will continue to exert its influence, as hitherto, on behalf of the protection of the Christians in Turkey, and of the preservation of the peace of Europe, above all things, however, strengthening its own good relations with Governments allied or otherwise friendly to it.

THE BRITISH PARLIAMENT.

THE DEBATE ON THE TREATY OBLIGATIONS —THE CONSULAR STAFF IN TURKEY TO BE STRENGTHENED.

LONDON, Feb. 22.—In the House of Commons this evening there was a short discussion, in the course of which the Marquis of Hartington said of the continuation of the discursive debate on the treaty obligations would in any way embarrass the Government the Opposition had not the slightest desire to add to the difficulties of the situation, and they did not propose to bring forward a definite motion to-morrow night. The resumption of the debate upon the suggestion of Sir Stafford Northcote was accordingly indefinitely postponed.

In the House of Lords the Earl of Beaconsfield intimated that it was the intention of the Government to propose measures for increasing the efficiency of the consular staff in Turkey, as localities where the staff had been formerly reduced were likely soon to become the seat of important peaceful or warlike events—the trusted peaceful events, as he did not yet despair of the common sense of the Porte, and had great confidence in the wise magnanimity of the great powers.

O'MAHONY'S BODY IN IRELAND.

REFUSAL OF CARDINAL CULLEN TO PERMIT THE REMAINS TO LIE IN THE CATHEDRAL IN DUBLIN AND HIS REASONS.

DUBLIN, Feb. 22.—Cardinal Cullen has refused to allow the remains of John O'Mahony to lie in state in the Cathedral here.

LONDON, Feb. 23.—A dispatch from Dublin to the Press Association, says it is believed that in consequence of Cardinal Cullen's condemnation of the proposed demonstration on the occasion of the funeral of John O'Mahony, the committee of Glasnevin Cemetery will not allow the remains to be buried there.

Cardinal Cullen, in a letter to the O'Mahony Funeral Committee, says: "I am unaware that O'Mahony contributed any signal service for his country, but I believe that he rather provoked hostile legislation against us. I have been unable to learn that he was a great benefactor of the Church. On the contrary, he is said to have written in a spirit hostile to it. He was the Head Centre of the Fenians, and collected large sums to promote their absurd movements, even after Fenianism had been condemned by the Church. If I were to allow his remains to lie in the Cathedral, I should seem to approve his religious and public conduct and his projects relative to Ireland, a responsibility which I am not at all inclined to assume."

THE POPE AND CATHOLIC STATES.

CONTROVERSIAL QUESTIONS SUBMITTED TO THE CARDINALS, WITH A VIEW TO THEIR REMOVAL.

LONDON, Feb. 23.—A Times dispatch from Rome says it is stated that the Pope has submitted all the controversial questions existing in the Catholic States to the Cardinals, in order that they may indicate those upon which it would be possible to come to terms. He has also asked them what would be the means most conformable to the doctrine of the Church, by which the HolySee could remove all causes giving rise to contests, and attain the peace desired by all parties.

The Standard's dispatch from Rome states that Italy has refused Germany's demand for the extradition of Archbishop Ledochowski.

MISCELLANEOUS FOREIGN NOTES.

VIENNA, Feb. 22.—The Upper House of the Reichsrath have adopted, without discussion, a credit of 600,000 florins to assist Austrian manufacturers to participate in the Paris Exhibition of 1878.

GLASGOW, Feb. 22.—Sugar has advanced 6d. to 9d. per cwt.

KINGSTON, Jamaica, Feb. 22.—Disturbances are feared at Port au Prince.

Mlle. Aimée is to sing in "Giroflé-Girofla" at the Eagle Theatre, this evening.

The new oratorio called "Malchus" will be made known at Chickering Hall, to-night, by the New-York Choral Union and several well known artists.

Miss Abbott will make her début in Italian opera at the Academy of Music this evening, when she will sing in "La Figlia del Reggimento," with the assistance of Signori Brignoli and Ferranti, and Mlle. de Gebele. An immense audience may be counted upon, and the intended presence of the Grand Duke of Russia is also announced.

Mr. Strakosch's artists who sang "Faust" in Philadelphia, this week, are to represent the same opera, with the same mise en scène and ballet—these being particularly conspicuous in the "Walpurgis Nacht" part of the work, which has not hitherto been given here—as beheld at the Broad Street Theatre—at Niblo's, throughout next week.

Mme. Essipoff gave a concert at Steinway Hall, yesterday afternoon. The programme consisted wholly of compositions of minor interest; the talent of so distinguished an artist is scarcely to be gauged by the pieces which have been allotted to her for performance lately, and it is really to be regretted that for her last entertainments, at all events, the co-operation of an orchestra should not be had. However, Mme. Essipoff ought not to depart unheard, with or without orchestra, and hence we remind the reader that she will play again, this evening and to-morrow afternoon.

JOHN OXENFORD.

A dispatch from London announces the death of John Oxenford, a well-known English dramatic author. Mr. Oxenford was born in Camberwell, near London, in 1812, and was educated for the practice of the law, being admitted to the bar in 1833. Preferring literature to the law, he resolved to become a dramatic author, and produced several successful plays, besides many popular songs. Among the dramas of which he was the author are "My Fellow Clerk," "Twice Killed," "A Day Well Spent," "Porter's Knot," and "£456 11s. 3d." He also translated the "Autobiography of Goethe," the "Conversations of Eckermann with Goethe," the "Helias" of Jacobs, and Kuno Fischer's "Essay on Lord Bacon and His Philosophy." For many years Mr. Oxenford was the dramatic critic of the London Times.

INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23—1 A. M.—For the Middle and Eastern States north-east to south-east winds, stationary or lower temperatures, rising barometer, and in New-England partly cloudy weather; but in the Middle Atlantic States threatening weather and possibly light rains.

CINCINNATI MERCHANTS OPPOSING DELAY

CINCINNATI, Feb. 22.—A large number of leading merchants and business men of this city, irrespective of party, have united in an appeal to Congress to stand manfully by the decision of the Commission, whatever it may be. The paper was forwarded this evening by telegraph to Messrs. Sayler and Banning, the Cincinnati Representatives. Business men here are somewhat alarmed at the possibility of a failure to elect a President before the 4th of March. They feel that it would be disastrous to the commercial and industrial interests of the country. If Banning and Sayler take any steps to delay the final decision, they will do it under the emphatic protest of their constituents.

REFORM IN SING SING PRISON.

The newly appointed Warden of Sing Sing Prison, Mr. B. S. W. Clarke, entered upon his duties yesterday morning. He immediately commenced the work of reformation by dismissing seven keepers and one guard, whose services he considered altogether unnecessary. He also appointed as keeper of the mess-room Charles Fury, of Malone. Among the many improvements intended to be made by Warden Clarke is the erection of a stone wall, from 25 to 30 feet high, inclosing the workshops, and running from both ends of the prison proper to the river. A tall iron fence will also be built along the river front. This wall and fence will be great guards against the escape of convicts, as hitherto this portion of the prison was entirely exposed. Work on the wall will be commenced as soon as practicable.

A SHARP HORSE DEALER.

A man who gave his name as Cornelius Van Winkle, and said that he was an officer of the Hudson County, N. J., Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, was arrested in the Seventy-fourth Street Horse Market on Wednesday morning by Officer Alonzo S. Evans, of the New-York Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Animals, while in the act of selling a horse suffering with the glanders. The prisoner was taken before Justice Smith at the Fifty-seventh Street Police Court yesterday morning, and was held to answer in the sum of $500. It was stated in court that the horse had been turned over to Van Winkle by the proper officers of the society there, with orders to kill it, as the disease was dangerous and highly contagious.

ESCAPE OF TWO CONVICTS.

A dispatch was received at Sing Sing Prison yesterday, stating that Theodore Curtis and John B. Penfield, two of the convicts who were among the number sent on Wednesday evening from that prison to Auburn, had escaped on the arrival of the train at Syracuse. The prisoners, 50 in number, were handcuffed in pairs, and the manner in which the two prisoners effected their escape is not known. Curtis is a man of 50 years of age, and was serving a term of five years for grand larceny. He is a notorious criminal, having served three terms in State Prison prior to the present one. The offenses of which he was convicted were those of burglary and grand larceny, and his photograph at present adorns the "Rogues' Gallery" at Police Head-quarters. Penfield is about 27 years of age, and had never been at Sing Sing before. He was sentenced for three years on a charge of burglary, and had served a year of that time. Hopes are entertained that both men will be speedily captured.

DEATH OF MRS. FREDERICK J. PARKER.

Mrs. Parker, wife of Frederick J. Parker, General Manager of the Buyers' Exchange in this City, a lady widely known and highly esteemed, died suddenly yesterday morning at Passaic, N. J., of neuralgia of the heart. Some six weeks ago she was taken suddenly ill at Paterson, and being urged to return home, she through mistake took the train via Newark instead of Passaic. The conductor told her to get off at Peru and to walk across to Passaic. She objected, but he insisted she should do so. At Peru she could not get a carriage, and was forced to walk a distance of nearly three miles in the snow. She reached her home in a prostrate condition, and neuralgia set in, resulting in her death. The funeral will take place from her late residence at 11 o'clock to-morrow.

FATAL BOILER EXPLOSION.

EVANSVILLE, Feb. 22.—A special to the Journal from Petersburg, Ind., states that four men were instantly killed by the explosion of the boiler of a portable saw mill, at Alford, two miles from Petersburg. Four others were severely injured.

GRIEF OF THE MOTHER OVER THE DEAD BODY OF HER DAUGHTER—MRS. REIDEL'S TESTIMONY AT THE INQUEST—DAMAGING EVIDENCE AGAINST WELDSPIEL'S MORAL CHARACTER—OPEN VERDICT BY THE JURY.

The inquest in the case of Katy Reidel, found dead at the Quarantine grounds, Staten Island, has concluded without throwing any light upon the mystery surrounding her death. The man Weldspeil who, it was supposed knew something concerning her death, has been discharged, no evidence having been produced against him which would warrant his detention. The testimony of this man, though given in a clear, apparently open manner, now seems to have been in the main untrue, and the testimony of the mother of the dead girl shows conclusively that Weldspiel had seduced her and taken her away from her home in Boston. Mr. and Mrs. Reidel arrived from Boston early yesterday morning. They went directly to the Police station at Stapleton, Staten Island, and were from there conducted to the Richmond County Almshouse to view the remains of their daughter. The scene at the identification of the body was affecting in the extreme. The party was led to a room in one of the county buildings, ordinarily used as a bath-room. The mother entered the apartment first, and stood at the foot of the pine box which inclosed the body of the dead girl. When the lid was taken from the box she uttered a scream and threw herself upon the body, which yet remained in a state of perfect preservation. "Oh God!" she cried, as she caressed the cheeks of the corpse, "it is my Katy, it is my Katy!" There she lay for a few moments moaning, and saying in the intervals of her sobs, "Katy, Katy, my darling, why did you not come back?" Rising up from the body, she said, while her eyes flashed: "The scoundrel, Weldspiel, did it; he killed my Katy. He stole her away, and murdered my child." Her grief was too poignant for her to be vindictive in the presence of the dead, and she again threw herself upon the corpse, moaning, "Oh, why not send her back alive! Why did he kill her?" The men who stood by wept, and for a long time none attempted to lead away the grief-stricken mother. Finally, she permitted herself to be drawn gently from the room. Before leaving, however, she clipped a lock of hair from the head of the dead girl, and as she walked to the wagon that was to bear her to confront Weldspiel, she kissed it passionately, weeping and moaning all the while.

THE TESTIMONY.

The inquest was resumed in the Village Hall of New-Brighton yesterday morning. William Weldspiel was recalled. The only new statement he made was in explanation of his theory of the manner of Katy's death. He said he believed that she brooded over what he had said to her when she came to his room after leaving Mr. Phelps' house, until her mind became bent upon suicide; he earnestly declared that he was not on Staten Island last Wednesday afternoon.

At this point the inquest was adjourned for an hour. Just previous to the resumption of the inquest two light wagons were driven up to the Village Hall, and an elderly man and woman and several other persons alighted from the vehicle. It was soon learned by the crowd that the elderly people were Mr. and Mrs. Reidel, and the examination-room was soon crowded with auditors expecting remarkable developments. Coroner Dempsey called Mrs. Reidel to the witness-stand as soon as the jury were in their seats. Her testimony was a terrible denunciation of Weldspiel. She said: My name is Agnes Reidel; my residence is at No. 3 Tremont place, Boston; I recognized the body of the dead girl as that of my daughter; I saw my daughter alive the last time, over four years ago; Weldspiel stole my daughter away from our home, and I never heard from her after she left us; my husband and myself often tried to find where she was, but could not; I could recognize Weldspiel if I should see him again.

At this moment Weldspiel was brought into the room, in the middle of a long line of men. Mrs. Reidel arose and turned around with her entire frame shaking with suppressed excitement. Weldspiel stood with bent knees, in the centre of the throng of men. His face was pallid, and he trembled as it overcame with fear. His hands were clasped in front of him, and he awaited with anxiety the action of the witness, whose face he had not yet seen. As soon as Mrs. Reidel turned around, he threw his hands high above his head and started back as if recoiling from an apparition. His backward movement was so sudden he would have fallen if the persons near him had not upheld him; when he recovered he clasped his hands in an imploring fashion, and moved, with body bent and head bowed, toward the strong-faced woman who looked at him from behind the rail; as he advanced he cried out entreatingly: "Oh Mrs. Reidel, Mrs. Reidel"; she drew herself up to her full height, and, raising her hand threateningly, said in a tone of triumph, "At last! At last!" As Weldspiel stared at her, and moved his clasped hands convulsively up and down before him, she cried out, "Oh, you need not clasp your hands to me;" then she turned from him and sat down. Weldspiel was led from the room, looking dejected and utterly miserable.

Mrs. Reidel then resumed her testimony, saying: I have never seen Weldspiel since he took my girl away; he left Boston at the same time as Katy; she was then 13½ years old, and she would be 18 years old next time on the 23d of next April; Weldspiel and I got take his wife from Boston with him; he sent her a telegram about 14 days later to go to New-York; while in Boston he kept a saloon for a time in West Springfield street; he cheated everybody he could; he cheated me; he ran away with my money and took my daughter with him; my girl lived with him for two months, and then she went to Europe with his wife; I let my daughter go to Europe because Weldspiel said he was a rich man there; she stayed there five months; I had to send money to bring her and Mrs. Weldspiel back; I took my daughter away from Weldspiel after the return from Europe, because people told me he abused her, that he took her to bad places; Katy told me that he abused her; after that he came after her and coaxed her, giving her presents of silver and other things to go away with him, and she, poor girl, went away; she didn't know any better, as she was innocent; I know of my own knowledge that Weldspiel had sexual commerce with my daughter; his wife knew this also, and it caused a great deal of trouble; Weldspiel tried to get rid of his wife by sending her to Europe; Weldspiel often threatened to kill Katy if she went with another man; he told me in my house that he would kill Katy if she went with another man, and I caused him out; then I told Katy, and she said: "Oh, he love me too much; he won't kill me"—the poor child; one time Katy went to a party at a friend's house; Weldspiel was there and saw her talking to a young man who was brought up in my house; he said fiercely to Katy I will kill that fellow if you go with him; Katy said to him: 'Oh, Mr. Weldspiel, I don't have nothing with him;' one time Mrs. Weldspiel told me her husband said: 'Why don't you take poison to get rid of your child the same as the Yankee women do?' I said to her Don't you do nothing like that; Weldspiel always fought with his wife and beat her; he told me one time that he had some poison which he thought he would give his wife, as she was lazy and would not work; I said to him 'Don't you do that; your wife works as much as she can,' and I drove him from my house; Mrs. Weldspiel was a bad woman, too, no better than her husband; Mrs. Weldspiel told me that Katy slept in the same bed with herself and her husband; she protested against this, but her husband declared that Katy must sleep in the bed, and beat her for crying; she told me that her husband had carnal intercourse with Katy, many times while she was in her presence; I took my daughter away from Weldspiel's family when I knew he had abused her; I went out to work and left Katy at home; Weldspiel went to the house and gave her presents—ear-rings, fancy combs, brooches, and other jewelry; he threatened her life if she did not accompany him, and said no other man should have her but himself; several times he hunted my house through to find my daughter when she had hidden herself from him.

Joseph Reidel, the father of the dead girl, testified: I recognize the body I saw to-day as that of my daughter Katy; William Weldspiel took her away from Boston; I got a warrant for Weldspiel's arrest, but the Police never found him; Katy never told me that Weldspiel abused her in an improper way.

Weldspiel was again recalled and asked to state why he left Boston. He rehearsed his former testimony, saying nothing new, until Coroner Dempsey stopped him, as his utterances only consumed time without furnishing knowledge to the jury. The case was then given to the jury. After deliberating about an hour and a half that body rendered the following verdict:

"The said Katy Reidel came to her death on either the 10th or 11th of February, 1877, from a dose of prussic acid, how or by whom administered is unknown to the jury."

Coroner Dempsey brought Mr. and Mrs. Reidel and Weldspiel into a private room to hear the reading of the verdict. He then informed Weldspiel that it was his duty, under the circumstances, to discharge him from custody. The man appeared to become crazed with joy. The pallor fled from his cheeks, and his limbs, that had been quivering, became strong again. He rushed toward Mrs. Reidel, and crying "Mama, mama," threw himself weeping upon her breast; for a moment she stood rigid, then, with a cry of horror, she threw him from her; as he recoiled she pounced upon him and tried to tear his face with her hands, all the while screaming "Oh, you scoundrel! you have killed my Katy; you have stolen and murdered my poor child." Had it not been for the officers present, she would probably have done him a great deal of injury, for she appeared to be endowed with wondrous strength, while he seemed to be powerless to resist her; when Weldspiel finally escaped from the room and went into the street, he was met by a crowd of excited people, who howled at him and called him murderer, scoundrel, villain, and otheropprobrious epithets; they needed little to make them seize and lynch him at the nearest lamp-post, so affected were they by the disgusting revelations made by Mrs. Reidel, of his conduct toward her daughter.

The body of Katy Reidel will be interred in Woodlawn Cemetery on Staten Island this afternoon. The expenses of the burial will be defrayed by subscription. Mr. and Mrs. Reidel are too poor either to have the body of their daughter taken to Boston or to pay for its interment in this vicinity.

RELIEVED OF THEIR BOOTY.

A DRY GOODS STORE IN THOMAS STREET ROBBED—THE THIEVES ARRESTED AND THE STOLEN PROPERTY RECOVERED.

Shortly after 7 o'clock yesterday morning, while Patrolman Fogarty, of the Fifth Precinct, was on patrol in plain clothes, he noticed two rough-looking individuals carrying a trunk through West Broadway from the direction of Thomas street. The appearance of the men aroused the suspicions of the policeman, and he sauntered leisurely after them, hoping to meet a brother officer. The men went along until they reached Walker street, when they placed the trunk on the stoop of a house. They then separated. One of them proceeded along Walker street to Church, and turned up Church toward Canal street, while the other remained with the trunk. Fogarty followed the man along Walker street, and when he turned into Church street, out of sight of his companion, arrested him and turned him over to Patrolman Pike, of the Fifth Precinct. Fogarty then returned to the man who was guarding the trunk, and arrested him. The prisoners were taken to the Leonard Street Police Station, where they gave their names as Patrick Fay and William O'Neil. The trunk, on being opened, was found to contain 30 dozen linen pocket-handkerchiefs, 95 Llama lace shawls, 25 Llama lace jackets, 75 Llama lace parasol-covers, 9 white lace shawls, 12 dozen ladies' tortoise shell combs, six dozen fine linen mourning sets, 25 water-proof cloaks, and a number of silk dresses, gauntlets, and lockets. An examination of the neighborhood was then made, and it was learned that the store of Rosenbaum & Friedman, on the second floor of No. 46 Thomas street, had been entered and robbed by burglars. The firm were notified and on examining the goods found in the trunk identified them as their property. The goods are valued at $6,000. It appears that the first floor of the premises is unoccupied, and it is supposed that the burglars were concealed there when the place was closed for the night, and that during the night they forced open the door leading into that portion of the premises occupied by Rosenbaum & Friedman. On the first floor were found a trunk containing $1,500 worth of wearing apparel belonging to Mrs. Freeman, which had been removed from the second floor, and also a "jimmy," pistol, screw-driver, and two knives. The prisoners were brought before Superintendent Walling, and Fay was recognized as Flaherty, an expert burglar, whose picture is in the Rogue's Gallery. O'Neil is also known as a burglar, and the Superintendent ordered his picture to be taken. The prisoners were arraigned before Justice Duffy, at the Tombs Police Court, yesterday, and remanded for examination.

RACING IN CALIFORNIA.

SAN FRANCISCO, Feb. 22.—A four-mile heat race for a purse of $5,000 came off to-day over the Bay District Course. There was a good attendance, the track was in good order, and the horses in fine condition. Mollie McCarthy, Lady Amanda, Bazar, Bradley, and Billy Bingham started. Sherman and Mattie A., who were also entered, were withdrawn on account of lameness. An even start was effected in the first heat. Bradley took the lead, retaining it until coming down the homestretch on the third mile, when Mollie McCarthy passed him. Bazar, who had till then been traveling behind took the third position, Bingham the fourth, Amanda gradually dropping to the rear, in which order they finished the heat, Lady Amanda being distanced. Time—7:43¼. In the second heat Bradley took the lead again, and kept it to the end of the second mile. Mollie McCarthy second, and Bazar third. Lady Amanda dropped hopelessly in the rear on the second mile. On rounding the first turn on the third mile, Mollie McCarthy went to the front, and Bazar passed Bradley. This position was maintained, Bradley gradually dropping to the rear. Mollie running easily and crossing the score the winner of the heat and race, Bazar second, Billy Bingham distanced. Time, (corrected) 7:42¼. Mollie McCarthy was awarded the first, third and fourth money, and Bazar the second. Following is a summary:

SOCIETY OF THE CINCINNATI.

The New-York Society of the Cincinnati celebrated Washington's Birthday by having a banquet at Delmonico's. In the absence of the President, Hon. Hamilton Fish, from whom a letter had been received, regretting his inability to attend, Mr. William S. Popham presided. Thirty members sat down to dinner, among whom were Messrs. Pierre Van Cortlandt, Rev. Marinus Willett, Gen. John Cochrane, John Schuyler, Gen. A. S. Webb, Alexander Hamilton, William Ogden Gilles, George Cabot Ward, and other prominent gentlemen. After the course, the following toasts were drunk:

1. Washington—The First President of the Society. May we emulate his virtues as we revere his name. Drunk in silence.
2. The Founders of the Cincinnati—Heroes in war, Statesmen in peace, and ever lovers of our country. Silence.
3. Our President—Hamilton Fish. Responded to by Mr. William H. Crosby.
4. The President of the United States.
7. Our sister State societies.
8. Women. Responses by Messrs. Fitch and Schott.

Gen. Cochrane, who presided at one end of the table, after the regular toasts, called on Alexander Hamilton, who spoke to the character of Washington. Other speeches were made by John Fitch, of the New-Jersey Society; C. Ridgely Schott, of the Pennsylvania Society, and by Gen. Cochrane. The society adjourned at a late hour.

DINNER OF THE HARVARD CLUB.

The eleventh annual dinner of the Harvard Club, composed of the Alumni of Harvard University residing in New-York City and vicinity was held last evening at Delmonico's. Mr. Joseph H. Choate, President of the club, occupied the chair. A song composed for the occasion was sung, a poem having for its subject the "Ladies," was read by Mr. H. W. Poor, and speeches were made by the President, Rev. Dr. Bellows, Dr. Sturgis, Gen. Sprague, of Buffalo; Judge Henry E. Howland, Hon. John O. Sergent, Prof. Dunbar, Dean of the University and Profs. Torling and Goodwin. Among the notable gentlemen present, in addition to those mentioned as speakers, were Attorney General Fairchild, Hon. Francis Parkman, of Boston; Messrs. G. Choate, William M. Prichard, and Dr. Francis M. Weld, and others, who acted as Dinner Committee.

HIGHWAYMEN IN WASHINGTON STREET.

While Mr. Peter Anderson, of No. 24 Albany street, was passing through Washington street, between 1 and 2 o'clock yesterday morning, he was set upon by a gang of young ruffians numbering five or six, one of whom struck him a violent blow in the face, felling him to the ground. His companions then beat him badly, and one of them covered his head with a handkerchief, after which they rifled his pockets of a pocket-book containing $50 in greenbacks. Officer McDermott, of the Twenty-seventh Precinct Police, who was in the neighborhood, heard the outcry for help made by Mr. Anderson, and on going to the spot found that he had been beaten in a shocking manner. The officer found two of the gang, named William Hickey, aged 19, of No. 95 Washington street, and John Mitchell, aged 18, of No. 125 Washington street, standing near the corner of Cedar street, and placed them under arrest. When confronted with Mr. Anderson in the station-house, he positively identified Mitchell as the person who first struck him in the face. A man named John Sullivan was subsequently arrested on suspicion of having been concerned in the robbery, and the three prisoners were yesterday taken before Justice Duffy, at the Tombs Police Court, where they denied all knowledge of the robbery. Hickey and Mitchell were each held in default of $3,000 bail to answer at the General Sessions, and Sullivan was remanded to the custody of the Police, who expect to connect him with the robbery.

ARRESTED AFTER TWELVE YEARS.

BOSTON, Feb. 22.—Joseph C. Davis was arrested here yesterday on an indictment issued in Vermont 13 years ago. He is charged with defrauding C. S. Hamilton, of Hartford, Vt., of $10,000 in 1863. A writ of habeas corpus was issued, and a hearing will take place.

LOCAL MISCELLANY.

COMMODORE VANDERBILT'S WILL.

PREPARING TO CONTEST IT IN COURT—A COMPLAINT OF "UNDUE INFLUENCE" TO BE URGED—AN EFFORT TO BE MADE FOR AN AMICABLE ADJUSTMENT.

THE TIMES on Tuesday announced that a contest of the will of the late Commodore Vanderbilt was contemplated by Mr. Cornelius J. Vanderbilt, one of the sons of the dead millionaire, and that counsel had been employed by the contestant, preliminary to the return of the citation in the Surrogate's Court on Tuesday next. Two of the morning newspapers on Wednesday explicitly denied the statements of THE TIMES, but the same newspapers yesterday swallowed their own statements with an apparently good appetite, and fully corroborated the assertion of THE TIMES that a contest would be made. The work of preparing the protest against the admission of the will to probate is going on, and the chief argument, it is understood, will be that undue influence was exerted upon Commodore Vanderbilt to induce him to make the disposition of his property that he did. Mr. C. J. Vanderbilt is as yet the only member of the family who has actually taken the position of a contestant, although others have consulted with counsel in the matter. The idea of contesting the will took the shape of a declaration to counsel soon after the will was opened, and Mr. C. J. Vanderbilt, it is said, expressed his dissatisfaction with the instrument soon after it was read. By its terms he receives only the income to be derived from an investment of $200,000, out of an estate of $100,000,000. When he applied to counsel for advice, Mr. Vanderbilt was advised not to bring the matter before the public, but to settle it in the family. This proposition did not meet with favor from Mr. W. H. Vanderbilt, and the case will, unless a proposition should come from Mr. W. H. Vanderbilt before Tuesday next, be contested, as was reported. Should the probate be resisted, an application for a Receiver of the estate pending the result of the suit would probably be made, and until the final decision is rendered, Mr. W. H. Vanderbilt will be unable to enter into the possession of his share of the property, as indicated by the will. Col. Ethan Allen, the counsel for C. J. Vanderbilt, said yesterday to a reporter of THE TIMES that Mr. Vanderbilt had informed him that probably Mr. Jeremiah Black and Mr. David Dudley Field would become his associate counsel, and the inference was that he had engaged them during his recent visit to Washington. Mr. C. J. Vanderbilt denies that he has been influenced at all by Mr. Terry, his intimate friend, in his course, and asserts that he has decided upon his action for himself, and will, if necessary, so pursue it. Col. Allen corroborates this statement, and says he has never known Mr. Terry to make any suggestions concerning the contest, although he has known that the gentleman was a very intimate friend of Mr. C. J. Vanderbilt.

THE MURDER OF MAGGIE BAUER.

TAKING TESTIMONY FOR THE DEFENSE—OPINIONS AS TO THE SANITY OF THE PRISONER — REBUTTAL TESTIMONY TO BE OFFERED TO-DAY.

The trial of Frank McConnochie for the murder of Maggie Bauer was continued in the Queens County Court of Oyer and Terminer yesterday morning. Mr. Armstrong continued his argument in defense of the prisoner. He said he proposed to show by witnesses that some of Maggie Bauer's hair was found on Kate Hoffman's dress; he would also show that Payne, the detective who arrested McConnochie, had used undue means for extorting the confession from the prisoner. On the occasion when McConnochie was taken along the road from Jamaica to Bauer's house he was alarmed at seeing a rope placed in the buggy, and asked Payne what they were going to do with it. Payne is said to have replied: "I don't know what the man is going to do with it, but if you confess he will not use it on you." McConnochie had on several occasions displayed evidences of mental incapacity, and had been discharged on several occasions for exhibitions of imbecility. A copy of a circular offering a reward of $200 for the apprehension of the murderer of Maggie Bauer, and signed by the Board of Supervisors of Queens County, was placed in evidence, after which Mr. John McConnochie, the father of the prisoner, was placed on the stand. He testified that the prisoner was 27 years old, and had been in the Penitentiary once for vagrancy; witness had never trusted his son to do any responsible thing; he could not get him to go to school; the prisoner had a mind incapable of understanding anything; he had never learned a trade, as people would not be bothered with him; witness had fitted his son out with clothes many times, but he would invariably destroy or lose them, and would frequently trade them for cheap jewelry and trinkets; the prisoner was never saucy or disrespectful, but would listen attentively to advice or direction; when his father's back was turned, however, he appeared to forget all the instructions he had received; the prisoner had been sent to Iowa by the Children's Aid Society on one occasion, but the following year he came back to the city.

In cross-examination the witness admitted that the prisoner might be lazy; his idea was that the prisoner had no application; witness thought prisoner knew right from wrong; he had been a tramp for many years; prisoner's mother would not have him around the house.

Dr. Charles F. Belden was next examined. He had lived in Jamaica for 14 years, and knew the prisoner; he last saw him on Sunday; he made an examination of the prisoner on that occasion, both intellectually and physically; he found that the prisoner had been addicted to a loathsome habit for the space of 13 years; in the judgment of the witness, the prisoner was physically incompetent to commit one of the offenses with which he was charged, and that his mind was more idiotic than insane.

Michael Reynolds, Charles Hermelay, Frank Fahay, Bartholomew Ward, and Mrs. J. A. Hannum testified to the mental incapacity of the prisoner.

Emma Hermelay, of Brooklyn, had known the prisoner for 10 or 12 years; she thought him silly; she had given him clothes at various times, among which was one to attend court; the latter he produced in court; she gave him the clothes to wear for morning an errand for her, and he put it on over his white shirt; on the following day he was skylarking with her brother and brother-in-law, and was accidentally stabbed in the arm by her brother-in-law; she gave him the shirt about Aug. 20.

Dr. Philip Mac-Wood testified that Bauer was no blood-can bonnet worn by Maggie Bauer was no blood-can bonnet worn by Maggie Bauer.

Bernardus Henderson, a Justice of the Peace at Jamaica, testified that the prisoner had been brought before him at the time of his arrest, and he had drawn the conclusion from the prisoner's action that he was weak minded.

Thomas Conroy, of Hunter's Point, narrated a conversation held by witness with Payne and others on an East New-York street car, to the effect that on the day the prisoner was arrested Payne had said that he had come to the conclusion that McConnochie was not guilty; Payne had led the prisoner to make a confession.

David Wright, a telegraph operator at Valley Stream Depot, testified in regard to the treatment of the prisoner, McConnochie, by Detective Payne. The latter had brought the prisoner into the station, and told the employes they had a prisoner; some ran with the prisoner, but if they would not touch him; others got a rope; another threatened the prisoner by telling him what he would do if his child had been murdered; prisoner was then asked if he attempted an outrage on the little girl; he replied he "tried to."

Abraham Baines, a Deputy Sheriff of Jamaica, testified that he arrested Kate Hoffman on Aug. 16; that she stated to him that she was at Bauer's on Aug. 14; she said she left there at 12:30 o'clock; light-colored fine hairs were taken from the dress of Kate Hoffman; witness left them in charge of Coroner Hicks.

Lizzie Nolan and Urict Urocco, inmates of the Poor-house, testified to their knowledge of Kate Hoffman and her violent temper. The court took a recess until this morning.

THE HOWLING DERVISHES.

PECULIAR SECT OF MOHAMMEDANS.

THE HOWLERS' CONVENT—THE VISITORS PRESENT—TROOPS OF LITTLE CHILDREN —THE LIFE AND SOUL OF THE WORSHIPERS—HOW THE CORRESPONDENT WAS IMPRESSED BY THE CEREMONIES.

George Augustus Sala writes from Constantinople Jan. 22, to the London Telegraph, as follows: "I found the entrance to the Howlers' Convent situated in a filthy back lane, infested by dogs that seemed to have caught something of the spirit of their turbulent human neighbors, for they yelped more frequently and more snappishly than the curs of Fera—a very good-natured race in the main—are apt to do. There was the customary porter's lodge in the porch of the monastery—a dark little hole, where a ragged-bearded old concierge took charge of our boots. I never thought last Autumn that I should come to the pass of having to pull off my shoeleather in order to hear a heathen Turk howl himself hoarse; but we never know to what we may come. We are duly inducted into the usual wooden gallery or estrade running round three sides of a long, low, quadrangular apartment, the floor laid with a ragged matting. There, as Giaours, unworthy of admission to the penetralia, we were privileged to stand up; but, as I was in the front rank and wished to obtain a full view of the performance, I e'en squatted down on my haunches à la Turque. There were two or three groups of Frank ladies and gentlemen, dressed in the newest fashion, present, and, in addition to these, there was a curious commingling of Greek, Armenian, and Turkish women—the two former dressed in their Sunday best, for the particular Sabbath was a special festival of the Greek Church, and later in their customary yashmaks, and all giggling and ogling their neighbors, as it seems the practice of the Moslem womankind to do at all times and at all places. Poor souls! Who shall blame them if they be, indeed, adonized to a little 'skylarking' under the secure awnings of their mean veils? They must have out a dull life of it in their harems at home; although I am well aware that some foolish people declare the Moslem woman to be the happiest soul alive. According to these agreeable optimists, Leila or Fatima has nothing whatever to do save to eat bonbons, smoke bubble bowles, plait her tresses into long rat-tails, listen to storytellers, look at herself in a mirror, and dress pretty puppets for her children. So in mine own country have I heard masters declare that their servants ought to think themselves the most fortunate creatures under the sun for being permitted to spend the major part of their existence in a camp stone dungeon underground among the rats and the black beetles, and over against the coal cellar and the dust bin. But our domestics never know when they are well off, and a similar state of ignorance as to what is best for them may prevail among women under the beneficent sway of Mahommedanism. There was another feature in the aspect of the audience at this howling séance which struck me as being somewhat remarkable. There were troops of little children present, some mere babies in arms, others little toddlekins of from three to five years old. The infants were painfully swaddled and emmaillotés; but the more advanced urchins looked picturesque enough in their tiny jackets and breeches of light-colored silks or figured cotton stuff—the boys in fitlpuhan fezzes, the girls with their hair plaited into tails and interspersed with small gilt coins. All these children were, nevertheless, an awful spectacle of sickliness and debility; and many of them showed shocking sores or were pitiable cripples. A few of the less afflicted of this stricken band had contrived to crawl out of the Giaours' Gallery into the sacred precincts, where they sprawled on the matting and listened, with much equanimity, to the Howlers; but these small intruders were soon espied by time, quickly picked up by the Sheiks, or by their attendants, and handed back to their parents and guardians benind the railing.

I had not been five minutes in the place before I began to understand that there were Dervishes and Dervishes, and that it was by no means necessary to wear on the tall conical head-gear in mowling in order to get a very good living out of the profession. There were perhaps half-a-dozen Sheiks present, pimp, well-favored, middle-aged gentlemen, in fur-lined robes, and wearing either green turbans or the high, conical lamb-wool cap. I noticed that several personages of good breeding from time to time a handsome double-cased gold watch, attached to one of the buttons of his caftan by a solid gold chain, and most of his colleagues wore on their fingers signet rings of price. These class leaders, if I may call them so, marched up and down the matted area, chatting among themselves, or with their hands behind their backs, telling, in a mechanical way, so it seemed to me, the beads in their chaplets. By turns, they appeared to go on duty in directing the movements and conducting the uproar of the Uniantes, who, whatever may have been their actual social standing did not, to my thinking, look like Dervishes at all. They had much more the appearance of so many tramps and vagrants, indiscriminately picked up from the nearest gutter, or recently discharged from the casual ward of a workhouse—supposing such an appliance of advanced civilization to exist in the Ottoman Empire. They were some 18 in number, lazy, unwashed, ragged, vegabonds of all complexions, from a pasty white to a deep chocolate hue; and among them I noticed one negro of colossal stature and of a deep, shiny black. His unflawed ebony was most artistically set off by his apparel, which consisted solely of a smock and a short pair of drawers of white linen, girt about his waist by a faded red rag, and leaving his broad chest and muscular arms and legs bare. He was, in fine, that which, in the old days of American slavery, would have been qualified at an auction mart as 'a full-grown buck nigger, up to weeding, hoeing, carting trash, boiling cane, ring and ball-ing and chopping a cord of rotting bales,' and would have been cheap, I take it, at $1,200. I fancy that he was a Nubian, not very long caught. Anyway, he was the life and soul of the Howlers, who stood up in a row against the wall in the place where the Mithrab was, or should have been, and, following the Sunglemanap of the Sheik, recited the 'Lah-illah,' which they pronounced, by the way, 'Lol' and 'ollah!' The principal movement on their parts seemed to be a violent stamp on the ground; and, as they went up and down, wagging their preposterous heads, waving their bony arms, and bringing down their huge feet in alternate thuds on the ground, I could not help musing upon the benefit they might derive from say half an hour's exercise every morning on the treadmill of an English county jail, with a taste of the cat-o'-nine-tails afterward, just to equalize the circulation. The negro and his 17 associates continued to tramp and to intone their peaimody for about 25 minutes; and then they began to howl, not by any means in unison, but every one on his own account. There were those who bawled bass and those who growled treble. Some grunted like swine, some barked like dogs, some lowed like kine, some bellowed like bulls, some squealed like sucking pigs, while others merely yelled and shrieked like the human Bedlamites they seemed to have been temporarily turned into. To this screeching, wailing, snarling, gurgling, gasping din, the voice of the 'full-grown buck nigger' was always predominant. He was the first to begin and the last to leave off this diabolical clatter, but he showed no signs of swooning; on the contrary, the rogue looked as though he derived intense enjoyment from the performance. Where could it be that I last saw such a scene, and listened to the pious sacarme of such a black bull of Bashan as he in the white smock and drawers? Surely it was in the United States many years since; but the howling dervish I heard in the State of Massachusetts said nothing about 'La-illah-illah-ian!' He did nothing but shout 'Bress de Lord!' 'Bress de Lord!' 'Come quick!' 'Come quick!' 'Bress de Lord!' 'Bress de Lord!' 'Oh, Golly! Golly! Hallelujum!' Evidently the 32nd degree to which Emerson succeeding to imposture, hysterics supervening on humbug, are very much the same all the world over.

I should be ashamed to record—were it not idle to blush for any action that is perfectly natural—that the direst difficulty which encountered during this mad orgie of caterwauling was to refrain, myself, from taking an active part in the performance. There came over me 20 times a fierce and well-nigh irrepressible desire to howl. There was something more than seductive, more than tempting—there was that which was absolutely fascinating and enthralling in the opportunity offered for proclaiming one's individuality in a bare yaup,' as Walt Whitman puts it. 'The occasion is fleeting,' Hippocrates tells us. When might such another present itself as that offered by the Howling Place of the Azia Yanni! Who was to say me nay if I elected to yelp. Had I not been told by a friend versed in the mysteries of Islam that the bellowing bulls of Bashan against the wall were not professed Dervishes. They were not even holy men, but merely penitents who, in atonement for some crime committed, had come here to join in the devotional exercises of the Roofai, and so howl themselves into a state of grace. There may have been, perchance, some penitent Bashi-Bazouks, some remorseful Zaptiehs, some reclaimed Kaimakams among the screeching, stamping gang; and the doleful yells of 'Hoo! yah! hoo!' may have implied an expression of sorrow for the howler's participation in the Bulgarian atrocities. I hope that it was so with all my heart. I have a good many sins of my own to account for, and why, I thought, should I not essay to howl a few of them out? We are fond enough at home of talking of sitting in sackcloth and ashes, of rending our garments, of beating our breasts, and of lifting up our voices and weeping; but I ask do we ever actually do any one of these things? Is there any abnormal demand for cinders on Ash Wednesday? Did you ever even see, out of a madhouse, anybody tearing his or her hair? You talk about wringing your hands. Did you ever do so, save, perhaps, after washing those extremities at a hotel, and finding that the chambermaid had forgotten to bring you a towel? Among the Roofai fanlities are provided for converting mere rhetoric into logic, and you may wail yourself out of breath without scandalising your neighbors. There is, I apprehend, another and a more deeply-seated cause which might account for the temptation, which ostensibly civilized and apparently rational beings often experience, to make fools of themselves in the way of shrieking. Wise physicians will discourse to you very learnedly about the proneness of the nervous system to hysterical affections, and the consequences of hysteria itself; but all I know is that when one wild beast begins to howl another follows suit; that the lion roaring in the jungle is answered by the garrulous jackal and the derisive hyæna; and that African chiefs and their savage followers will then unroof patriotism, piety, and trade rum, shout by the hour together. I was fortunately enabled to subdue my savage instincts among the Roofai; but, had I howled my loudest in unison with the rapscallions around me, I should have been coding. I am afraid, only to a thoroughly natural intuition. Baby is quite a natural character, and does not he howl from morning until night?"

SCOTCH UNIVERSITIES.

THE AWKWARDNESS OF THE FRESHMAN—THE GOOD OLD CUSTOMS OF THE PLACE —MYSTERIOUS STUDENTS.

From the Saturday Review.

The Scotch freshman is a very shy and curious being, all unlike the mirthful lads who come up from Harrow or Rugby with hosts of friends ready made, and with social and cricketing reputation to keep up. The English university is a continuation on a larger scale of the life they know already; they have already made their mark in one way or another as scholars, or athletes, or whatever it may be, and they fit without difficulty into the place which is ready for them. Everything, on the other hand, is strange to the Scotch freshman; even the Greek alphabet is not always familiar to him, and when a Professor asks him to breakfast he endures agonies of shyness. He comes, perhaps, from a parish school where he has been the one redeeming feature in the toilsome life of the dominie. He has for years enjoyed the benefit of all the leisure of that hard-worked man, and has gladdened him by his "grip" on mathematics and his skill in Latin prose, an art which lingers in Aberdeenshire villages as the old Etruscan method of granulating gold-work survived in one nook of the Apennines. Full of a modest confidence that what Scotchmen have done Scotchmen may do, he sets himself to the study of the Hamiltonian philosophy and grapples with Consciousness and the Concept. This sort of student you will but rarely see in the open air, never, certainly, at foot-ball or golf; but in passing through the windy streets at midnight one may descry the gleam of the candle by which he and a friend can study Reid's Active Powers, or, greatly daring, master the laws of Greek accentuation.

There is no such thing as a fast freshman at a Scotch university; but the lumpish freshman is there, and no doubt would be fast if he had the opportunity. He has come from the plow, in obedience to the mistaken ambition of his parents, who hope to see him a gilded minister. At first he is very awkward, but he is a good deal encouraged by finding that one set of low ones begins with a sort of recognized boar-fight, in which he so conducts himself as to gain the approval of other dumpkins. He finds, too, that, in a large class of some 150 men and boys, the odds are 150 to 1 that he will not be asked to give his rendering of any passage of Xenophon or Livy. Presuming on this knowledge, he exercises his talent for practical jokes, and finally, perhaps, after some culminating feat of stealing the tongue of the college bell, leaves the place without a degree, and with an exhaustive ignorance which the Southern gentleman may envy, but is not allowed to enjoy in peace. A third sort of freshman comes from one of the larger Scotch schools, and necessarily possesses some knowledge of the elements of Greek and Latin. Unfortunately, he is generally so much diverted by the blunders of the dumbkin and by the fates quantities of the prodigy from the north parts that he ceases to be a student, becomes an unconcerned spectator of the life around him, and is easily defeated by his rustic rivals.

Very queer in many ways their life is. It is a curious spectacle that of some 200 men and boys, some eagerly answering questions as if they were children at school, and some possessing their souls in great fear of being blandly requested to exhibit their knowledge. In a lecture on logic you may find men full of acuteness and interest who cannot pronounce the Latin names of the fallacies, and who talk of ignatio elenchi and poetic principii with perfect confidence. This is the sort of man who is very prominent in the clubs and societies which make some attempt to keep up a corporate life. Months before the election of a Lord Rector he is forming committees and sub-committees, boring people of note with his letters, and writing semi-political tracts and lampoons. He presides over clubs which wear colors, and are not wholly unlike their German prototypes. He is great in all the good old customs of the place, and at one university amazes the "bejant" by extorting from him a sailling wherewith to buy raisins and almonds. Some strange tradition, dating, perhaps, from the fifteenth century, has ordained that second year's men shall eat raisins and all things, at the expense of freshmen, in the first month of the Autumn session. Another law of these Medes and Persians has decreed that in Spring a band of maskers is to ride about the town, amusing the ligies, in spite of one Kate Kennedy. Antiquaries are not agreed as to who Miss Kennedy may have been, but she did well to deserve this commemoration, and it may be guessed that the business is a survival of the carnival. Perhaps any harmless piece of fun of this kind rather deserves support than otherwise in colleges where traditions have faded very rapidly, and where gaudy days of any sort are few and far between.

There are always in Scotch universities a number of characters whose business there is anything but obvious, and whose whole manner of life is a mystery. One student is reported to have revealed the secret of his pallor and of his sleepy demeanor by appearing one morning in a policeman's hat. He was a constable on night duty, and his perseverance in his studies as well as creditable as that of the Stoic philosopher who turned a mill all night to gain money to pay for the lectures he attended in the day. Unfortunately, it can hardly be said that students of this class get much good by their well-meant efforts. It is impossible for the Professor to ask them any questions, because they promptly betray a depth of inconceivable ignorance which is not lightly to be stirred a second time. Their own idea, apparently, is that they gain something by living in the atmosphere of books, and the low scale of fees enables hopeless incapacity to stay on satisfaction. At most, they pick up as much scholarship as was displayed by one of their number along with a certain calmness peculiar to the race. Two students of this class were in one lecture, and it was seriously believed that they knew no more of Latin than the "adsum" with which they delighted to answer to their names in the roll-call. But the name when one of them was absent, and, to the surprise of all, his companion answered to his name with the word "assum." On the fourth day he showed still more profound scholarship and stoicism by replying "mortuus est." The weak point of the Scotch universities is the lack of endowments, which makes it almost necessary, if a Professor is to live at all, and not perish by starvation, that he should have crowded lectures. Now, as there are but few schools where the higher class of education flourishes, it is impossible to have a stern examination before the admission of students. If only those who had a fair knowledge of classics and mathematics were admitted, the lecture-rooms would be thinned and the fees reduced to next to nothing. As these things stand at present the lecture attendances are large, and but a small proportion of the men have anything approaching to accurate knowledge. Time would be hopelessly wasted in the attempt to give most of them any serious acquaintance with any difficult subject. At the same time there is enough interest in the things of the mind to encourage Professors to give lectures which are far more of the nature of literature than the cudjoisted and bad remarks which are printed as lectures in Oxford. If a man has not time or energy enough to follow minute study patiently, he will certainly learn more from a Scotch Professor than in an English college lecture-room. To students who had the pleasure and advantage of attending, for example, the lectures of the late Prof. Ferrier, there would be something very like torture in hearing any English lecturer so crabbed passages in Aristotle's Ethics, and to pitfalls in the Republic. The whole education of a Scotch university is more popular, more rhetorical, and, perhaps, so far, more pleasant and exhilarating.

It is found to be impossible to make the majority of the men accomplished scholars, or even to induce them all to take the pass degree. The examination for that degree is much harder than that which ends the troubles of the English passman, but the work required is not much more interesting than what is demanded of him. Again, there is but little material profit in taking honors in a Scotch university; and so, when pass-work is difficult and dry, and honors-work has few attractions not a very great proportion of students take any degree at all. The result is a certain aimlessness and desultory study of the sort which is often practised by clever men, but seldom by sound scholars. There is time for dawdling among the pleasanter places of literature; there is no particular need to hurry; there are sure to be plenty of students of this way of thinking, and thus the Scotch universities offer a sort of life which is not all unprofitable. Rhetorical and literary talent is encouraged at the expense of the scholarship which labors at its task in the Scotch universities do not turn out pupils who can "cure the halt and maimed likeitdes" but they give every class a chance of gaining intellectual interests. The growing custom of passing from the Scotch to the German universities may supply what the Northern teaching wants, and may train the men who would have been flowery but orthodox preachers into not less flowery, but less "sound" occupants of the pupits. Certainly the new liberalism of Northern opinion may be traced to the alliance between Scotch and German thought which has taken the place of "the Ancient League" with France.

SCIENCE AND THE STAGE.

The London correspondent of a Liverpool daily writes: "Parisian theatrical folk, like English clergymen, are inclined to sneer at science. What they are asking, has science done for the stage? And the answer is, nothing worth having. The Parisian people declare that the scientiste have invented for them only two things—the oxy-hydrogen light and 'Pepper's Ghost.' That last, having ceased to bewilder Londoners, is praised as a great suntevenuar, and they proudly tell how Fenner discovered the secret. He saw that things upon the stage were reflected with the ghost and, challenging Prof. Pepper with his theory, was submitted to the weeds secret. The amusing part of all this gossip, however, is that 'Pepper's Ghost' is now never seen on the stage, and the difficulty of reasuing a ghost is still one of the unsolved problems which perplex theatrical managers. Nothing could be much worse than the ghosts which we have had in London lately. One atrocious imitation was of guass, and was so poor that the people laughed. Another was a spirited exhibition, and at last a peculiarly-dressed man came on in the flesh. Here is a chance for 'materialising mediums!' If they can only train their spirits, the ghost of Hamlet's father may actually make each particular hair to stand on end every night."

GEN. MIGUEL BLANCO.

A telegram from Brownsville to the Galveston (Texas) News, dated Feb. 13, says: "The Mexican General, Miguel Blanco, who has lately assumed command on this frontier, is a native of Coahuila, and a lawyer. He was a member of the Mexican Supreme Court of Justice, and of the Mexican Congress. In 1855 he entered the military service as a Colonel, and fought against the despotic rule of Santa Anna two years afterward. He was again in Congress and was again in arms against President Comonfort, and was second in command of the Conservative army. After the conclusion of this war he was Governor of the Federal District of Mexico, and occupied other high positions. At the beginning of the war of intervention he was Minister of War. After the fall of Puebla he resigned and accepted command of a division in the Army. This he resigned to avoid some unpleasant complications. He established a flourishing colony in Tamaulipas—was offered a high military command under the Empire and refused. He offered his services to Juarez in Chihuahua; was in the battle of San Jacinto and the siege of Queretaro. At the close of the war he returned to private life, only taking part politics in the Fourth Congress, acting with the opposition. He was afterward fourth magistrate of the Supreme Court, and was prevailed upon to accept command of the line of the Bravo. He is spoken of as a candidate for the Supreme Bench and for Governor of Coahuila. This is the kind of man Diaz has sent here to superseden the irresponsible Revuelistas. Blanco and Cortina had a friendly interview yesterday. The people of Matamoras are lively and hopeful of peace and a resumption of business. A great many families have returned to their homes. Some of the officers of Revueltas are said not to relish the change of commanders; it may be because they know he will rule according to law and will allow of no illegal exactions. The people are highly pleased at the change. It is not known where Gen. Cortina will be sent; it is said he will not command Matamoras."

NET RESULTS OF THE "HARD TERMS."

The Atlanta (Ga.) Constitution, a violent ex-rebel Democratic Southern paper, says in its issue of the 20th inst: "Gen. Joe Johnston has become a citizen of the United States. There are very few, perhaps not 20, whose disabilities have not been removed. Jefferson Davis and Robert Toombs will soon be the only survivors of the proscribed."

PROPOSALS.

PROPOSALS FOR ADHESIVE POSTAGE STAMPS.
POST OFFICE DEPARTMENT, Jan. 25, 1877.
Sealed proposals are invited from steel-plate engravers and paste printers, and will be received at this department until 12 o'clock M. on Wednesday, the 28th day of February, 1877, for furnishing all the postage stamps which this department may require for public and official use during a period of four years, commencing on the 1st day of May, 1877, viz:
1. Stamps for the use of the public.
3. Newspaper and periodical stamps.

QUALITY OF STAMPS.

The stamps must be furnished, subject to the approval of the department, from steel plates, engraved in the highest style of the art of steel engraving, and printed in such colors as may from time to time be selected by the department, in the best and most approved manner, upon paper of the best quality, suitable for the purpose and satisfactory to the department, thoroughly gummed with the best quality of adhesive gum, perforated in such manner that each separate stamp can be readily detached and used, the sheets to be well pressed, and packed so as to prevent them from adhering to each other; the same to be furnished with all reasonable dispatch in such quantities as may in each case be ordered by the department duly to fill requisitions from Postmasters and from the executive departments. The stamps must be printed on hand-roller presses.

DIES, ROLLS, AND PLATES.

The dies, rolls, and plates from which postage stamps are now printed, being the property of the United States, will be placed in the keeping and custody of the contractor on or before the first day of May, 1877, the same to be held subject to the order and control of the department, as hereinafter provided; and the contractor will be required, from said dies, rolls, and pl tes, and from such rolls and plates as may be necessary to be reproduced from the original dies, to have on hand, ready for issue on the day the contract term commences, a sufficient stock of stamps, of the several denominations and kinds required, to fill the current daily requisitions from the department, without hindrance or delay.

The contractor will be further required to keep in repair all dies, rolls, and plates from which stamps may be printed, and to renew the same whenever required; and should new designs be required at any time to take the place of the present series of stamps for the use of the public, or of any of them, or for denominations of stamps not now in use, the same shall be furnished an i engraved, subject to the approval of the Postmaster General, upon his request, within a reasonable time; all which shall be done and executed in the best style of steel engraving by the contractor, and at his own expense. No change will be made in the present designs of official postage stamps, or of newspaper and periodical stamps; but the contractor will be required to keep in repair, and renew when required, the dies, rolls, and plates for these stamps, the same as for the stamps for the use of the public. All dies, rolls, and plates made or used at any time in filling the contract shall immediately become the absolute property of the United States, and shall be delivered, in good working order, to the Postmaster General or his authorized agent whenever demanded.

BUILDING, PLACE OF MANUFACTURE, &c.

The stamps will be required to be manufactured in a fire-proof building, and in separate apartments, distinct from those in which any other work is done by the contractor—the whole to be subject to the approval of the department—and when finished must be placed in a fire and burglar-proof safe or vault, to be specially provided for that purpose, and constructed to the satisfaction of the department. The contractor, his employes, and agents shall conform to such regulations as the department may from time to time adopt for the security of the Government.

AGENT—OFFICE-ROOMS—INSPECTION.

A resident agent of the department will have supervision of the manufacture, storage, and issue of the stamps, who shall at all times have full and free access to the apartments, safes, and vaults where the stamps are manufactured and stored; for the purpose of inspecting the same; and the contractor shall furnish such suitable office and writing room, for the transaction of the business of his agency, without cost to the Government. The Postmaster General shall also have the right at any time to cause an inspector to be placed, by any person or agency whom he may specially designate or the purpose, of the apartments, safes, and vaults used for the manufacture and storage of stamps, and of the stamps in course of manufacture or after finished.

STOCK ON HAND.

The contractor shall at all times keep on hand a stock of the several denominations and kinds of stamps, subject to the control of the Post Office Department, in regularly watched and guarded agencies as may be specially authorized by the Postmaster General, in all stages of manufacture, sufficient to meet all orders of the department, and to provide against any and all contingencies that may be likely to occur during the existence of the contract, so that each and every order of the department may be promptly filled, and the department shall have the right to require the contractor at any time during the existence of the contract to furnish an extra quantity of stamps not exceeding a supply for three months.

STAMPS.

Stamps to be transmitted by sea routes must be securely packed in hermetically sealed tin cases, wrapped in strong manila paper; all others must either be packed in strong binder's-board boxes, bound on the edges and corners with manilla, and enveloped in two thicknesses of strong manilla paper, or inclosed in strong manila envelopes, as the quantity to be transmitted may require; and the same to be so inclosed as to enable the agent of the department to officially seal them.

DELIVERY.

The stamps may be required to be delivered by the contractor in separate packages, as above provided for, at the Post Office in the place where the same are manufactured, or at such other Post Office in the immediate vicinity of the place of manufacture as the Postmaster General may direct; or in such quantities at the Post Office Department, Washington, D. C. (each denomination and kind being kept separate,) as the Postmaster General may direct.

BLANKS.

In addition, the contractor will be required to furnish labels, and direct the same, for each package, in accordance with the daily lists furnished by the agent of the department, together with all other blanks required to be inclosed with the stamps; also, all blanks for daily, weekly, monthly, and quarterly returns relating to the number and denominations of stamps furnished.

REPORTS.

The contractor will be required to report weekly, under oath, the number, denomination, and kind of stamps manufactured, finished, and delivered (or spoiled,) the number issued during the week, and the number available for issue; all spoiled stamps to be destroyed by the agent of the department in the presence of the contractor or his representative, or otherwise disposed of, as the Postmaster General may direct.

AWARD.

The contract will be awarded on the basis of the number of the several kinds of stamps issued during the fiscal year ending June 30, 1876, as follows:
1. Number of stamps for use of the public.693,799,090
2. Number of official stamps for use of the executive department.....17,082,665
3. Number of newspaper and periodical stamps.....1,290,347
Total.....717,772,102

Bids must be made for each kind of stamps separately, the bidders stating in their proposals the price per thousand stamps, including everything required to be done or furnished, as set forth in this advertisement; and the contract will be awarded as a whole to the lowest responsible bidder in the aggregate, the amount of a bid to be ascertained by extending the above issues at the prices bid respectively, and then aggregating the amounts of the three several items. It must be understood, however, that proposals made under this advertisement shall include all the stamps needed by the department during the contract term, without reference to the above issues. Should the use of any of the above kinds of stamps be discontinued during the contract term, the contractor will not be entitled to damages on account of such discontinuance.

PROPOSALS—AGREEMENT—BOND.

Each proposal must be signed by the individual or partnership making it, and when made by a partnership the name of each partner interested must be disclosed; and it must be

THE LADY WASHINGTON RECEPTION.

GRANDEST AFFAIR OF THE SEASON—THE ACADEMY OF MUSIC AND NILSSON HALL CROWDED TO EXCESS—DESCRIPTION OF THE BOOTHS—THE PROMINENT PERSONS WHO WERE PRESENT—THE DANCING AT THE ACADEMY.

The citizens of New-York bore witness last night to the beneficence of one of its most noble charities. Everybody knows St John's Guild and its work; everybody has come across it or its agents in one place or another, for several years past, and thousands of dollars in money and clothing and provisions have been contributed to replenish its stores as they have been consumed. No time was ever so hard in this City that this institution has not been able successfully to make its appeal for the poor, and it has never been heard in vain. In Winter the freezing and starving are fed and clothed; in Summer the puling children and sickly mothers are caught up for a day now and then, and blessed in body and mind by a breath of fresh air and a meal of good things on the hospital barge of the Guild. To do all this requires a great deal of money, and the entire success of the reception last night is proof that the good work prosecuted with so much thoroughness has been appreciated and will be sustained. The Martha Washington Reception was brought to a state of ripeness and perfection through the assistance of many of the best known and respected ladies and gentlemen in this City, who entered with all their hearts into the work of making the affair successful. The tickets were illustrated with views of Martha Washington's home at Mount Vernon, a monogram of the letters M. W., and a view of Independence Hall, clustered about a good representation of the hospital barge sailing past Castle Garden on one of its excursions down the bay. That these tickets had been in good demand began to be apparent at 8 o'clock last night. The front of the Academy at that hour was illuminated with the glare of a calcium light on Fourteenth street, opposite Irving place, and in the range of this powerful light stood crowds of spectators awaiting the arrival of the guests. The weather was as delightful as could have been desired, the moon shining brilliantly overhead, while the streets were in excellent condition. The number of spectators was so large that Irving place was filled far above Fifteenth street, while there was a dense throng on both sides of Fourteenth street toward Third and Fourth avenues. The Police kept a wide passage open to the entrances, but the crowd pressed as close as possible to the lines eager to catch glimpses of the superbly-dressed ladies as they alighted from the carriages and hurried into the academy. Before 9 o'clock the approaches to the building were filled with carriages, and it seemed as if it would be midnight before the last one would deliver its load. Inside the house the arrangements in both the Academy and Nilsson Hall had all been well made, and were carried out smoothly, skilfully, and without delay, thanks to the energy and industry of Mr. Theodore Moss and Mr. Charles Chamberlain, Jr., who had general charge of the affair. The hour for opening the ball was 10 o'clock, but long before that time the boxes were more than half filled, while the parquet was well occupied, and the family circle presented an unusually blooming aspect. The decorations of the opera-house were not elaborate, the ingenuity of the decorator having been expended upon the garden in Nilsson Hall. Vases of flowers marked the boundary of the dancing platform, the proscenium box set apart for the Grand Dukes Alexis and Constantine was draped with the royal ensign of Russia, and the box occupied by Mayor Ely was decorated with the Municipal flag. American flags were tastefully arranged over the first row of boxes on either side of the stage, and fastened with glittering shields. A calcium light in the upper tier threw its glare over the stage. At 10 o'clock, the crowd outside the Academy had increased to several thousands, and the police were fully employed in restraining them. The corridors were thronged with ladies dressed in brilliant costumes, and gentlemen in uniform or evening dress, and the boxes were all occupied, the parquet filled to overflowing, the amphitheatre crowded, and guests were still coming. They continued to come until midnight, and swept in an unbroken mass in and out at the entrances to Nilsson Hall. In numbers the ball far surpassed any previous one of the season, as it also did in the attendance of prominent persons. The variety and richness of its costumes were infinite, and there was abundance of sociability. The Grand Dukes of Russia entered the Academy at 10:30 o'clock, in the midst of a quadrille, giving no opportunity for the recognition of their coming by any formality. They were furnished with very artistic copies of the order of dancing, painted in water-colors, and the card decorated with a rosette upon which the royal arms of Russia were wrought in silk. The ball will bring not less than $15,000 to the treasury of St. John's Guild.

THE MENUET DE LA COUR.

At a few minutes past 10, after the performance of several overtures by the two bands, the gas was suddenly lowered and the curtain was raised, disclosing in the foreground 16 couples in costumes of the reign of Louis XIV. On the raised platform, at the back of the stage, were grouped the ladies who were to have charge of the booths in Nilsson Hall, the costumes of each nationality being together, and Mrs. Bettner, the representative of Lady Washington, in the middle. Mrs. Bettner wore a costume of white brocaded silk, patterned exactly after the dress in Huntington's famous picture. Two broad pink silk bands ran down the corsage and skirt from the neck to the bottom. The sleeves were short and tight-fitting, with rosettes of pink ribbon at the elbows. The stomacher was of point aiguille lace, very deep and rich, and it was fastened at the throat with a large brooch of diamonds. The head-dress was very high, with a long lace cap, the hair being powdered and the top being ornamented with a bunch of pink roses and a white ostrich feather. The couples on the floor stepped forward in a stately march to the music of Bernstein's band, and at the same moment the glare of five powerful calcium lights was thrown from the upper gallery upon them and the other group. The effect was magnificent. The costumes were superb of themselves. The gentlemen wore coats of scarlet, blue, green, fawn color, and purple velvet and black moire antique, some of them elaborately embroidered in colors and others gorgeous with gold or silver lace; embroidered waistcoats, white satin knee-breeches, pink, purple, or black stockings, and shoes with silver buckles. They all had white wigs with the traditional queue. The ladies were attired in silks of various hues, cut Marie Antoinette style, with immense court trails. Some wore their hair powdered and others had white wigs. Nearly all displayed a bit of ribbon and some feathers in their coiffure. The audience looked on breathlessly as the exquisite colors blended in the intricacies of the march. Then, suddenly the couples spread out over the door, taking their places for a grand Minuet du Cour. The names of the dancers and the order in which they stood is as follows: Mr. De Garmo with Mrs. Bryant; Mr. Anderson with Miss Doughty; Mr. Dart with Miss Alice Brown; Dr. Schultz with Miss S. Philips; Mr. Van Orden with Miss L. Philips; Mr. Baker with Miss Kate Farson; Mr. Blasch with Miss M. Hastings; Mr. Fiske with Mrs. E. Hastings; Mr. Doughty with Miss Parsons; Mr. Weld with Miss Bryant; Mr. Gwelin with Miss F. Dart; Mr. Masterson with Miss Hassett; Mr. Damond with Mrs. Mordaunt, Mr. Fichtz with Miss Stillman, Mr. Vernon with Miss Williams, and Mr. Gilbert with Miss Taylor. The various steps were gone through without a single mistake, and when the couples made their final bow and resumed their march the vast audience broke forth into a storm of applause. The curtain was then rung down and the stage cleared.

SCENES AT NILSSON HALL.

When it arose again the doors of Nilsson Hall had been thrown open, and the guests were allowed to file in procession into it. Workmen had been engaged since Monday last, under the superintendence of Messrs. Young & Wilson, in the decoration of the hall, which was transformed into a lovely garden. The approaches from the Academy had been draped with tri-colored bunting. The air inside was heavy with perfume. The entrance doors were flanked by fancy groups of palms and other rare plants and by huge ornamental urns overflowing with exquisite exotics. The walls were hidden behind a massive screen of tall fir trees which sheltered a series of arbors, enclosing booths typical of the various countries of the globe. These were surrounded by plants indigenous to the several climates represented, and were profusely ornamented with flags and banners, and with gay-colored flowers. Tiny cages full of canaries were hidden among the foliage everywhere. The booths were for the sale of flowers, done up in many artistic shapes, the dealers being ladies chosen for their grace and beauty, each set wearing the national costume of the nation under whose banner they served for the nonce.

Under the brilliant glow of the gaslight the effect was very beautiful. Indeed nothing has ever been seen to equal it in this City, except perhaps the decorations of Irving Hall on the occasion of the last Americus Club ball, which is reported to have cost $30,000; yet that lacked the presence of refined and beautiful women, tasteful toilets, and that atmosphere of respectability and good breeding which were the most enjoyable features of this.

The central arbor, the largest and most elaborate of the series, was dedicated to modern America. It was octagonal in shape, its many pillars supporting an open roof, topped by a dome, on which stood a large stuffed eagle grasping in his talons a silk United States flag. Around the outside to a height of three feet ran a screen of evergreens, banked on top with potted lycipodium. Similar screens running through the centre from front to rear made a wide passage through the bower, and in the narrow spaces between the outer and inner promenades stood the ladies who had been chosen to represent the Union. They were in modern attire, and were Mrs. General Badeau, the Countess D'Wilbau, Miss Marié, Mrs. and Miss Hubbard, Miss Raymond, Miss Walsh, and Miss Lawrence. They were all attired in evening costumes of modern cut. They were presided over by Mrs. John B. Marie, who wore a sky-blue silk robe, covered with deep falls of point aiguille lace and magnificent diamonds; hair powdered and decorated with ostrich feathers. The pillars, roof, and dome, and also the many graceful festoons which ornamented the edges and corners, were composed of evergreens profusely decorated with artificial and cut flowers, which were arranged in such a manner as to make the Union colors predominate. Rustic hanging baskets and cages of singing canary birds were hung from every point of the roof, and on the capitals of the pillars stood potted lilies and dwarf plants.

Directly in front of the American bower, on a pedestal draped with rich crimson hangings, was the silvered cologne fountain that was exhibited at the Centennial. Figures of cupids, squirrels, bears, and horses, stood around it, and from numerous jets issued constant streams of Jockey Club, White Rose, New Mown Hay, and California Water. Facing the fountain, with its back to the street door, was Russia's arbor. It was next to America's in beauty. Its shape was half of an octagon, with evergreen pillars and peaked roof. On each capital stood a potted palm, between which and on the top of the roof were massed plumes of white pampas grass. A platform in the rear supported three stuffed bears rampant—one in the embrace of a tiger—and between these was placed the royal Russian arms. Russian flags were gracefully draped among the evergreen rafters of the roof and the royal Russian standard floated from the top. Skins of ferocious animals hung on each side, and there were numerous baskets of exotics pendant from the roof. Mrs. John C. Fremont was the presiding genius. She was attired in salmon-colored silk, trimmed with magnificent folds of point aiguille lace. Her assistants were Miss Hargous, Miss Anita Hargous, and Miss Mary Townsend, all in white silk, trimmed with swan's down and ermine fur.

England's bower was next to Russia's, on the right. From a heavy canopy of scarlet satin depended draperies of British flags and upright banners tastefully disposed. Tall gilt stands, topped by huge bouquets, stood on either side. Festoons of amilax set off one of the prettiest bowers in the hall. Mrs. J. Lester Wallack presided. She was attired in white silk, cut very decollete and trimmed with small white flowers. She had a bunch of blush roses on her bosom and two tiny silk Union Jacks, one on each shoulder. Her assistants were in white silk. They were: Miss Sewell, Mrs. Charles Wallack, Lady Young, Mrs. Woodman, of England, Miss Ross, Miss Chamberlain, and Miss Hall. The next bower was France's. A white canopy edged with red fringe was upheld by rustic branches. Beneath, arranged on pretty stands in front and behind, was a perfect mass of gorgeous potted flowers in full bloom. There were acacias, azalias, begonias, ferns, calla lilies, camellias, variegated hollies, hyacinths, lilies of the valley, violets, cineraria, cytisus, chorozemas, gledias Tankervillas, anthuriums, echeverrias, carnation pinks, and numerous other rare varities. The flower counter was a square dark rock covered with trailing vines. On each end was a pretty hanging basket. Mrs. George W. McLean presided. She was attired in white brocaded silk trimmed with large daisies, ornaments of pearls and solitaire diamond earrings. Her assistants were Miss Ida Dewitt, Miss Ella Dewitt, Mrs. Budd, and Mrs. Fellows. They all wore white silk and pearls. Spain's was next in order. A canopy of red and yellow silk—the national colors—was suspended by yellow silken cords from the branches of four surrounding trees. In the rear was a rustic trellis covered with imitation grape-vines. The environing foliage was gay with cut flowers. Mrs. M. T. Huggins presided. She wore orange-colored silk trimmed with Brussels lace and scarlet flowers. She was assisted by Mrs. J. Lennox Huggins, Miss Huggins, Miss Van Wyck, and Miss Minnie Wier. Their costumes were similar in style to hers.

Next came Germany's, one of the largest and finest in the room. It had the usual evergreen pillars, but in the rear and in the form of a circle. The roof was arched, and the evergreen rafters terminated in front in a large, open-work ball of evergreens and flowers, beneath which hung heavy black, red, and white silk streamers, gathered by garlands of blush rosebuds, and encircled with amilax and red roses. An insertion of wide scarlet satin was run through the pillars just below the roof. Numerous hanging baskets added to the effect. Among the foliage grouped about this arbor were growing camellias, cailas, auracarias, variegated holly, and pinks. A round table, draped in black and decorated with evergreens, stood in the centre, and served as a counter for the use of the fair dispensers of flowers. Mrs. Edward Salomon, wife of the ex-Governor of Wisconsin, presided. She wore a rich purple silk, with a point aiguille lace stomacher, and powdered hair decorated with roses and an ostrich feather. Her assistants were Miss Fuetke, Miss Kuhnhoff, Mrs. H. Roaner, Miss Vawenbuck, Miss Isidor, Miss F. Richard, and Miss Edith Isidor. They were attired in peasant costumes, each representing a different province of Germany, many of them never having been seen in this country before. The next was Italy's. The arbor was a roofed trellis supporting grape-vines and banked with palms and other tropical plants. White grapes hung down in clusters. Large statutes finished off the sides. Mrs. Dr. R. F. Wier, a great grand-niece of Gen. Washington, presided. She was attired in white silk trimmed with chantilly lace; chemisette of puffed tulle. Her assistants were Miss Barbour, Miss Cutts, Miss Oakley, and Mrs. H. N. Alden, who wore the Italian national costume. Greece's was next. An imitation stone wall with capitals ran along two sides. Above was a green-painted lattice bung as a canopy and covered with acacia vines. Behind the wall and in front of it on either side were statues. The encircling foliage included six or eight varieties of dracænas, marantas, curculago, tree ferns, and yuccas. There were also many vases filled with exotics dispersed about the arbor, and the top of the wall was almost covered with them. A thick festoon of roses was arranged along the front. Mrs. Robert Dale Owen presided. She was attired in black silk, with a Brussels lace veil and shawl. Her assistants were Miss Hart, Miss Mattie Brown, Miss J. Wilson, and Miss C. L. Jones. They wore blue and red Greek costumes edged with gold and silver rimmings. 'Rebecca at the Well" was last on the right of the room, near the Academy door. A huge vase, painted to imitate a stone well, and a flower and vine-wreathed lattice-work stand were embowered in a fancy group of palms, aracanas, tree ferns, and curculago. The well was filled with lemonade, and on the stand were glasses from which fine beautiful young ladies, in gorgeous Oriental costumes, dispensed refreshing draughts at war prices to the susceptible throng. Mrs. Edward Lauterbach presided. She was assisted by Miss Herter, Miss Laby, and Miss Buckman.

On the left, next to Russia, was Iceland's bower, arranged to represent a rounded canopy of snow with pendant icicles, the background being composed of cleverly-imitated ice on canvass. Rocks piled loosely in front and the surrounding trees were white with cotton and mica to represent snow. The effect was very pretty. Mrs. F. J. Dupignac presided. She wore a salmon colored silk trimmed with Brussels lace, and on her head was a white silk cap covered with gauze. Her assistants were Miss Isidor, Miss Bryan, Miss Denicke, and Miss Groyer. They were attired in gay colored striped dresses trimmed with silver lace, and all had jaunty caps on their heads. Next to Iceland, in the corner, was the Mount Vernon bower, an elegantly draped and carpeted inclosure, in which Mrs. Bettner, Dr. Carnochan's sister, received in Revolutionary costume already described. The canopy was of Solferino colored satin, with a silk American flag on top. Rustic stands served as flower counters. Mrs. Bettner's assistants were Miss Harwick, Miss Dufais, Miss Vanderpool, Mrs. May White, Miss Bettner, Mrs. Morris, and Mrs. Ball. All wore white Continental costumes. A long, narrow space, completely surrounded by high forest trees, except a small entrance and exit, was the site of the gypsy camp, where fortunes to suit the pockets of the public were told by 15 lovely Zingara, under the queenship of Miss Laura S. C. Davton. In one corner was a camp-fire, with suspended pots and all the other accessories; in another corner was a gorgeous tent, and strewn about were real logs, upon which the beautiful fortune-tellers sat. Mr. Samson was king of the troupe, which consisted of Miss C. Kimball, Mrs. R. B. Kimball, Miss E. Kimball, Miss Patterson, Miss N. Patterson, Master G. Leggatt, Miss Merritt, Miss Samson, Miss Riker, Miss Root, Miss Shirley, Miss Bloodgood, and Miss M. Bloodgood. All wore appropriate costumes. Mexico came next. In the middle of a mass of cactus, Spanish bayonet, agaves, yuccas, aloes, euphorbias, rubber trees, palms, and other tropical plants was stationed a straw-thatched cabin with sides and back of matting. A counter, covered also with matting, stood in front. Mrs George Browne, Jr., presided. She wore a solferino satin dress trimmed with point applique lace, over which was thrown a black lace shawl. Her assistants were Mrs. West, Miss West, and Miss Nichols, similarly attired, and all having Mexican caps on their heads. Finally, there was the bower of Brazil, a stone-fronted booth, with tile roof and back of matting, embowered in cactuses, rubber trees, acacias, dracænas, amarantha, Sago palms, and other ultra-tropical trees. The illusion was rendered more complete by the presence of a large white parrot in a wicker cage, which supplemented the beauty of the attendants in attracting an unceasing throng. Miss Fanny Barrow presided. She was attired in black velvet, with red sash and sash. She was assisted by Miss Bunce, Miss Claire Bunce, and Miss Bellew, who wore similar costumes.

THE DANCING AT THE ACADEMY.

The procession filed through the hall and out again, nearly every person stopping on the way to purchase a bouquet. Then dancing commenced on a floor which was thronged to the point of discomfort. The City's box soon filled up, the guests besides Mayor Ely being Controller and Mrs. Kelly, President Lewis, of the Board of Aldermen, and wife, and Commissioner and Mrs. Hayward. During the first lanciers the Grand Dukes Alexis and Constantine, attended by Consul Bodisco and Baron Schilling, entered their box. They were attired in plain evening costume, and their arrival was so quiet that there was no demonstration. In a few minutes, however, the Russian national anthem struck up, and the imperial party arose and bowed their thanks. Then President Lewis went over and asked if their Highnesses would be pleased to meet the Mayor. They acquiesced, and the Municipal party went over and payed their respects. Then, under escort of Mr. Dupignac and the Mayor, the Grand Dukes and their suite went into Nilsson Hall, followed by an immense throng. At the Russian bower a special order of dance, painted in water-colors and having pendant from it a bullion-fringed cossite with the Russian coat of arms embroidered on it was presented to Alexis. Gen. Pryor subsequently stepped up and introduced Mrs. Washington, of Virginia, a grand niece of the General, who gave Alexis a pinch of snuff out of a snuff-box presented by Alexander II. to Judge Bushrod, of Virginia. After about 15 minutes the imperial party took their leave as quietly as they entered. The next guest of note to arrive was ex-President Lerdo, of Mexico, who came under escort of Mr. Alexandre. He was in full uniform, and was made the recipient of every attention. The crush about 1 o'clock, when the ball was at its height, was awful. The costumes of the ladies were very rich and beautiful, almost without exception. The festivities did not close until an early hour this morning.

PROMINENT PERSONS PRESENT.

In writing of those present it is only necessary to state that what is known as "all New-York" were in attendance. Among the most prominent were the following:

The Grand Dukes Alexis and Constantine, Capt. Le Baron Schilling, the Russian Minister, and the Grand Duke's physician; Sir Charles Young, Mayor Ely, Controller John Kelly, and Mrs. Kelly, Tax Commissioner Haywood, Aldermen S. A. Lewis, and Mrs. Lewis, ex-Judge Joseph Koch, and Mrs. Koch, Algernon S. Sullivan, and Mrs. Sullivan, ex-Alderman Vance, and Mrs. Vance, Col. Frederick A. Conkling, Mrs. John Bigelow, Mr. and Mrs. C. Godfrey Gunther and Miss Gunther, Mr. and Mrs. Hinckley, Gen. Roger A. Pryor and party, including a grand-niece of Gen. Washington and great-grand-niece of Martha Washington, Judge Donohue and family, Howard Adams, John Abbott, Gen. and Miss McQuade, Mrs. Van Brunt, and Miss Louise Servoss, Erastus Brooks, R. Davey, Major E. Ellingwood, Herman Kobbe, and Mrs. Bettner, and the following members of the Old Guard: J. Aspell, Capt. J. E. Bazley, Charles G. Child, Treasurer; Sergt. Ralph Booth, Sergt. Rogers, and Commissioners Brennan and Cox and ladies, Mr. and Mrs. Kettleman, Judge Duffy, Police Commissioners Erhardt and Wheeler.

SOME OF THE PRESSES.

Mrs Theodore Moss, in the proscenium box adjoining that of Duke Alexis, attracted considerable attention. She was attired in a cream-colored silk court train of black velvet, richly trimmed with point lace. Her diamonds, which were of untold value, were admired by all. Miss Addie Moss wore a pink and white premantine, trimmed with white lace. Miss Emily Moss looked pretty in a snow-white illusion, trimmed with natural flowers.

ATHLETICS AT CENTRAL PARK GARDEN.

A successful athletic entertainment was given yesterday at Central Park Garden, Seventh avenue and Fifty-ninth street. There were two performances during the day, one in the afternoon and one in the evening. In the afternoon the best display was a Graeco-Roman wrestling match between William J. Austin, 136 pounds, the champion light weight of New-York, and Jacques De Lion, 174 pounds, of Paris. The conditions of the match were the best three out of five falls, with no restrictions as to grips. In the first bout, which was the best contested, Austin won the fall after 20 minutes of hard work; he also won the second and third falls in 7 and 17 minutes, respectively.

In the evening the audience was not so large as in the afternoon, but was much more select, many of the best known amateur athletes of the City being present. The programme was made up of club-swinging by Ravaux; sparring between John Saunders and John Reilly, Robert Gunion and "Punch" Morris; fencing with broadswords, and broadsword against bayonet by Freidericks and Deturck. The entertainment closed with a set-to with the gloves between William Miller and John Dwyer. From the first Miller did the best work, and it was soon a foregone conclusion that he would get the best of the match. He continued to have the advantage throughout, and at the close of the five rounds fought, it was almost unanimously decided that he was the victor.

THE ROBBERY OF MISS KELSEY.

Henry Walters and his wife Lola, who were remanded on Wednesday by Justice Otterbourg to await examination on a charge of burglary in entering the apartments of Miss Lizzie Kelsey, at No. 126 West 29th street, and stealing therefrom wearing apparel valued at $500, belonging to that lady, were brought before the magistrate yesterday. Theodore Fowler, who was arrested on Wednesday evening, was arraigned with them. In the absence of Miss Kelsey, who is at present out of the City, her brother, John W. Kelsey, made the complaint. He testified that on Monday evening Mrs. Walters invited him to accompany her for a walk, and they were out together several hours; when about to return home Mrs. Walters requested him to allow her to return half an hour before him, which request he complied with; when he got home he found that the apartments of his sister had been entered by means of false keys and robbed of several silk dresses and other articles of wearing apparel, valued in all at $500; when he made the discovery he raised an alarm, when Mrs. Walters appeared from a closet on that floor, and in this closet were subsequently found a fur muff and cape belonging to Miss Kelsey; the next day he found that the Walters were packing up their household goods, preparatory to leaving the City, and he therefore caused their arrest. From information obtained from Mrs. Walters, Detective Schmidtberger, of the Twenty-ninth Precinct, arrested Theodore Fowler, and in the apartment of the latter, in First street, near the Bowery, found the greater portion of the property stolen from Miss Kelsey. The prisoners were held for examination and committed to prison in default of bail.

FUNERAL OF DANIEL W. WYMAN.

IMPOSING MASONIC SERVICES IN JERSEY CITY—HONORS TO A DEAD MASON.

The funeral of Daniel W. Wyman, Superintendent of the New-York Elevated Railway, and Thirty-third Degree Illustrious Commander in Chief of the New-Jersey Sovereign Consistory, who died on Sunday, aged 53 years, of enlargement of the heart, took place yesterday afternoon from his late residence, No. 269 Second street, Jersey City. The casket inclosing the remains was covered with fine black cloth, and handsomely trimmed with silver mountings. At its head stood a massive floral broken shaft, placed there by employes of the Elevated Railway. At the foot of the casket was a wreath, having the words in the centre, in violets, "Our Departed Trustee." A gift from the Trustees of the Hedding M. E. Church, in Montgomery street, Jersey City, and at the foot of the casket was a Masonic floral tribute, having in the centre of a triangle "Our trust is in God." At the appointed hour there formed in front of the residence the New-Jersey Sovereign Consistory, under the command of Dr. J. Conrad, Lieutenant General of the State of New-Jersey; Hugh De Payen Commandery No. 1, Knight Templars, of Jersey City, headed by Eminent Commander M. M. Drohan; Jersey City Lodge No. 74 F. and A. M., Albert Jardine, Master, and delegations from Jersey City Consistory, Thirty-third Degree, Scottish Rite, and Consistory Thirty-third Degree of New-York. Among the New-York Masons present in line were Hon. Charles T. McClenachan, ex-Judge Samuel Jones, and Messrs. Elwood E. Thorne and Wilson Small. The pall-bearers, Messrs. W. H. Waite, James Huskins, John Duncan, William Morgan, Washington Smith, and John C. Freeman, of Jersey City Lodge, who carried the casket from the house and deposited it in the hearse, which was escorted by the Masonic bodies, F. W. Cane acting as Grand Marshal, to the Hedding Church, where the religious and Masonic ceremonies were to be performed. The edifice was filled to its utmost capacity, and large numbers were unable to gain admission. The religious exercises were conducted by Rev. Dr. James M. Freeman, former Pastor of Mr. Wyman; Rev. Dr. J. L. G. McKeown, Pastor of Hedding Church, and Rev. Mr. R. Van Horn. As the procession entered the church the organist performed a dirge, and Dr. McKeown recited an appropriate passage of Scripture, beginning "I know that my Redeemer liveth." At the sound of the gavel all the Masons became seated. After prayer by Dr. Freeman, Rev. Mr. Van Horn read the 90th Psalm, "Lord Thou hast been our dwelling place in all generations," which was followed by a solo, "Jesus, lover of my soul." After a brief tribute to the deceased by Dr. McKeown, who spoke of the kindly attributes for which he was noted, Dr. Freeman preached a funeral discourse, taking for his subject, from Ecclesiastes, "Man goeth to his long home and the mourners go about the streets;" and from Revelation, "God shall wipe away all tears from their eyes, and there shall be no more death nor crying; neither shall there be any more pain, for the former things have passed away," elucidating his texts by speaking of the frailty of human life, and the blissful reward of all who lived as their departed friend had.

The Masonic ceremonies were under the supervision of Josiah Drummond, of Maine, Most Eminent General Commander of the Thirty-third Degree of the United States, and Marshal B. Smith, Grand Master of the Grand Lodge of New-Jersey, the latter of whom read the burial ritual and deposited the lamb-skin apron (emblem of innocence) and the evergreen (emblem of immortality) upon the casket. After a Masonic prayer, the Masons passed in single file to take a last look at their departed brother and sprinkle his casket with evergreens. The procession re-formed in the street, and when the body had been again placed in the hearse the line of march was taken to Jersey City Cemetery, at Bergen Hill, where the remains were placed in the receiving vault, and the "Grand Honors" were paid under the direction of Grand Master Jardine, the "Honors" consisting of the uttering of the words—with appropriate signs—"We cherish his memory here;" "We commit his body to the dust," and "We commend his soul to God who gave it."

THE ELECTRO-MEDICAL COLLEGE.

COMMENCEMENT EXERCISES AT CHICKERING HALL—AN ADDRESS ON ELECTRICAL SCIENCE IN THERAPEUTICS—THE SUCCESS OF THE COLLEGE.

The commencement exercises of the Electro-Medical College, which was incorporated in 1875, were held yesterday at Chickering Hall in presence of a large number of persons, the occasion being the sixty-fifth anniversary of the birth of the founder of the institution, Dr. Albert J. Steele, who presided. Dr. Steele delivered an opening address on "Electrical Science in Therapeutics." He said that the time had now come for the inauguration of the Electro-Medical College, the many obstacles that had stood in its way having been removed. Many years had been spent in the study of electricity and its attributes and its power in curing disease of the human system. Many of its ways were past finding out, but notwithstanding this fact, God had permitted man to develop much of its power. He would only speak of one of the attributes of electricity—its power upon the human frame, which was of a most beneficial nature. Much diversity of opinion existed in regard to helping nature in her duties, and it would be found that disagreement was the order of the day in the schools of practice when it was made the subject of investigation. Many years ago he was found to be a nervous paralytic. Electricity came to the rescue, and he was emancipated from his former miserable condition, and this fastened the conviction upon his mind that that subtle power electricity might be made the greatest remedial agent known to the world. He had prosecuted studies in that direction with great success, and was prepared to say that electricity was more soothing to the human frame in its nature than any other known remedy, and all that was needed in addition to secure good health and prolong life was good nutritious food. Prof. Steele's remarks were brief, and when he had concluded he introduced ex-Gov. Frank Fuller, of Utah, who delivered an address on "The True Philosophy of Digestion." One of the best known writers on the subject of digestion, the speaker stated, declared that the process was a sort of rinsing of the substances that entered the human system. The true philosophy of digestion, however, was opposed to a part of this, and still holds to a part. It controverted the "rinsing theory," and showed that there was no substance which should be lost except such as was effete. The speaker went on to show that milk was the only food which man could call his own, for all the other substances provided by nature were regenerative, and their nutritive qualities were intended to assist in the process of regeneration. For the sake of example, he called attention to a grain of wheat, and pointed out the manner of its growth from the time of the planting of the seed until it appeared above the earth. He dwelt at length on the subject of feeding infants, and instructed his hearers as to the amount of nutritious food that was contained in healthy milk. A child's life he stated was greatly endangered after the weaning process because of a failure to supply it with as much food as it had received in the milk.

Mr. Charles Strauss, the college counselor, next delivered an address relative to the workings of the Electro-Medical College. After referring to its incorporation and the selection of a competent corps of professors and the election of Prof. Steele as Dean, he spoke of the prejudices of the orthodox members of the profession toward the institution, which by dint of perseverance had been overcome. He said that after demonstrating to the medical faculty and others that the officers of the institution claimed no spiritual manifestations or mesmerism, but based their work upon positive fact and common sense principles of diet, it was now inaugurated under the most favorable auspices. Mr. Strauss then referred to the competition in the medical profession, and asserted that the victory belonged to the ablest, whether he be orthodox or not. Speaking of the degree conferred by the college, he said it simply issued a certificate setting forth that the student had become competent in the sciences of electrical therapeutics, physiology, anatomy, and hygiene.

This concluded the proceedings, and the audience then dispersed.

JOE COBURN TIRED OF THE TOMBS.

Judge Curtis, counsel for Joe Coburn, applied to Judge Brady yesterday for a writ of habeas corpus, on the grounds that his client was innocent of the crimes charged against him, and that his imprisonment pending his trial was so prejudicial to his health that there could be no reasonable hope of his being in a fit condition for his trial on Monday. The affidavit stating these facts was made before Mr. William H. Ruckerts, and, armed with this document, Mr. Curtis at once proceeded to the residence of Judge Brady. The Judge took the papers in the case, and stated that he would hear the arguments of counsel at the opening of his court this morning. In case the application is denied, it is understood that a strong effort will be made to obtain the freedom of the prisoner under bail.

A PHILADELPHIA CALICO PARTY.

PHILADELPHIA, Feb. 22.—A calico party was given to-night at the Academy of Music under the auspices of the Women's Centennial Committee, in aid of the poor of this city. The affair was patronized by the best society of the city, and was in every way a success. The principal feature of the occasion was the performance of the minuet in costume by ladies and gentlemen dressed in the garb worn at the Federal court a century ago.

WASHINGTON.

SUCCESSION TO THE PRESIDENCY.

CONSIDERABLE SPECULATION INDULGED IN —VARIOUS PROPOSITIONS ADVANCED— NO PROVISION WHATEVER MADE BY THE STATUTES FOR FILLING A VACANCY— WHAT MAY OCCUR IN CASE NO ONE IS DECLARED ELECTED—HOW PRESIDENT GRANT MAY CHECKMATE DEMOCRATIC REVOLUTIONISTS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—There is much talk about the succession to the Presidential office in case the Democrats should succeed in preventing, by filibustering, a declaration of the Electoral vote. It has been generally supposed that the course of the Republicans would be to stand by a continuation of the count by Mr. Ferry, the President of the Senate, and the declaration of the result on the last day of the session, in case no election had been declared under the operation of the Electoral bill before that time. It is argued in behalf of this course that the Commission has decided all the disputed questions, and that everybody in the country knows what the legal and equitable result would be if there were no revolution attempted on the part of the Democracy to defeat the formal announcement, which is all that would be left at the end of the session to make the operation of the law complete. The indignation of those Republicans who were opposed to Mr. Ferry counting the vote in the first place has been aroused to that extent that most of them are now willing to fully sustain him in such a contingency. It is admitted that this would have less foundation in law than the counting of the vote by him would have had if no legislation on the subject had taken place this session, but the excuse is found in the fact that the revolutionary proceeding of the House makes some extraordinary action necessary, and it is not improbable, if there were no other alternative, that this course would be pursued. There has been no definite plan agreed upon, and the views of Mr. Ferry on the subject are unknown. Various other propositions have been advanced, as for example, that Senator Sherman should resign from the Senate, allow Mr. Hayes to be elected by the Ohio Legislature to fill his place, and that the Senate choose Mr. Hayes President pro tem., and make him the President of the United States in case there were no election. This would be in direct violation of law in one respect, for the statutes make no provision whatever for filling a vacancy in the Presidency occurring by a failure to elect. Section 146 of the Revised Statutes is as follows:

> In case of removal, death, resignation, or inability of both the President and Vice President of the United States, the President of the Senate, or if there is none, then the Speaker of the House of Representatives for the time being, shall act as President until the disability is removed or a President elected.

It is provided in the sections following that a special election shall be held, which in this case would occur on the first Wednesday in next December. The only evidence required of a resignation of the officers is the written instrument declaring the purpose signed by the President. Now, under this statute, the President of the Senate would not become President of the United States by reason of a failure to elect, and there would be no person having the authority after March 4 to hold the Presidential office, if the Electoral count should be left unfinished. President Grant, being in possession, it may fairly be supposed that he would continue to occupy the office until a new election could be had, in order that the nation might not be left without an official head. His only right to continue as President would be the right of possession, and that would be sufficient, doubtless, to maintain him in the office, as no other person would have the right to claim it from him. This is one of the conditions in which the country may possibly be plunged by Democratic obstinacy in the House, and they would not like to have President Grant hold the office under such circumstances. There is a way out under the statute to save the country from all difficulty in respect to the succession. In case President Grant should resign when it become evident that no declaration of Mr. Hayes' election could be made, even though it were within an hour of the end of the session, the President pro tem. of the Senate would immediately become President of the United States, and, under the law, would hold over until the new election provided for should be held. The President has it completely in his power, therefore, to checkmate, by his own action, any Democratic revolution, and it can hardly be doubted that he would take the necessary action. This last mentioned proceeding would be absolutely within the statute law, and would give the Republicans a vast advantage in the new election. The unlawful and revolutionary proceeding of the Democratic Party would destroy them before the people. Mr. Ferry, very probably, would become the President, and while it is very possible that if the office of President of the Senate were vacant some other person would be chosen to fill it, it is not believed that any effort will be made to displace him, and there is no reason to doubt he would be a just and strong executive officer during his incumbency.

A MOUNTAIN OUT OF A MOLE HILL.

CONSIDERABLE EXCITEMENT CREATED BY AN OVER-ZEALOUS YOUNG MAN—HOW CERTAIN DEMOCRATS BECAME INTERESTED IN AN OHIO NEWSPAPER—THE MATTER FULLY EXPLAINED TO THE SATISFACTION OF EVERYBODY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—There was a good deal of excitement caused among the Southern Democrats to-day by the circulation of numerous copies of the Ohio State Journal of Feb. 22 containing a strong article in favor of the recognition of the Packard Government, which was claimed to have been written by Gen. Comley and inspired by Gov. Hayes. The article in that view was rather ominous, and had a decided effect upon the Southern men who have been known as being hostile to the filibustering policy to defeat the counting of the Electoral vote. This led to the holding of a conference to-night of many Southern members, and a desire was expressed to know whether the article was inspired by Gov. Hayes, as alleged. The following dispatches show what was the truth about the article. The paper containing it had been sent here in large quantities and by the revolutionists, and they attempted by an adroit use of it to force the agreement to filibuster upon the party:

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23, 1877.

To J. M. Comley, Columbus, Ohio:

The Ohio State Journal of yesterday was industriously circulated this morning among the Democratic members of the House, and soon after a motion was made to take a recess until to-morrow, supported by an almost solid Democratic vote, and carried. A caucus was called for immediately. The article on Louisiana is supposed by them to have been inspired by Gov. Hayes and to reflect his policy.

STANLEY MATHEWS,
CHARLES FOSTER.
WM. DENNISON.

To Hons. Stanley Mathews, Charles Foster, and William Dennison, Washington:

Gen. Comley has been very sick for a week past. He is not permitted to see or talk to any one, and your dispatch cannot be shown to him. He is not allowed even to read anything that appears in the State Journal. The article in the Journal of Thursday on Louisiana affairs was not written by him. Gov. Hayes neither inspired nor saw it, and did not hear of it until his attention was called to it by your dispatch from Washington.

A. W. FRANCISCO,
Associate Proprietor State Journal.

A further dispatch was received from Gen. C. H. Grosvenor, Speaker of the House of Representatives, of Ohio, stating that the article in question was originally a communication lying in the Journal office, and was used by a young man in charge in the absence and severe illness of Gen. Comley.

DEMOCRATIC OBSTRUCTIONISTS.

CAUCUS OF THE DEMOCRATS OF THE HOUSE—A RESOLUTION TO TAKE A RECESS TILL MONDAY AGREED ON— THE REVOLUTIONISTS DRAGOONING THE RESPECTABLE MEMBERS OF THE PARTY —THE OBJECT TO DELAY THE COUNT.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—The House adjourned at 4 o'clock this afternoon, in order to give the Democrats another opportunity to meet in caucus. Adjournment was carried by yeas 130, nays 109, 15 Democrats voting with the Republicans against the motion. It was supposed, but wrongly, in the House, that the report of the Commission was about to be received. The caucus was immediately assembled, and business was commenced at once by McMahon, of Ohio, who offered a resolution providing that when the two houses shall separate to-morrow to consider the decision of the Commission in the case of Oregon, a recess shall be immediately taken until 10 o'clock Monday. Mr. Kehr, of Missouri, and Neal, of Ohio, respectively offered substitutes providing that the business before the Joint Convention shall proceed to-morrow without delay. In the discussion which followed Messrs. Vance, Hurd, Southard, Knott, Lane, and Sparks advocated adjournment until Monday, and Messrs. Hill, of Georgia; Brown, of Kentucky; Wilshire, of Arkansas; House, of Tennessee, and Harrison, of Illinois, advocated proceeding with the count to-morrow. Randall spoke mildly in favor of moderation, in view of the great importance of the issues involved. Field also spoke, but devoted himself more to the explanation of two new bills which he has prepared, than to the pending resolution. One of these bills provides for a new election for President and Vice President, in May next, in case no President shall be declared to have been elected at the late election. The other bill provides that persons claiming to have been elected President may commence proceedings under quo warranto before the Supreme Court. The vote on the substitute offered to McMahon's resolution was defeated by yeas 44, nays 66, and the original resolution was then adopted without a division.

The vote for adjournment until Monday shows that those favoring delay in completing the Electoral count have received a considerable accession to their ranks since the last meeting of the caucus, but it is doubtful if these can be held together to ultimately defeat a final proclamation of the result of the Electoral count. A majority of those who voted against delay are outspoken in their determination to resist any action having for its purpose the defeat of the completion of the Electoral count, and while they may to-morrow go with their party for adjournment until Monday, they are determined to break with their associates, rather than follow them in any effort calculated to defeat the purposes of the Electoral act. No reasons were assigned for the delay until Monday, but it is apparent that the object is to prevent the completion of the Electoral count. The action of the caucus will bear no other interpretation, and those who desire to see the Electoral law carried out in good faith may as well recognize this fact now as next week. It is not believed the effort will succeed. Those who oppose delay are reluctant to take a step which will place them in antagonism to their party associates, but it is plain from the temper manifested that they are determined to do this rather than submit to the plans of the destructionists. If Hill, of Georgia, and Brown, of Kentucky, will make on the floor of the House the same earnest opposition to delay which they have uniformly made in caucus, they will be instrumental in breaking up the plotting of Randall and his followers.

Dispatch to the Associated Press.

It is reported that just before the adjournment of the caucus a resolution was adopted by a vote of 57 to 32 providing for another recess of the House from Monday until Tuesday. Prior to the introduction of this resolution a number of the members of the caucus had left the hall, saying they would not abide by the action which provided for a recess from to-morrow until Tuesday.

MR. CONKLING AND THE DEMOCRATS

THE CONSULTATION WITH VOORHEES AND OTHER DEMOCRATIC LEADERS SAID TO HAVE BEEN ON BUSINESS ONLY.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—The recent reports regarding Senator Conkling's interview with certain prominent members of the Democratic Party, which have been extensively published, have attracted a great deal of attention here to-day, and the Senator's friends are working hard to make excuse for him. They admit that he had consultations with Dan Voorhees and others of the same class, but say that these conferences related simply to business matters of a legal character, and had absolutely no connection with politics.

THE APPROPRIATION BILLS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—The House continued the consideration of the Sundry Civil bill to-day, but took a recess until to-morrow without action. The Senate, which is further advanced with appropriation bills than it has been at the same period in the last session of any recent Congress, with commendable promptitude, passed the Naval Appropriation bill, thus disposing of the only business of this character now before it. The amount appropriated by the bill has been increased since it came from the House $4,321,500, and the clause providing for the establishment of a Naval Commission has been stricken out. The following are the principle clauses amended: The appropriation for pay of officers and men is increased $1,000,000; the appropriation for the Bureau of Equipment and Recruiting increased $270,000; the appropriation for the Bureau of Construction and Repairs increased $1,800,000, and the appropriation for the Bureau of Steam Engineering increased $1,200,000. Among other minor additions to the bill is one appropriating $1,500 to defray the expenses of observing the transit of Mercury on May 6, 1878. In the Legislative bill, passed by the Senate a few days ago, no less than 544 changes were made. There were 84 alterations in the Deficiency bill. Well-informed persons now believe that these discrepancies between the bills as passed by the two houses will render a short extra session unavoidable.

CASHIER JORDAN MADE HAPPY.

A BANK OFFICIAL AT THE BAR OF THE SENATE—HIS AMUSING EFFORTS TO FREE HIMSELF FROM CONTEMPT—GRAVE SENATORS ENTERTAINED BY A NEW-YORKER —HE PROMISES TO ANSWER ALL QUESTIONS PUT TO HIM.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—Quite a scene occurred in the Senate this afternoon when Mr. Conrad N. Jordan, Cashier of the Third National Bank of New-York, was called before the bar for contempt in refusing to produce the bank account of Messrs. Tilden, Hewitt, and Pelton, as called for by the Committee on Privileges and Elections. When asked why he had failed to comply with the order of the committee he produced a written answer which was read by the Clerk. In this paper the witness disowned all intention of being in contempt of the Senate. He said that he had failed to produce the books and papers called for because they were in the custody of the officers of the bank, and he had no control over them. He had refused to answer the questions asked him because he desired before doing so to consult with the counsel of the bank. In concluding, he begged that further time might be allowed him for this purpose.

The answer gave rise to a short but very lively debate, conducted by Senators Blaine, Conkling, Mitchell, Kernan, and others. Mr. Jordan was evidently very anxious to join in the discussion, and it was with the greatest difficulty that he could be prevented from doing so. Mr. Mitchell desired to have the witness adjuged in contempt, and treated accordingly. Mr. Blaine opposed this summary proceeding, and in doing so made one of his characteristic speeches. He said, among other things of the same kind, that he had a great deal of contempt for much that had been done by both sides in the recent investigations, but he knew that politicians did not differ materially from other men, and when they were struck they were very apt to strike back. The Democrats never liked that sort of policy, and evidently they had no taste for it in the present instance. Reference being made to the report that the members of the committee had agreed among themselves to stop the investigation into the financial operations of party managers, Mr. Kernan took the floor and disavowed all knowledge of such an agreement. The same disavowal was made by other members of the committee, and then a resolution was passed calling upon Jordan to state whether he was now willing to answer such questions as might be propounded.

In reply to this, the witness, a little gray-headed man, jumped to his feet with an assurance and readiness that would have done credit even to David Dudley Field himself, and created a marked sensation and considerable merriment by making a speech of some length. He said in substance that he had been badly treated by the committee; that he had been kept dancing attendance on them to no purpose, and that he desired to enter his protest against what he seemed to consider a curtailment of his rights as an American citizen. He concluded by stating that he was now ready to answer any questions which might be put to him, and upon this he was discharged. Before leaving the chamber he shook Senator Blaine by the hand with warm demonstrations of satisfaction, and then retired bowing and smiling to the Senators as he went. The scene was a very amusing one, and Mr. Jordan seemed to enjoy it quite as much as did the spectators.

FRIENDLY RELATIONS WITH FRANCE

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—M. Outrey, the newly accredited Minister of France to the United States, accompanied by the Secretary of State, presented his credentials to the President to-day, on which occasion he made the following remarks:

MR. PRESIDENT: I have the honor to present to you the letter of recall which terminates the diplomatic mission of Mr. Bartholdi in the United States. I also have the honor to place in your hands the letter whereby the President of the French Republic accredits me near your Excellency in the capacity of Envoy Extraordinary and Minister Plenipotentiary. All my efforts, Mr. President, shall be devoted to maintaining the cordial relations of France with the United States, and I can assure you that I shall fulfill the sincere wishes of my Government if I can aid in drawing still closer the bonds which have never ceased to unite the two countries. Permit me to solicit your personal good will and that of the Government of the United States to facilitate a mission which I am happy to be called to fulfill in a country to which I am attached by many pleasing recollections and by feelings of warm sympathy.

The President replied as follows:

M. OUTREY: I receive with entire satisfaction the letter by which the President of the French Republic accredits you as the diplomatic representative of that Government. The satisfaction arises in part from your having formerly been a sojourner with us in a diplomatic capacity upon which occasion you left an impression which could not fail to make you welcome on a return to this country. I am confident that you will discharge your official duty in a way which will be generally acceptable, and it is not to be doubted that in this you will always have the hearty co-operation of the President of the United States.

NOTES FROM THE CAPITAL.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—The borers of the shaft on the south side of the Washington Monument reached, a few days since, an immense guiess rock, which is believed to extend under the base of the monument, and to form a rock foundation at a distance of 33 feet below the surface.

The Senate Sub-committee on Louisiana in secret session to-day continued their examination of the Returning Board records, which were brought here recently by the Louisiana Secretary of State. The investigation is now being carried on mainly with a view to the determination of contests expected to arise hereafter concerning the election of Senators from that State.

The Senate Committee on Privileges and Elections to-day discharged all the witnesses brought here to testify in regard to the Alabama election, and will to-morrow discharge the remaining witnesses from Mississippi.

Democrats who were present at the conference in Speaker Randall's room last evening, admit that they agreed to offer an amendment to the Army bill to fix the maximum of the Army at 17,000 men, and to provide that none of the troops shall be used to uphold either of the dual governments in Louisiana or South Carolina, but they deny that they have any filibustering intentions to defeat the counting of the Electoral vote.

THE EASTERN CAMPAIGN.

TORPEDOES BEING PLACED IN POSITION— MORE TURKISH OUTRAGES—THE FORTIFICATIONS AT WIDDIN—AUSTRIA'S NOTIFICATION TO RUSSIA—A LARGE FORCE OF TURKISH TROOPS ON THE BORDER —THE PEACE WITH SERVIA.

LONDON, Feb. 23.—A Lloyds dispatch from Constantinople says: "The Russian Consulate here warns shipping that torpedoes are being placed on the Black Sea coast between Sookgoom-Kalé and Fort Saint Nicholas. Guard-ships are stationed at Poti and Sookgoom-Kalé roadsteads to indicate the course. Balaklava must not be entered before communicating."

An evening paper, in a leading article, says: "Rightly or wrongly, there is a general impression that international complications are becoming easier, and war may be avoided for the time. This," it says, "is partly due to the prospect of peace between Turkey and Servia, which is as good as settled. Though this is no guarantee against a Russo-Turkish war, it will undoubtedly reduce to a minimum the chances of precipitate action by Russia."

A dispatch from Bucharest says a number of Turks, including soldiers, pillaged Goraumci Island in the Danube. A detachment of Roumanian troops captured 13 of the party, including a Turkish soldier. The leader of the marauders, who was a Turkish official from Rustchuk, and another Turk were killed.

LONDON, Feb. 24.—The Vienna Presse reports that the Russians have already finished seven pontoon bridges on the Pruth, each broad enough to allow eight men to march abreast. A dispatch from Vienna says 8,000 laborers are employed daily on the fortifications of Widden. The Grand Vizier has sent an autograph letter to Prince Milan expressing a firm hope that the relations of Servia and Turkey will be amicable.

The Berlin correspondent of a morning paper says intelligence has been received from a trustworthy source that Austria has intimated to Russia that she will not consider the persistence of the Porte in its refusal to yield to the proposals of the powers as a casus belli, and that it will depend on each power to assume the attitude appropriate to the special occasion as circumstances are further developed.

A special dispatch from Berlin says the Porte has just received several hundred thousand Martini-Henry Rifles and 400,000,000 cartridges from America. A special from Widdin states that Osman Pasha's troops, quartered between Widdin and Saitschar, consist of 63 battalions of infantry, two regiments of cavalry, and 78 field pieces. Widdin alone has a garrison of 28,000. There are 30 battalions of Asiatics and the severity of the climate and the overcrowding at Widdin, have caused much sickness among the men. It is said that the rate of mortality is high. It is believed that the Turks will occupy Kalafat opposite Widdin in the event of war. They have already collected sufficient material for the construction of pontoon bridges.

The Belgrade correspondent of a morning paper says: The Servian Government has annulled the elections in Jagodina and Kragujevatz on account of disturbances during the polling. The authorities have ordered all volunteers not belonging to any regular corps to quit the country within three days. Fifty-six Russians accordingly left on Thursday; another detachment goes on Friday. The order is aimed at the crowd of military adventurers in Belgrade who are suspected of favoring intrigues against the dynasty. The Russian Consul entirely approved the action of the authorities. It is thought that this expression will cause a final breach with the Russian Slavonic societies, and the last external influence which is opposed to the conclusion of peace will thus be removed. The Pan-Slavists are apparently turning their attention to Montenegro.

The same paper's correspondent at Berlin says, in consequence of Austria's opposition to the cession of a harbor on the Adriatic to Montenegro the Montenegrins will content themselves with obtaining access to the sea through Lake Scutari and the Bajana River. They continue, however, to ask for more territory than the Porte will accord, and the latest intelligence renders it likely that the armistice must be prolonged. In the event of the Porte's making concessions the Montenegrin Commissioners are authorized to sign a preliminary treaty.

Gen. Tchernayeff publishes a denial of Lord Derby's statements relative to the number of Russians in the Servian Army. He says it never exceeded 3,000.

PARIS, Feb. 23.—M. De Stapland, Senator from the Department of the Nord, died to-day, aged 79 years. In the Chamber of Deputies this afternoon a motion was made on the part of the Government, that the Minister of the Interior be authorized to institute proceedings against Paul De Cassagnac for libels published in Le Pays.

O'MAHONY'S REMAINS IN IRELAND.

QUEENSTOWN, Feb. 23.—On the arrival here this morning of the steamer Dakota from New York, a local committee, appointed for the purpose, proceeded out in a tender and received the remains of John O'Mahony, and presented an address to the American deputation accompanying them. The coffin was conveyed to the Pro-Cathedral, where mass for the dead was celebrated at 8 o'clock. Owing to the early hour of landing there was no demonstration.

LONDON, Feb. 23.—A special dispatch from Queenstown to an evening paper says: "O'Mahony's remains will be taken to Cork at 6 o'clock this evening. The Nationalists there intend having a torch-light procession. The body will lie in the Democratic Club room until Sunday, when it will be taken to Dublin. The Fenians are indignant at Cardinal Cullen's refusal to allow the remains to lie in state in Dublin Cathedral, and say if they had anticipated it O'Mahony should have been buried in New-York.

CORK, Feb. 23.—The remains of John O'Mahony were taken from their temporary resting place in Queenstown this evening, and escorted by a large procession to a special steamer, which brought them to this city. On their arrival here they were quickly removed to the Mechanics' Institute, where they now lie.

LONDON, Feb. 24.—The reception of O'Mahoney's remains at Cork disappointed all expectations; only a few hundred people accompanied the corpse to the Democratic club. There was no torchlight procession and no political demonstrations were made. The delegates who accompanied the remains from New-York are indignant at the conduct of the Captain of the steamer Dakota, who refused to recognize them during the voyage or to supply them with an American flag to cover the coffin on landing because he would not countenance what he considered to be a disloyal demonstration.

TWEED'S EFFORTS FOR RELEASE.

The statement published in THE TIMES recently concerning the proposed settlement of the litigations by the people against Tweed, and of the prosecution by the latter of his claims against various persons indented to him, received additional corroboration yesterday, and there is, as has already been stated, no doubt that such is the fixed programme. Papers were drawn up by Tweed's counsel yesterday, in suits against the former partners of the "ex-Boss" in various business transactions. These papers will be served speedily, and the purpose of instituting the suits is to bring about a settlement so that Tweed may be enabled to pay back to the City a portion of the stolen money for his release from jail. Tweed's claims against his partners are claims in regard to real estate transactions, dealings in various classes of stocks and personal claims, such as money loans, &c. Many persons, it is said, who were benefited by Tweed's liberality in former times, have refused to surrender the property given to them in trust or loaned to them, and hence the litigations. There is no doubt that in these suits Tweed has the upper hand. Among his beneficiaries are men holding high positions in official and social life, and any exposure by him of transactions now shrouded from the public gaze would have a telling effect. There seems to be but little doubt but that Tweed is aware of his power to crush some persons. He seems, however, rather desirous of settling matters amicably, if this can be done. One of Tweed's claims is a rather peculiar one. The person against whom he makes the claim now holds a prominent position under the City Government. This man was rather inclined to "fight the tiger" a few years ago, and being once hard pushed borrowed $3,000 from Tweed to pay his proportion of a loss at faro. He neglected to pay up promptly, however, and when pressed for payment he pleaded the Gambling act; in other words, he contended that the money having been used for gambling purposes, he could not be compelled to return it, the money having been loaned to him with knowledge on Tweed's part of the purpose to which the money was to be put. Tweed, of course, by reason of certain "unpleasantnesses" which have taken place within the last six years, has not been, except, until very recently, in a position to demand his claims, and in the event of a refusal to pay his demands, to litigate concerning them. It may be said here that Tweed, in his usual conversation and in his letter written to Mr. Charles O'Conor, from Ludlow-street Jail, pretends to be very poor. As this is somewhat antagonistic to the general belief, it is rather singular that the counsel for the people have not availed themselves of their right to examine him under oath, in supplementary proceedings, in regard to his property. By this procedure he could be compelled under oath to disclose what property he now owns, what property he has disposed of during the past six years or more, and to whom such disposition has been made.

REPORTED MARINE DISASTERS.

LONDON, Feb. 23.—A Lloyds dispatch from Buenos Ayres, dated Feb. 22, announces that the American ship Admiral, Capt. Banchard, from New-York Dec. 14, for San Francisco, went ashore Feb. 8 at Patagonos, and has become a wreck. Part of her cargo will probably be saved. The Russian bark Matts August, Capt. Lammlin, from Ipswich Jan. 16, for Baltimore, has put into West Cowes, with port bow damaged by collision.

BLANKENBERGHE, Feb. 23.—The British bark Eliza McLaughlin, Capt. Phillips, from Lynn Jan. 5 for Baltimore or New-York, is ashore at Knocke, Holland, and likely to become a total wreck. The crew were saved.

CHESTER, Feb. 23.—The steamer Ohio ran into the schooner George H. Turbull below Tinicum Island this afternoon, and cut her in two. The Ohio's boats picked up the schooner's crew.

THE WEST INDIES.

HAVANA, Feb. 23.—Advices from Port au Prince to the 11th inst. report that peace continues. It is announced that President Canal is to be married to Miss Wilson on the 13th inst. Intelligence from Saint Domingo to the 9th represents that the opponents of President Baez continue to spread reports that he is endeavoring to secure the annexation of the Republic to the United States, with the object of acquiring assistance from the Haytians and promoting disturbances in the north.

St. Thomas dates to the 16th say Lamb & Co. advertise that the Spanish Government will probably indemnity shippers who lost their goods by the capture of the steamer Moctezuma, and request that shippers send their claims to Captain General Jovellar. The Tidente says several leaky American vessels are about to proceed to their destination with the aid of steam pumps, and that there is need of an American Plimsoll to look into this dangerous practice, which jeopardizes both lives and property.

ARRESTED ON A CHARGE OF MURDER.

TERRE HAUTE, Feb. 23.—Light was thrown to-day upon the attempted train robbery and murder of Milo Eames, engineer, at Long Point, on the Vandalia Railroad, on July 8, 1875. The supposed murderers, Charles St. Clair, a hackman; Bud Shoemaker, a brakeman on the train at the time of the attack; Sam and Alexander Coulhorn, (colored;) Billy Carr, and Jennie Osgood, a prostitute, all of this city, were arrested to-day, on evidence which seems sufficient to convict them of the crime. St. Clair, the leader, is owner of a low house of prostitution here. The first clue to his guilt was obtained by women in his own house, who heard St. Clair talking to one of his associates about their failure in the Long Point business. The prisoners were taken to Prairie City, Ill., to-day for trial. The woman, Jennie Osgood, was dressed in men's clothes at the time of the attack on the train, and wore a false mustache. She was on the engine when Eames was killed. She has signified her intention to tell all she knows about the affair.

THE LATE REAR ADMIRAL ALDEN.

PORTLAND, Feb. 23.—The remains of Rear Admiral Alden are lying in state in the Council Chamber, City Hall, guarded by a military escort. The floral donations are elaborate. The funeral will take place to-morrow at 11 o'clock, and all the military organizations will take part.

COLUMBIA LIFE INSURANCE.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 23.—The ground upon which Col. Celsus Price, State Superintendent of Insurance, asked the Circuit Court yesterday for the appointment of Receivers for the Columbia Life Insurance Company, is that by reason of the shrinkage of values the capital, assets, &c., of that company have become impaired to the extent of nearly $150,000, and that the company is not able to furnish the 6 per cent. reserve required by the State.

A PAYING RAILROAD.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

CHICAGO, Feb. 23.—The report of the Directors of the Chicago, Burlington and Quincy Railroad for the past year was submitted to-day. It shows the earnings for the year to have been $12,057,794, and the expenses, including taxes and also $138,808 of a disputed tax on capital stock, $6,868,545. The decrease of the funded debt has been $38,250. The construction and equipment account has been increased $379,363. The sales of lands amounted to 31,701 acres, and money received in this department $327,800. The road during the year has accumulated a surplus beyond its usual dividend of $339,623, which has been used for the sinking fund, and for new construction in Iowa.

NORTHERN CENTRAL RAILROAD.

BALTIMORE, Feb. 23.—At the annual meeting of the Directors of the Northern Central Railroad to-day, President Thomas A. Scott presiding, the report of the operations of the company for the year ending Dec. 31, 1876, was presented to the stockholders. The report gives the total revenue of the main line, with its leased and controlled roads, at $4,369 923 50, and the total operating expenses at $3,036,435 81, leaving as the net earnings $1,333,439 69. "In comparison with 1875 there was a decrease in the gross earnings of $556,322 22, equal to 11 29-100 per cent., and a decrease in the operating expenses of $325,637 87, equal to 9 69-100 per cent. The decrease in the net earnings was $230,684 35, or 14 75 100 per cent. The operating expenses were 69 43-100 per cent. of the gross earnings, which, in comparison with 1875, shows an increase of 1 23-100 per cent. In addition to the net earnings, as above stated, of $1,333 439 69, there was received from dividend and interest, $59,632, and contribution for operating the Elmira, Cleaning and Canandaigua Division, from the Pennsylvania Railroad Company, $56,487 82, making a total $1,449 559 51, of which amount there has been applied to the payment of various indebtedness, interest on mortgages, &c., $1,260,133 54; leaving a balance for 1876 of $189,425 97. Notwithstanding the unexampled depression in business during the past year, the net earnings of the company have exceeded the interest charged upon its total mortgage, indebtedness, and leases.

The balance to the credit of the profit and loss Dec. 31, 1876, is stated at $176,546 77. While the above statement shows a balance of earnings equal to a dividend of 3 per cent. upon the capital stock, your board does not deem it wise to make a dividend, believing it to be more prudent to hold the existing balance in reserve. Although the expectations of your board have not been realized in the results of the past year, they are able to state to you that, notwithstanding the continued and increased depression in all departments of trade which prevailed during the entire year, especially in those branches upon which the traffic of your lines so largely depends—coal, iron, and lumber—all your property is greatly improved in its condition, in all branches of the service, in its earning capacity, and in its capability of more economical movement of the traffic."

Immediately following the Director's meeting, there was a meeting of the stockholders, and the following gentlemen were elected Directors for the ensuing year: Thomas A. Scott, Wistar Morris, S. M. Felton, A. M. Phillips, George B. Roberts, Edmund Smith, Jr., M. Hutchinson, Dell Abbott, Jr., all of Philadelphia; Wayne MacVeigh, Harris urg, and George Small, S. M. Shoemaker, and N. B. Sellers, of Baltimore. The new Directors held a meeting, when Thomas A. Scott was re-elected President, A. J. Cassatt, Vice President, and S. R. Hollins, Secretary.

THE MEXICAN VETERANS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—The second day's proceedings of the National Association of Mexican Veterans comprised a visit to the White House, where they were received by President Grant with a cordial greeting. The movement began four years ago. The veterans expressed the hope that the President would sign their pension bill before his term expired. Returning to Willard Hall Rev. Green Clay Smith was selected as orator of the day for the next annual meeting, which will take place at Baltimore on the 22d of February, 1878. The committee, consisting of one from each State, then organized, and proceeded to the Capitol to appear before the Committee on Pensions of the Senate, a special meeting having been called to hear the veterans. Senator Ingalls, of Kansas, presided. Besides the members of the committee Senators Logan, Burnside, and Maxey were present. Gen. Denver briefly stated the case, and called Secretary Kenady to read an extract from his annual report in regard to the probable number of survivors of the Mexican War. Mr. Kenaday informed the committee that extraordinary efforts had been made during the past four years to ascertain the whereabouts of every survivor. The number of names collected was 6,250, of which 4,629 were tabulated to show the regiments in which they served. From this compilation it was ascertained that 25 regular regiments show an average of 41 survivors, while 15 volunteer regiments from Indiana Ohio, and Kentucky, average about 46 each. Assuming that 4,629 cover only one-half of the survivors there would not be over 80 or 90 men left of the full regiments that went to Mexico in 1846, less than 10 per cent. of the whole number mustered. These are vital statistics, based on facts susceptible of proof. Senator Ingalls, however, stated that an officer of the Pension Bureau had prepared an estimate which shows that the passage of the proposed bill will necessitate an appropriation of $7,000,000 or $8,000,000 a year. The Pension Committee have agreed to have a meeting to-morrow, to consider the matter.

The convention adjourned to meet again at 3 o'clock Saturday afternoon.

INDICATIONS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 24—1 A. M.—For the Middle States, rising barometer, north-east winds, cooler, cloudy and clearer weather.

For New-England stationary or falling, followed by rising barometer, north-east to north-west winds, partly cloudy and clear weather.

MORE INDIAN DEPREDATIONS.

DEADWOOD, Feb. 23.—On Wednesday evening, about 6:30 o'clock, a small band of Indians made an attack on Spearfish City, a small mining town near this place. About 100 shots were exchanged. None of the miners were injured, and owing to the darkness the damage done to the Indians is unknown. Last night Bourhton's herd of cattle, which a party of armed citizens captured from the Indians a few days since, were again driven off by Indians from the False Bottom mining region.

THE RAILROAD STRIKE IN THE EAST.

BOSTON, Feb. 23.—The Boston and Maine Railroad Company offer a reward of $100 for the detection of persons violating the State laws relative to obstructing the road or interfering with its rolling stock. There is no change in the situation, except that the road is daily increasing its facilities.

NOVA SCOTIA AND NEW-BRUNSWICK.

HALIFAX, Feb. 23.—In the Assembly to-day the Provincial Secretary gave notice of a motion authorizing the Government to appoint a delegation to confer with delegates from New-Brunswick and Prince Edward's Island on the proposed union of the maritime provinces.

THE PRESIDENCY OF MEXICO.

ST. LOUIS, Feb. 23.—José M. Iglesias, one of the Presidents of Mexico, accompanied by several of his staff, arrived here to-night, en route East.

ARRIVAL OF THE BATAVIA.

The steam-ship Batavia, Capt. Moreland, of the Cunard line, which sailed from Liverpool for this port, via Queenstown, on the 10th inst., arrived here yesterday.

OREGON VOTES FOR HAYES.

DECISION OF THE COMMISSION.

UNANIMOUS REJECTION OF CRONIN AS AN ELECTOR — THE THREE REPUBLICAN ELECTORS DECIDED TO BE LEGAL BY A VOTE OF EIGHT TO SEVEN—POINTS OF THE ARGUMENT OF THE MEMBERS IN SECRET SESSION—CONSISTENCY OF THE REPUBLICAN POSITION THROUGHOUT— REPORT OF THE COMMISSIONERS.

Special Dispatch to the New-York Times.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—The Commission met this morning, with Mr. Thurman absent by reason of sickness. Arguments were made mission at his house. At 4 o'clock, therefore, the other members of the Commission proceeded in carriages to Senator Thurman's residence on Fourteenth-street, between K and L streets, accompanied by Messrs. McKenny and Catlin, Secretaries, and Mr. Reardon, the Marshal of the Commission. Senator Thurman was found confined to his bed, where he remained during the entire proceedings of the Commission, which was formally called to order by Justice Clifford, President. The vote was then taken on the following propositions, which had been informally submitted and discussed, but not voted upon, during the day's session:

Mr. Edmunds submitted the following:

Resolved, That the certificate signed by E. A. Cronin, J. N. T. Miller, and John Parker, purporting to cast the Electoral vote of the State of Oregon, does not contain or certify the constitutional votes to which said State is entitled.

Whereas, J. W. Watts, designated in certificate No. 1 as an Elector of the State of Oregon, for President and Vice President, on the day of election, viz., the 7th day of November, 1876, held an office of trust and profit under the United States, therefore,

Resolved, That the said J. W. Watts was then ineligible to the office of Elector within the express terms of the Constitution.

Mr. Justice Field then offered the following:

Whereas, At the election held on the 7th of November, 1876, in the State of Oregon for Electors of President and Vice President, W. H. Odell, J. W. Watts, and J. C. Cartwright received the highest number of votes cast for Electors; but,

Whereas, The said Watts, then holding an office of trust and profit under the United States was ineligible to the office of Elector; therefore,

Resolved, That the said Odell and Cartwright were the only persons duly elected at said election, and there was a failure on the part of the State to elect a third Elector.

Rejected—Ayes 7, nays 8; the same vote in detail as the preceding.

Justice Field then offered the following:

Whereas, The Legislature of Oregon has made no provision for the appointment of an Elector under the act of Congress where there was a failure to make a choice on the day prescribed by law; therefore

Resolved, That the attempted selection of a third Elector by the two persons chosen was inoperative and void.

Resolved, That the vote of W. H. Odell, and the vote of J. C. Cartwright, cast for Rutherford B. Hayes, of Ohio, for President of the United States, and for William A. Wheeler, of New-York, for Vice President of the United States, were the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States and that the aforesaid Odell and Cartwright, and they only, were the persons duly appointed Electors in the State of Oregon at the election held Nov. 7, 1876, there having been a failure at the said election to appoint a third Elector in accordance with the Constitution and laws of the United States and the laws of the State of Oregon, and that the two votes aforesaid should be counted, and none other from the State of Oregon.

Rejected—Yeas, 7; nays, 8, as above.

Mr. Morton then offered the following:

Resolved, That W. H. Odell, J. C. Cartwright, and J. W. Watts, the persons named as Electors in certificate No. 1, are the lawful Electors of the State of Oregon, and that their votes are the votes provided for by the Constitution of the United States, and should be counted for President and Vice President of the United States.

Mr. Hunton moved to strike out the name of J. W. Watts, which was rejected by a vote of 7 yeas to 8 nays. Mr. Morton's resolution was then adopted; yeas 8, nays 7, as follows:

NAYS—Messrs. Abbott, Bayard, Clifford, Field, Hunton, Payne, and Thurman—7.

The decision of the Commission was then drawn up and signed by the eight members voting in the affirmative.

On motion of Mr. Morton the injunction of secrecy upon the acts and proceedings of the Commission, except as regards their report to the joint session of Congress, was removed, and the Commission adjourned to meet in the Supreme Court-room at 12 o'clock to-morrow.

REPORT OF THE COMMISSION.

The Electoral Commission having received certain certificates and papers purporting to be certificates of the Electoral votes of the State of Oregon, and certain papers accompanying the same, and the objections thereto, report that it has duly considered the same and has decided, and does hereby decide, that the votes of W. H. Odell, J. C. Cartwright, and J. W. Watts, the persons named in the certificate of the Secretary of State of Oregon as the persons receiving the highest number of votes for Presidential Electors, are the votes provided for by the Constitution, and that the same are lawfully to be counted as testified to in the certificate of said Electors, namely, the three votes for Rutherford B. Hayes, of the State of Ohio, for President, and three votes for William A. Wheeler, of the State of New-York, for Vice President. The report will further set forth that the election of Watts by the other two members of the Electoral College was in accordance with the Constitution and laws of Oregon. The grounds for this decision, so far as they concern the eligibility of Watts, are substantially that it is competent to go behind the certificate of the Governor so far as the same is not founded upon the action of the canvassing or returning authority provided for by the law of the State, which authority, in the case of Oregon, is held to be the Secretary of State. The report will also take the ground that it is not essential to show that an Elector was eligible on the 7th of November, provided it be shown that he was eligible when he cast his vote in the Electoral College, and the fact appears that the alleged ineligible Elector [Watts] was chosen to fill a vacancy caused by his own absence from the Electoral College, and that he was not ineligible at the time he cast his vote. The Secretary of the Commission will to-morrow morning deliver to the President pro compore of the Senate, the formal decision above described, together with all the certificates and accompanying papers in the case which were referred to the Commission, and the Secretary will also deliver to the Speaker of the House a formal ratification signed by the President of the Commission, that their decision had been communicated to the President pro tem. Upon the reassembling of the two houses in joint session the decision will be read and entered upon their respective journals, and thereupon, in accordance with the Electoral act, the vote of Oregon must be immediately counted for Hayes and Wheeler, unless upon objection being made in writing by at least five Senators and five members of the House of Representatives, the two houses shall separately concur in ordering otherwise.

FOREIGN COTTON AND GRAIN TRADE.

LIVERPOOL, Feb. 23.—The Circular of the Liverpool Cotton Brokers' Association, in its review of the week ending last night, says: "Cotton has been inanimate with limited business and quotations are generally reduced. American was in limited demand, and a reduction of ⅛d. to 3-16d. generally conceded. Sea Island was in fair request at steady prices. In futures a moderate business was done, without any great fluctuations. The decline on the week is fully 3-16d."

A leading grain circular, reviewing the trade of the week, says: "The British wheat markets were generally a shilling per quarter dearer this week, but trade was less active. Millers are again showing a disposition to act with reserve, though it is not supposed that this can long continue as the late improvement in prices was too rapid to permit them going liberally into stock. Holders of foot wheat since Tuesday have been very firm, supplies are now chiefly Californian, most of which so far from being pressed for sale, is going into warehouse. The demand the last two days has been steady, but not free, at previous quotations. Several cargoes of Californian, on passage and for shipment, have been taken at extreme rates. Maize was rather dearer. The fresh supplies into port of wheat and flour have been small, and of maize very light. This market to-day was attended by few buyers. The demand for wheat was quite limited. White was a penny per cental lower, and red nominally unaltered from Tuesday's prices. Flour was steady with moderate sales. Corn was taken sparingly at prices a shade better."

THE LOUISIANA INVESTIGATION.

CROSS-EXAMINATION OF PATRICK J. KENNEDY—HIS EFFORTS TO INDUCE REPUBLICANS TO GO OVER TO THE DEMOCRATIC MEMBERS OF THE LEGISLATURE—OTHER TESTIMONY—MR. GIFFORD'S KNOWLEDGE OF LITTLEFIELD, THE TAMPERER WITH RETURNS.

WASHINGTON, Feb. 23.—The Committee on the Powers, Privileges, and Duties of the House had before them this morning Patrick J. Kennedy, of Louisiana, whose cross-examination was resumed by Mr. Lawrence. He stated that when he first went to New-Orleans he acted with the Packard Legislature for about a week, and then went over to the Nicholls Legislature. He stated that he did not solicit from either Kellogg or Packard, or from any one else, nor did he receive from anybody, promises of support to secure his election to the United States Senate; he never offered any member of the Packard Legislature any money or other valuable consideration in order to induce them to leave that body; it is possible he may have said to some of them that if they were or would become members of the Nicholls Legislature they would be paid their mileage, as the Nicholls body had money and the Packard organization had none; he said that Wells, in the interviews witness had with him, never held out a view or made the impression upon his mind that he [Wells] wanted any money or wanted to do anything corrupt. Witness was shown several newspaper extracts relating to the explanation of E. J. Barrett in the Nicholls Legislature of his connection with the interviews between Wells and witness, and he said that they were in the main correct; he admitted that he had conversations with Frederick Heath, W. J. Delacey, C. E. Heath, P. J. Brown, John A. Brown, and other members of the Packard Legislature, and sought to induce them to come over for 10 days to the Nicholls Legislature, saying that they would be paid their per diem and mileage, which would amount to about $100. He knew of none of the members of the Packard Legislature with whom he had conversed on this subject coming over to the Nicholls Legislature, except a man named Jarman, who was a poor man; witness told a reporter of the New-Orleans Times of his interviews with Gov. Wells, but did not suggest or solicit that he should be subpœnaed before this committee.

Mr. Kennedy was interrogated by Mr. Field with reference to the correspondence that passed between him and Wells relative to the proposed interview between the latter and Nicholls, and which has been published heretofore, but no material new facts were elicited on this point. He expressed it as his opinion that the Packard Legislature could not sustain itself if it were not for the support of the United States troops; he said he thought that if the troops were withdrawn those gentlemen of the Packard Legislature who professed to have been elected would take up their bags and leave. Men who come to the State as settlers in good faith are respected in every way, and the people have an aversion to those only who have been sent or have voluntarily come there from the North for the sole purpose of holding office. Mr. Kennedy related the occurrences at the State-house on the first day of the meeting of the Packard Legislature, which developed nothing with which the public is not already sufficiently familiar. He recited also some instances of bills being introduced in that Legislature and passed without having ever been read, except by their title, or being referred to any committee.

After a recess the committee called Henry C. Ewing, of New-Orleans, and he testified that he was employed by Blanchard, Catlin & Jewett, who had a list of all the registered voters in New-Orleans, and sent to the address of each one a circular purporting to have been issued by the Southern Charm Sewing-machine Company of Alabama; whenever a circular was addressed to a place where it was found the person did not live, it would be returned by the letter-carrier; this firm—Blanchard, Catlin & Jewett—occupied a room in the third story of the State-house; they employed about a dozen clerks from the latter part of September until the early part of October; witness is a Republican, and the whole concern was Republican; the warrants of arrest were issued by United States Commissioner Jewett, who was one of the firm; Blanchard and Catlin were connected with the registration; the affidavits were sworn to by policemen.

By Judge Lawrence—Did not know that the Southern Charm Sewing machine Company was a bona fide company; knew that it had a branch office in Washington, and a factory at Bellefonte, Ohio; it was generally understood that this was a device to detect the fraudulent registration of Democrats.

By Mr. Tucker—Whenever a circular was returned by a letter-carrier the policemen made, or swore they made, inquiries at the respective places whether the parties lived there or not, and then the warrants of arrest were issued; but witness does not know whether the parties were arrested or not.

Thomas Jefferson Landry, of New-Orleans, testified in substance as the former witness; he stated that the affidavits were printed and that the clerks filled them out; warrants were made out in the same way, and Jewett took them to his room in the Custom-house, where he stamped his signature upon them; about 10,000 of these warrants were issued.

Ira M. Gifford, of Davenport, Iowa, testified that he went from there to New-Orleans, leaving Chicago on the night of Dec. 9; he went there in his official capacity as an examiner of national banks; Littlefield in New-Orleans he was introduced to Littlefield by Spearing on Dec. 20; he was in Spearing's office at the time, and Littlefield told him that he was chief clerk to the Returning Board and confidential clerk to Gov. Wells; he asked witness whether he had ever met Gov. Wells and when witness replied in the negative, Littlefield invited all present to come down to the State-house the next morning; he had not heard at that time that Wells wanted or had been offered money for giving the State of Louisiana to Tilden; the next morning the witness went to the State-house, and was introduced to Gov. Wells and other members of the board; after some time spent in conversation witness left, accompanied by Spearing, Littlefield, Abell, and Eaton; in going along Littlefield asked what he [witness] thought of Gov. Wells, and witness replied that he liked him very well; Spearing said that this young man (referring to Littlefield) could open his eyes by telling him something about the doings of the board; after a while Spearing asked again whether witness would like to listen to some of these stories; he replied he would be at leisure in the evening, and that they must come to his room. Mr. Gifford then reiterated in substance the statements made by him before the Senate Committee of which Mr. Howe is Chairman, namely, that Littlefield had given him, by various expressions, to understand that he [Littlefield] desired his silence regarding alleged frauds by the Returning Board purchasers.

After Mr. Gifford had concluded his testimony, Littlefield took the stand, and gave his version of the interviews he had with Mr. Gifford, and said the latter advised him to abstract all the papers he could from the office of the Returning Board, and, if possible, the minute book, because those would corroborate the Vernon Parish matter; witness replied that he had never stolen anything in his life, and then told Gifford that he did not want anything further to do with him; this was the last interview witness had with Gifford. Littlefield denied that he ever mentioned Gov. Palmer's name in the course of any conversation he had with Gifford, and also denied a statement made by Gifford in his testimony to the effect that Littlefield told him the reason why he [Littlefield] was willing to expose the fraudulent practices of the Returning Board was because all the clerks of the board had received from Gov. Wells $2,500 a piece as hush money, and that he [Littlefield] had been put off with a miserable little tax collectorship. He also stated that Gifford was drunk all the time he was in New-Orleans, and that on the evening he sent the dispatch to Senator Allison he was so drunk that he asked witness to copy the dispatch upon the United Parties. Mr. Littlefield also stated that Gifford informed him that he [Gifford] had official information from Washington that Wells and Anderson had been paid $200,000 to turn the State over to Hayes; he further said that Gifford, at their first meeting, and in the presence of Spearing, said that if this thing was not worth $100,000 to the Republican Party, he knew where he could go, and that he would at once proceed to Albany and see the Democratic leaders there.

William K. Spearing, of New-Orleans, Littlefield's uncle, was next called, and corroborated Littlefield in every essential particular as to interviews and transactions in which he, together with Littlefield and Gifford, took part.

At 3:50 o'clock the committee adjourned until to-morrow morning.

ROBBERY OF A TEA MERCHANT'S BONDS.

Another tin box filled with valuable papers has probably fallen into the hands of a skillful sneak-thief. It was the property of Mr. Von Sachs, a tea merchant, residing at No. 137 West Twenty-third-street, and doing business on the third floor of No. 125 Pearl-street, and was placed for safe-keeping in the vault of Clayton & Co., wholesale and retail stationers, under the Seaman's Bank for Savings, at Wall and Pearl streets. On the 10th inst., Mr. Von Sachs went to Clayton's, got the box, and took it to his office. He thinks he returned with it to Clayton's and gave it to a clerk with a request that it be replaced in the vault, but Mr. Bogart, a member of he firm, denies this, and says that he must have mislaid it in his own office. At any rate, the box has disappeared, and Mr. Von Sachs has offered $100 reward for its recovery. It contained two first mortgage bonds of the Missouri, Kansas and Texas Pacific Railway Company for $1,000 each, Nos. 15,945 and 15,950; two second mortgage bonds of the same for $1,000 each, Nos. 8,590 and 8,591, and 15 second mortgage bonds of the same for $500 each, numbered from 43 to 57 inclusive.

THE PRESIDENTIAL DEBATE.

OCCASIONAL WASHINGTON NOTES.

TRAGIC PERFORMANCES IN THE HOUSE—UNHAPPY FLIGHT OF FLORIDA PURMAN—THE BALANCING PRACTICE OF PRESIDENT SEELYE—QUALITY OF THE DISCUSSION IN THE SENATE—THE SENATORS AT THEIR BEST IN SHORT SPEECHES.

WASHINGTON, Wednesday, Feb. 21, 1877.

In addition to the stirring tragic performances in the great Congressional theatre, we have now and then a bit of elegant comedy, a roaring farce, or a stunning acrobatic exploit in the way of a brilliant somersault, like that of Mr. Pierce, of Massachusetts, or a skillful balancing on a very fine point, like that of Prof. Seelye. Then there was the funny little affair of the Florida member last week, when we saw Joseph Surface outdone in "noble sentiments," Pecksniff in honor, and Uriah Heep in humble integrity. He has a feline way with him, this Purman—he arched his back, so to speak, and rubbed himself against the legs of Hewitt and Field, and purred and purred, and eyed the canary while he purred. He has found that the way of a Florida Republican is hard; that party favor is capricious; that often to him who hath is given, and from him who hath not is taken even that which his wife hath—and doubtless he hopes that the other part of the Scriptural rule will be carried out under the Democratic faction in Congress. As they sung in the revolutionary Ca ira, (translated)—

"With the Legislature all will be accomplished;
He who exalts himself shall be abased,
And he who abases himself shall be exalted."

But I believe he will be grievously disappointed. The Democrats may pat him on the back, but they will never trust him. They will never trust any man who sells himself in open market, or who goes over to the enemy in the very heat of the battle. That they have received with an appearance of hearty welcome, that they have made so much of more eminent Republican converts or perverts, surprises me, and seems like an indication of Democratic decadence. Whatever may be said of this party in the past, of its aggressions, its unscrupulousness, it cannot with truth be said hat it ever nurtured the "base bird" of the proverb. If the masses of the party were called by their aristocratic opponents the "vulgar herd," they were not the sort of animals to desert a wounded fellow when the hounds were in sight. They would stand at bay about him, even though their leaders might find it expedient to trample him to death themselves in a strictly private party caucus.

"Faithful are the wounds of a friend," and I feel moved, as a mother in the Israel of Republicanism, to lay on and spare not. The Republican Party seems to have taken a new lease of life, a weak tenure perhaps, but it is doubtful whether the Democratic Party as at present constituted has vitality and will enough to destroy it. It can only die as nations die, "by suicide"—not the active, heroic death of a Brutus or Cato, but the weak let-go of one who lacks the moral courage to live after having sinned away his soul. It will be simple dissolution from inward decay. The party would clearly never have been in the strait in which it has lately found itself, between the Scylla of an exasperating defeat, and the Charybdis of a dubious victory, had it sailed by the chart of patriotic precedent and the compass of justice—had it maintained discipline and a faithful watch. Its counsels have been fatally divided by small jealousies and disputes over that golden apple of discord, the Presidency. Certain salaried leading journals might have been called disbanding journals. A casual reader might have taken more than one of them for a mild-spoken oracle of the Democracy. I myself while in Europe once made that grave mistake, but I hardly think it is possible for any one to take a Democratic for a Republican organ. All the trumpets of that side, even the penny trumpets, "give a certain sound."

It strikes an outside observer like me that the most suicidal course has been taken by certain leading Republicans of the high-toned type, who have weakened the power and destroyed the prestige of their party by admissions and concessions more Pecksniffian than politic. Magnanimity, when at the expense of party interests, is a virtue that leans to folly's side. "Confession is good for the soul," individual, not collective. Speak for yourself, is a good rule for penitents. Gentlemen have canted more or less about political sins, not in the cozy conference meeting, where the brethren know how to take such damaging self-condemnations in a pious "Pickwickian sense," but openly in the market place or on the corners of the streets. If they have not "trembled before the trumpet sounded," they have broken ranks at a hue and cry, grounded arms before an accusation, and surrendered to an indictment.

On the principle that "an egg to-day is better than a chicken to-morrow," we certainly may rejoice in a Republican victory through the Commission; but my heart, even now, misgives me. I am not sure that an interregnum of power would have been a misfortune to the party. It might have learned invaluable lessons during that four years of privation and discipline. It might have made its hard bed "on the cauld, cauld ground," but that were perhaps better than a bed of roses with the thorns not left out. It would have had a chance to test the stuff of which it is made. It is probable that some of its unworthy or incompetent leaders, who will now take a new grant of power, would in that time have been reduced to the ranks, and men who have been cashiered or sent to the rear would have been "to the fore." But its battles are by no means over, and it may be that the future leader, the coming winning man, will be one now under some cloud of misapprehension or suspicion, assailed by envious and treacherous calumny, and abandoned by cowardly party policy. When the Greeks were on their way to Troy, to avenge the marital wrongs of Menelaus, one of their best Generals, Philoctetes, was stung in the foot by a serpent. The wound was so unpleasant to behold, "and smelt so, yeah!" and Philoctetes himself took the hurt so much to heart that his associate Generals, high-toned, fastidious old Hellenes, chuck full of Spartan virtue and all that, became disgusted and treacherously left him on the Isle of Lemnos, and sailed away by night to Troas. But the siege proving a tedious affair to men not used to long sessions and roll-calls of congress, they were at last, compelled to send for Philoctetes, who after much urging, and influenced by the purest patriotic motives, came limping up to Ilium, to cover himself with glory and kill Paris.

It must be confessed we of the elect were immensely relieved by the decision of the Commission on the Louisiana case, not only because we thought it just and right, but because we had been a little anxious about the virtue of our dear Republican Judges. We knew they could not be pensioned, but we were not so sure they could not be terrorized by the best imitative thunder behind the scenes over there, by theatrical red lights, and alcoholic blue-lights. But they stood firm, and "all's well that ends well," and though the end is not yet, we will trust. We could have wished that the associates of the honored triad might have risen superior to narrow partisan prejudices and presented a solid front as patriots and Republicans. But this is an imperfect world. The juice of the Evil Apple permeates, more or less, judicial human nature. Not nowadays, at least, may we look for the severer virtues, under every mantle of ermine. Roman justice did not grow on every bench even in Rome. There was but one Junius Brutus. Let us be content with our immortal three. As it is, not Rhadamanthus, Minos, and Æcus, the Supreme Bench of Hades, who sat at the fork of the road, and sent some souls into office, in Elysium, and other souls out of office into Tartarus, were ever more abused for their rulings by the unhappy Tartareans, than are these our judicial friends, by disappointed Tildenites. If any case was found too difficult for Messrs. Rhadamanthus and Æcus, it was always passed over to Minos. He had the casting vote and, of course, took the brunt of the indignation and reproaches of the condemned. Judge Bradley answers to Minos.

I heard the two hours' discussion in the Senate on Monday. All the Republicans were at their best, I thought, and yet it was not sad to know that their best must be brief. Mr. Morton filled his 10 minutes' measure, and packed it down with solid, simple argument. Mr. Howe was more ornate and diffuse, but unusually impressive. Mr. Sargent was fiery and dashing, rapid and fearless; but it seemed to me that the gem of the debate was the noble speech of Mr. Boutwell. It was utterly without rant or rancor—quiet, but strong; earnest, but dispassionate—a farewell effort, if it be his last, well worthy to crown an honorable Senatorial career. The defense of partisanship in great national crises was especially fine. It touched on the fact that the Republican Party has suffered not from too much, but too little, partisanship.

I spent several hours in the House yesterday, listening to the final discussion on the Louisiana matter. The session was tempestuous, but not so tumultuous as I expected. We had all varieties of declamation. Mr. New, of Indiana, was very violent, closing with fierce denunciations and terrible anathemas. Perhaps before New is old he will learn that "curses come home to roost," and sometimes to lay eggs. Prof. Seelye gave us a moral discourse—lofty, doubtless, but rather Bunsby-like. You could make anything out of it, and you could make nothing of it. He administered a mild chastisement right and left, with wonderful impartiality. One moment a sunny satisfaction shone on Republican countenances; the next a cloud of penitential sorrow invaded them, and the sunshine passed to the other side of the chamber. It seems to me that this great scholar and excellent gentleman is one of those nice dilettante politicians, who, like Daniel Deronda, would "take an antediluvian standpoint for fear of doing injustice to the megatherium." They are not good fighters, they are only a little better than those violently virtuous Republicans, who, instead of going to work to cleanse the party within the party, rush out doors and throw mud in at the windows.

Mr. Watterson made an eloquent little speech, in which, to my agreeable surprise, he counseled protest, but not resistance. I think of all our speakers I liked best Mr. Pratt, of Iowa, but originally from Maine—the back-bony, as Massachusetts is the brainy, State of New-England. He was strong and fearless, but not in any way arrogant or passionate. The spirit of some of our speakers I did not like so well. They showed a disposition to taunt a disappointed and disabled enemy—which, to say the least, is small. Surely, they should rejoice, if not "with fear and trembling," with some humility, remembering that it is only by the skin of their teeth they escape utter defeat. For the first time since I have known him, Mr. Cox appeared with a shadowed and sombre aspect. It was no longer "Sunset," but Sundown. He did not seem like our merry ancient, but a woeful semblance—as it were, a changeling. We could have burst forth with the lament of Constance, slightly paraphrased:

"Grief fills the room up of our absent friend—
Puts on his pretty looks, repeats his words,
Remembers us of all his gracious parts,
Stuffs out his vacant garments with his form."

But he presently came back to his habits, "tricks, and manners," ejecting Grief, who is no substitute for him. He gradually rose in courage and spirits, till, at the Bible point, he was at his finest and funniest. As he was about to quote some damaging text, the gavel came down—"a few more minutes" were denied—and he made his point that the Bible was alien to all this matter. He was an impressive figure as he stood holding aloft a huge copy of the Holy Scriptures, so dilapidated that one might imagine that all the Congressmen that had ever been had been sworn in upon it; and that each man had taken the iron-clad oath. And yet it was dingy enough to have lain in some old closet for 30 years. I half expected to see John Quincy Adams' spectacles drop out of it. As the Western settler said to an itinerant preacher when supplying a need for morning service to the best of his ability with a few yellow leaves of Holy Writ, "I didn't know we were so nigh out." I commend the case of the Forty-fourth Congress to the American Bible Society. It was not altogether a very solemn occasion, even among the Democrats. They spoke of it as a "funeral," but it was more like a wake, neither lacking in fun nor in fight. As it has been whispered that a prominent Republican or two who narrowly, as they thought, at least, missed of the golden apple, would not be deeply grieved if the Commission failed to seat the blameless citizen of Columbus, it is now said that certain eminent Democrats are not utterly cast down by the defeat of the master wire-worker of Gramercy Park. It is even intimated, wickedly, no doubt, that the disaffected voted for and urged the Provisional Tribunal, as an easy and safe way of disposing of their candidate. There are open and honorable homicides, of which the bravest man may be proud, and there are indirect, perfidious killings, of which no man boasts. We can imagine good King David's six or seven little Israelites climbing on to his knees and over the back of his chair, of Winter evenings, before their mother or mothers came to put them to bed, and clamoring for the giant story and other delightful sanguinary tales.

Says Solomon, "Sire,
Who killed Goliah?"
"I," says the King,
With his little sling;
I killed the great giant Goliah."

Says Absalom, "Sire,
Who killed Uriah?"
"The Philistines, my son.
And I'll never have done
With mourning for Captain Uriah."

After passing safely through the Louisiana Hell Gate they sailed along till they struck the Michigan snag. Then the Senate went home, and another pow-wow began. I did not stop for it, but I heard that the upper chamber soon disposed of the objection—even Democrats deciding that the crevice was too small for the Democracy to wriggle through—and then the Senate was trotted back to the House for another counting "bout." This time they grounded on the Sierras, getting no further than Nevada. And so we go and don't go.

We feel no animosity against the Democratic majority as men and brothers. Individually they are, many of them, very pleasant fellows, bright, witty, and kindly. Especially the junior members—"nice young men for a small tea-party"—but collectively they have a great moral power of mischief and disturbance. They often remind me of a little California story told by Bret Harte. There was once a report that an earthquake was about to visit a certain town. A paterfamilias, becoming concerned for the safety of his boys, sent them to some friends living at a distance. The precious lads made themselves so delightfully at home that their host at last made up his mind that any ordinary convulsion of nature was preferable to such a visitation. Our prankish Congressmen were sent here not only to escape themselves but to avert from us an awful calamity; and yet we feel like appealing to their constituents in the words used by the distracted farmer in his dispatch to his city friend, "Send down the earthquake to us, and take away your boys." THE GERMAN EMIGRANT SOCIETY.

The ninety-third annual report of the German Emigrant Society of the City of New-York was issued yesterday, and sent to the Legislature. The report urges upon the Legislature the necessity of providing means for the current year to enable the Emigration Commissioners to take care of the destitute emigrants. The report next discusses the work of the Labor Bureau at Castle Garden, which is now run at the joint expense of the German and Irish societies, and which has provided work during the past year for 10,215 emigrants, 5,394 men and 4,821 women. This bureau, the report claims, has done more for the emigrants and given more substantial relief than ingrey, therefore, the managers urge the necessity of continuing that branch of the service. During the year 1,522 letters were received and 1,130 letters were written on behalf of emigrants. These letters contained $10,293 78, namely, $5,163 50 in cash, $4,795 33 in drafts, and $334 95 in passage and railroad tickets, and 1,133 letters were received for and forwarded to destitute arrived emigrants. The "German Rechtsschutz Verein," (society for the protection of German emigrants,) which was organized in May last, numbers now 60 members, each of whom pays $20 annual dues. This society, of which Messrs. Edward Salomon, Willy Wallach, Edward Lauterbach, and Carl Rosa are the President, Vice President, Secretary, and Treasurer, received 190 applications for aid since May last. The society, while taking complaints which are well founded, invariably declines taking charge of any complaint which appears frivolous. The society expended during the year $13,982 50 for charity. The receipts for the past year were $29,593 15, including a balance of $7,800 47 from 1875; $8,325 93 from donations, (including $7,393 from the excise fund); $10,295 50 for dues; $3,771 75 from interest on investments. The expenditures were $20,951 65, including $13,093 50 for charity, $568 12 for medicines, and $756 93 for salaries, &c. The property of the society is valued at $64,400. Of the emigrants which arrived in New-York last year 21,035 were Germans, against 25,559 in 1875. 40,302 in 1874, 101,900 in 1873, 128,030 in 1872, 83,609 in 1871, 71,280 in 1870, 101,571 in 1869, 104,515 in 1868, and 115,829 in 1867, making the total German emigration in this port for the last 10 years 793,630, while the aggregate of all nationalities was 2,006,508. The report acknowledges the services of Mr. H. J. Jackson, the Secretary of the Commissioners of Emigration, and closes with an appeal to the German residents to continue their support of the society.

TWENTY-ONE THOUSAND GRANGERS.

LONDON, Feb. 23.—Stephen White, Dominion Overseer of the Grangers, delivered an address before a meeting at Hyde Park last night, in which he stated that the order in Canada now comprises 600 granges and 21,000 members.

WESTERN LEGISLATION.

A WISCONSIN RAILROAD FIGHT.

THE BILL TO DISFRANCHISE THE BONDHOLDERS OF THE CHICAGO, MILWAUKEE AND ST. PAUL COMPANY—A MONOPOLY FOR FIFTEEN YEARS IN PUBLISHING PUBLIC SCHOOL TEXT-BOOKS.

MILWAUKEE, Monday, Feb. 19, 1877.

There is a bill now pending before the Legislature of this State in which Wall street has a lively interest—a bill to repeal so much of the law of 1869 in relation to the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Railroad Company as permits the holders of certain bonds to vote in the election of Directors. The common stock of the company varies in value from 17 to 19 cents; if the bill now pending should pass, the stock will reach par until enough to control the election has been secured by the Alexander Mitchell interest.

In 1869 a bill was passed by the Legislature providing for the election of one-third only of all the Directors of the Chicago, Milwaukee and St. Paul Company each year, and enfranchising some $6,000,000 of the bonds. Last year I gave to THE TIMES a history of the legislation and the efforts of the Mitchell interest to secure the repeal of so much of the law as provided for the annual election of only a part of the Directors, the object being to secure a majority of the voting bonds, re-elect the entire Board of Directors last June, and overthrow the Russell Sage interest. The Legislature of last year was composed of anti-railroad Grangers, and it was impossible for Mitchell to secure any favors. In this emergency he negotiated with Angus Smith, who for years had controlled the elevators of the company, but who had been dismissed by Mitchell. Smith was known as an enemy to Mitchell, and any bill he might favor would be regarded by the Grangers as anti-Mitchell. Smith was promised the elevators again provided he would lobby the bill through. He did so, and Mitchell secured control of the voting bonds, sold off all common stock, elected a full board of Mitchell directors, and overthrew Russell Sage. But Smith failed to secure his reward, Mitchell himself taking charge of the elevators, in which there is large profit.

To secure revenge as well as to realize on the sale of common stock, Angus Smith has joined with Russell Sage in an effort to put through the present bill to repeal the remainder of the law of 1869, which makes bondholders voters. This repeal would compel Mitchell to buy the common stock, which is largely in the hands of Sage and Smith, in order to keep control of the directory. The fight is very bitter, Sage and Smith having issued a hot circular, which has been as hotly replied to by Mitchell. The stockholders, in their circular, recite the history of the company, which has already been published in THE TIMES. They state that when the act of 1869 was passed the whole stock of the company was $22,000,000; the whole amount of bonds was $18,000,000, a majority of $4,000,000 in favor of the stock. Now the bonded debt is $30,000,000, all of which they declare is entitled to vote upon the same terms with the stock. The stock amounts to $27,000,000, leaving a majority of $3,000,000 in favor of the bonds. "The result is that the bondholders will forever be able to maintain the control of the company." They hold that the system of electing Directors by bondholders who are interested only in keeping up the security of their bonds and in receiving their interest promptly, and not at all in the ultimate value of the property, nor in the profits to be derived beyond the payment of interest, would, ordinarily, result in a substantial disregard of anything except earning such interest and making it certain that such interest would be paid in the future, and "what is known among the gentlemen engaged in the business of 'freezing out the stock;'" gradually, by one abuse and another, absorbing all the earnings of a road through construction companies, costly construction, fat ring contracts, &c., till finally the stockholder who has bought stock in a company which was then, and is still, earning dividends, surrenders at discretion. They show that the act of 1869, permitting additional bonds sufficient to constitute a majority over the stock to vote, has wrested the control of the property from the hands of its owners and placed it in the hands of creditors, notwithstanding the interest on the bonds has always been promptly met.

On the other hand, the bondholders state that by the original articles of association a certain proportion of bonds was permitted to vote. In 1867 the company bought the Prairie du Chien Railroad and the Western and Minnesota Central, "and being desirous to complete the unfinished portion of the line, determined to issue $4,000,000 in bonds that would vote." Again, in 1869, another line was purchased and $2,000,000 in bonds issued with the same provision; at various other times and for various purposes, other bonds with the same provision were issued. The bonds issued in 1868, however, were not allowed to vote. These amounted to $6,000,000, and the Legislature of 1869 passed the bill conferring the right to vote. In round numbers the voting basis is as follows:

Preferred stock	12,000,000
Bonds (without scrip)	6,000,000

The bondholders declare that the present holders of the stock purchased it with the knowledge that the bonds were enfranchised; that the present movement is solely for speculative purposes, and that the passage of the bill disfranchising the bonds would be an act of bad faith on the part of the State.

The bill is now in the hands of the Railroad Committee of the Senate, and a report will probably be made this week. Both parties are represented by strong lobbies, but the general impression is that the bill will not pass.

A TEXT-BOOK BILL.

The Eastern publishers of school-books will be interested in a bill now before the Legislature. It is framed on the supposition that uniformity in text-books throughout the entire State is advisable. It provides that the State shall contract with David Atwood, of Madison, Wis., for text-books for all the schools of the State for a period of 15 years—no other books than those published by David Atwood to be used during that time under penalty. The Superintendent of Public Instruction shall secure the materials for the books. The price to be paid to David Atwood shall be 50 per cent. less per page than is now charged for certain school books, 10 per cent. to be added to the price when a less number than 10,000 books are ordered at a single time. From a careful reading of the bill, I find that the practical result will be something like this: One of the standards selected is the National Reader, No. 1, which has 80 pages, and sells for 25 cents. The bill permits David Atwood to put 160 pages in his book and sell it for 25 cents, or for 10 per cent. more if less than 10,000 are ordered at one time. The book will cost the publisher $200 for the first thousand—composition, $84; paper, $20; electrotype plates, $50; end-paper and printing, $3 50; binding, $30, and press-work, $10. The first 1,000, then, would cost 20 cents per volume, and his profit would be but 5 cents per volume. But all the subsequent thousands, covering the period of 15 years, would cost him but 6 cents each, the only expense being paper, press-work, end-paper, and binding, and his profit would be 19 cents per volume. In the meantime the outcry against the high price of text-books will probably compel Eastern publishers to reduce the price of books to one-half, which would still allow them an enormous profit; but however great the reduction, if this bill becomes a law Wisconsin people will be compelled to pay the present price for 15 years. If labor should become cheaper or the cost of production decrease, the consumers in Wisconsin will not be relieved, but only the Wisconsin publisher.

Strange as it may seem, this bill is likely to pass, the contract ratified, and the State saddled with text-books by unknown authors selected by a person holding an elective office, and inflexible prices for 15 years. A majority of the printers and politicians at Madison, the capital, are interested in the bill, and an effort is being made to push it through hurriedly before it can attract the attention of educators. It is the first instance in which a bill compelling the State to close a contract with a specified person has ever been introduced in this State. It does not permit publishers to bid for a contract to supply the schools of the State with text-books; it distinctly declares that "David Atwood, of Madison, Wisconsin, is hereby appointed and designated the contractor hereinbefore named." It is not declared that the text-books shall be supplied at 50 per cent. less than the standards selected, but the pages of the books shall be the subject of the measurement. This is seen in the following paragraph:

"If the number of pages in any book ordered shall be the same as stated in said table for a like character of work, then the maximum contract price shall be the same per volume as stated opposite the work designated, and under the head of 50 per cent. off, subject to whatever excess may occur by fraction of one-tenth of a mill as aforesaid; but if the work ordered shall contain more or less pages than the corresponding work in the table, the price shall be fixed in proper ratio to the actual number of pages, whether more or less. On all works ordered in less numbers than 10,000 copies at one time, the contractor shall be entitled to 10 per cent. additional to the rates established herein."

VORLESUNGEN GEHALTEN AN DER KGL. UNIVERSITAT ZU BERLIN. Von HERMAN GRIMM. Berlin: WILHELM HERZ. 1877. Lectures at the Royal University of Berlin. 2 vols.

These two volumes of over 600 octavo pages give, in the form of 25 lectures, the latest thought of Germany upon the greatest of German poets, and the work has peculiar interest for American readers from the fact that the author wrote the popular Life of Michael Angelo, and married the daughter of the Bettina von Arnim whose name has been so peculiarly associated with Goethe's. Grimm himself is not an obscure person. The son of the distinguished philologist, Wilhelm Karl Grimm, and nephew of the more famous Jacob Ludwig Grimm, he was born at Cassel, Jan. 6, 1826. He has written various dramas, novels, and poems, and one of his recent books, Neue Essays, was devoted mainly to the writings of Emerson. Since 1849 he has lived at Berlin, and his Life of Goethe has peculiar interest from the fact that it is so enthusiastic an acceptance of the Weimar poet by the Prussian capital, and, apparently, a sign of truce in literature betwpep the belligerent chiefs of Northern and Southern Germany. Those who were present at the Humboldt Centennial in Berlin, in 1869, will not fail to note the change of tone there within so short a time, and the disposition now to claim Goethe's thunder for the imperial city and Kingdom, instead of trying to offset his ideal genius by Humboldt's realistic science. In some respects Grimm goes beyond all of Goethe's old admirers. He begins by saying that he has acted upon the intellectual life of Germany very much as a powerful natural phenomenon acts upon the physical world, when, for example, the old ice age passed away, and fair flowers and sweet fruits and frisky animal life took the place of the old glaciers and their reign of death. Goethe has, he maintains, raised the warmth of the intellectual atmosphere so many degrees on the average as to bring on another vegetation and to call for a new kind of culture, and to lay a new foundation of social life. He thinks that Goethe has made the literature, and even the language of Germany; and that when he began to write, the German literature was as limited in its range as the German national will was limited in its politics. German authors were noticed abroad mainly from their connection with foreign writers, and Frederick the Great, who did so much for Germany with his sword, was willing to use his pen as a Frenchman, and to pass in Paris as a French writer. Goethe himself once spoke of the feeling of the Romans as citizens of a world-wide kingdom, as if such a sentiment were out of the question with a German. Three poets only are to be compared with him, and Germany ranks him with Homer, Dante, and Shakespeare, as having given life and name to a nation in the realm of mind. Goethe is the true German, he thinks, and better helped the new nationality than if he had been more of a zealot ot reform. He foresaw the coming revolutions, and he prepared the people for a nationality greater than the Radicals conceived of, master-builder as he was of the new and imperial home of culture and life at the very time when the Radicals were bent mainly on breaking windows, and setting the old house on fire.

His career was remarkable alike in its vigor and its persistency. He kept at work till his death, and when the fire of his youth had gone he gave the years of his maturity to elaborating the ideas that had flashed out to him from that early fire. He seemed at one time, like Schiller, to have exhausted his strength, but he signally recovered himself. He labored in every sphere of study and science except one, that of pure mathematics. A statesman, historian, naturalist, as well as a poet, he was a man of all work; he was willing to do a good turn for everybody who asked help from him, and instead of being a dainty egotist, he is represented as the most kindly and considerate of men, ready to treat every one as if his neighbor's affairs were his own. This is somewhat a new view of the Weimar demi-god, but it is all the better for being new, if it is true, as Grimm declares it to be, and it makes the reader listen with the more grace to the paragraphs that close the elaborate introduction, and declare him to be immortal with Homer and Shakespeare, in an undying youth which he shares with the children of his fruitful brain.

Goethe's life is divided in these lectures into two unequal portions—the Frankfort time, 1749–1776, and the Weimar time, 1776–1832. In the Frankfort time fall the beginnings of almost all of his works of the first class, and his Werther, Goets, and Clavigo were then published. The Weimar time must be subdivided. The first 10 years of it extend from the twenty-sixth to the thirty-sixth year of his life. Goethe when he went to Weimar had given up the idea of being a poet above all things, and he wished to devote himself to the service of the Duke and the State. Only his leisure hours were given to poetical labor, and in this epoch the Iphigenia was got ready in its prose form, and Tasso, Egmont, Wilhelm Meister, and Faust, which were begun at Frankfort, were carried forward. In the two years of travel in Italy, 1786–7, which may be considered as the close of the first and the beginning of the second epoch, Tasso, Iphigenia, and Egmont took a new and finished form, while Wilhelm Meister and Faust were continued. Then he returned to Weimar and entered upon the last period of his life. Now followed one after another the Wilhelm Meister, Hermann and Dorothea, The Natural Daughter, The Life of Winckelmann, The Elective Affinities, Poetry and Truth, The Italian Journey, The West-Easterly Divan, and Faust. Faust, it was, that bound his whole literary life together. Goethe began it in his student years and kept at it as long as he lived, and left the conclusion in manuscript, to be printed after his death. The best treatment of the poet's career will be found to go with the above classification of his works, according to the three epochs of their appearance.

The material for the study of Goethe's life is enormous and presents itself in two masses—one from other persons, the other from his own pen. The amount that was written about him by correspondents, editors, essayists, travelers, critics, &c., is great, and constantly new contributions are made to the collections. The mass furnished by himself is not small in comparison, and it consists, first, of his works in their bearing upon the author's personal experience; secondly, his diaries and letters as documentary accounts of specific days and hours, and, in the third place, the especial biographical sketches which Goethe made in order to present his life as a complete whole. His Poetry and Truth is both a work of art and a narrative, but it deals mainly with his Frankfort life, and after he went to Weimar he writes of himself more as an annalist, except in so far as his poems and novels show the man. In this review, it is better to choose two or three of the prominent features of the book than to undertake to go over the whole ground of the 25 lectures, which follow the poet's career with great detail until the death of Schiller in 1805 in 22 lectures, and glance at the remaining 27 years of his life in the closing three lectures. Readers will probably most like to know how Goethe formed his great works, what his social life was, especially in relations with women, and what were his characteristic ideas of morality and religion.
